VOL 15, NO 45 PORT ANGELES, WASH., SATURDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1903. PRICE 5 CENTS

THE GRADE WARRANT ISSUE

Its Status and Courses Open as Advocated by the Two Sides

One of the most important matters of recent years is now before the city council, and we deem it our duty, in view of the stand taken by some of the members of the city council to give the status of the question at issue as clearly as is possible from the data to be had from the extremely muddled state of affairs.

In the early days of 1890, during the first town council, and in the enthusiasm of the time and belief of the future, the owners on Front and First streets and on the south side of Front street extension, agreed to grade the streets in front of their property, the cost to be assessed against the property.

In July, 1890, the contract for the work was let, and in payment therefor warrants were issued on the Front, First and Front street extension funds. On the 7th of August, 1890, an ordinance was passed creating assessment districts of said improved streets for the purpose of paying these warrants. This assessment for some reason was in 1893, declared by the superior court to be null and void, and a reassessment was made during that same year.

At the first jump off the city assumed one-half of the assessments on First street through its general fund. It also assumed about 25 per cent. of the assessments in the other districts, and in later years took up the entire bunch of warrants outstanding against Front street district by issuance of Indebtedness Fund warrants with the intention of re-imbursing the fund when the re-assessments were collected.

So at the present time there only remains actually in the hands of others than the city $4,000 face of First street warrants and $3,000 of extension warrants.

On Front street out of 202 original assessments, 95 were paid in full. 15 in part, and 92 not at all. On the extension all properties have paid except four and these are in the hands of administrators. On First street about 25 per cent. have paid in full.

There remains due on Front street about $7,500 with interest, on First street about $8,000 and interest, and on the extension about $1,800.

If all these are paid, the city at large through the warrants lastly taken up by its Indebtedness fund will still be out in addition to the per cent. originally assumed.

Some three years ago Mr. G. M. Lauridsen and others took the matter to the supreme court to determine whether the re-assessment was a valid lien against the property. All points to be thought of were presented. The court held that the property was not only liable for sums sufficient to pay outstanding warrants, but to pay those in hands of city.

The council, however, failed to take any action toward collection, and now the last minute of the last hour arrives.

The two courses now open and advocated by the opposing factions of the council are

1st. To protect or renew the city's lien against the property by beginning suit before January 1st. 1904 and later to get judgment. The city will then be in shape to arrange with the property holders for the payment of the judgment at once, or in one, two or five years as is deemed advisable, and the judgment will hold the property until satisfied. The warrants the city holds will thereby be paid in part by the property owners and not by the city at large.

2nd. To stop action and allow the lien rights to expire. This will free the delinquent property and the entire cost of grading the streets named, or rather that portion of the grading lying in front of the property that has not paid, will have to be paid by the city at large.

In either event somebody has got to pay and the question at issue is "who shall it be?"

It might be added that the warrants held by the city are in a terrible muddle. The courts have still to decide whether the interest on them were legally transferred to the city or whether the county has a lien on them as one of assets of the defunct First National Bank.

VERY QUIET ELECTION

Practically no Contest, But Socialists Poll Full Vote.

The city election Tuesday was extremely quiet and purely a formality after the decision of the Citizen's convention. The features of the returns is the smallness of the vote cast and the fact that the entire socialist vote was polled.

In the wards where the councilmen were to be re-elected there was little disposition to make a fight.

In the second Mr. Grubb was returned by a united party vote 55, to 7 for Mr. Franck.

Mr. Gutenberg, in the Fifth, was likewise returned, he receiving 28 votes and Mr. Lollick 6.

A few disgruntled in the Fourth voted against the Citizen's nominee with the result Mr. Scheuler got 18 votes to Mr. Hallahan's 46.

The following is the official returns as convassed by the city council:

ELKS' MEMORIAL

The Most Interesting and Impressive Services Held.

At the opera house Sunday one of the most interesting of the memorial services ever given by the order of Elks was held. The house was handsomely decorated and a most excellent and impressive program was given. The address of Col. Robt. Lindsay, of Seattle, was most favorably received, his eulogy of Elks and Elkdom and their love for departed brothers being the expression of most beautiful sentiments. "We are not here in mournful spirit" said he, "but in memoriam and in honor to our dead. The fact that they were Elks and lived up to the teachings of Elkdom guarantees to us that they were noble souls."

The hall was filled as usual on these occasions, and the guests of the order were certainly well paid for their presence.

COUNCIL IS DIVIDED

Some Want City Generally To Assume the Grade Assessment.

An interesting session of the city council was held Wednesday. Every member was in his seat and a lengthy discussion was had over a resolution presented by Mr. Grubb.

The city attorney reported to council that he had collected on account of the street assessment upwards of $500, and that a number of property owners have signified their intention of paying up and will do so before suits are entered to save costs; the city attorney has the complaints in the hands of the printer and the rolls in the hands of the abstractor and is proceeding as fast as possible.

The resolution was then introduced by Mr. Grubb and an extended discussion followed warming up as it progressed.

The resolution provides that whereas the city had taken up all grade warrants on Front street district (some $30,000); all on Front street extension district except $3,000 principal, (now double with interest), and all on First street except $4,000, or $8,000 with interest, ($20,000) leaving but the small amounts named out-standing, (the large amounts being held by the city in lieu of general fund warrants issued in their stead); that the enforcement of the unpaid assessment would cause great distress and result in the confiscation of property; that it is the sentiment of citizens that inasmuch as the city has heretofore taken up the great bulk of warrants outstanding, that it should take up balance, and make such arrangements with the holders "as will be satisfactory to them and for the

ONE LUNG

May be gone and yet the remaining lung will be amply sufficient to sustain a vigorous vitality. As a general thing few people make more use of both lungs than is equivalent to a healthy use of one lung.

These facts are all in the favor of the man or woman with weak lungs, even when disease has a strong grip on them.

Many a person living in health to-day has the lungs marked by the healed scars of disease.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery makes weak lungs strong. It cures obstinate, deep-seated coughs, bronchitis, bleeding lungs and other conditions, which, if neglected or unskilfully treated, find a fatal termination in consumption.

"I had been troubled with lung disease and pleurisy for a number of years and the trouble had almost become chronic," writes A. S. Elam, of Howe, Ia. "Had several kinds of medicine from different physicians without much benefit. At last wrote to Dr. R. V. Pierce and got his advice, and began using his 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I have used twenty-five bottles. When I commenced taking it I had no appetite, my system was completely run-down, had no ambition to do anything. Now I feel better than I did before I got sick. Have a good appetite and am able to do my work. I sincerely recommend Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery to all who are afflicted as I was."

Those who suffer from chronic diseases are invited to consult Dr. Pierce, by letter, free All correspondence strictly private. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

THE DAIRYMAN

Experiments at the Illinois station to compare the amount of dirt falling from washed and unwashed udders during the process of milking are reported as follows: It was determined after several trials with three different milkers on thirty cows that it requires an average of four and one-half minutes to milk a cow.

A glazed dish eleven inches in diameter, the size of an ordinary milk pail, was placed in the top of a pail and held under a cow's udder in the same position as when milking. For four and one-half minutes the milker then went through motions similar to those in milking, but without drawing any milk.

The amount of dirt which fell into the dish during the operation was of course approximately the same as would have gone into the milk during the milking process. The dirt caught in the dish was then brushed into a small glass weighing tube, the udder washed and the process repeated.

The dirt which fell from the washed udder was carefully brushed into a weighing tube. Both tubes were then placed in a desiccator and after drying twenty-four hours were accurately weighed on a chemical balance. Sixty trials were made at different seasons of the year.

With udders that were apparently clean it was found that an average of three and one-half times as much dirt fell from the unwashed udders as from the same udders after they were washed. With soiled udders the average was twenty-two and with muddy udders the average was ninety-four times as much dirt from the unwashed udders as from the same udders after washing.

Jersey With a Good Record.

This Jersey cow, whose picture is taken from Rural New Yorker, belongs to Ira B. Watson of Fredonia, N. Y. She has a record of twenty-four pounds of butter in seven days, fifty-four pounds of milk in one day and 10,900 pounds in eleven months. This cow has a tremendous udder—too large for her size, one would say at first glance.

To Improve Milk.

Suggestions are made for the improvement of the milk supply in a bulletin of the department of agriculture, including the following: The registration of all dairies; official indorsement of properly conducted dairies; inspection of all herds, barns, dairy buildings, etc., once a month; better lighting, ventilation, drainage and cleanliness of cow stables; whitewashing the interior of stables; eradication of tuberculosis from dairy herds; branding of condemned cows; cows not to be given swill feed, etc.; cows to be regularly cleaned; pasturage food for city cows; aeration of milk in pure air; prompt cooling of milk and holding it at a low temperature until final delivery; shipment of milk from farms promptly after milking; delivery of milk and cream in sealed packages. Like much other excellent advice, the great difficulty is to adapt the ideas to circumstances and to put them in operation, says American Cultivator. None of the hints are exactly new, and all are desirable aids to a high grade, wholesome product.

Cows That Calve In Winter.

Men who make a business of getting the greatest possible quantity of milk from their cows are usually the ones to have cows calve in the fall, says the Live Stock Reporter. A better price is obtained for milk in winter than in summer. The opportunity to properly feed and care for cows in a comfortable stable away from flies and other summer annoyances during the fresh milk flow is important. As the milk begins to fail the change from feed to pasture comes at the right time to do the most good.

Churning In Persia.

A method so primitive that it is almost unknown elsewhere is still used by the Persian nomads in churning their butter. In the shelter of the goatskin tent is swung a crude receptacle, also of goatskin, in which the milk is dumped. Then it is rocked gently by the hand until the separation of the fat from the milk is complete, when the resultant oily mass, unsalted, as is all oriental butter, is ready for the consumer.

FARM, FIELD AND GARDEN

A HORSE'S HOOF.

Its Structure and Points of Health or of Disease.

A healthy hoof in a horse is equally warm at all parts and is not tender under pressure with the hands or moderate compression with pinchers. The coronet is soft and elastic at all points and does not project beyond the surface of the wall. The wall is straight from coronet to ground, so that a straight edge laid against the wall from coronet to ground parallel to the direction of the horn tubes will touch at every point. The wall should be covered with the outer varnishlike layer (periople) and should show no cracks or clefts. Every hoof shows "ring formation," but the rings should not be strongly marked and should always run parallel to the coronary band.

Strongly marked ring formation over the entire wall is an evidence of a weak hoof, but when limited to a part of the wall is evidence of previous local inflammation. The bulbs of the heels should be full, rounded and of equal height. The sole should be well hollowed out, the white line solid, the frog well developed, the middle cleft of the frog broad and shallow, the spaces between the bars and the frog wide and shallow, the bars straight from the buttresses toward the point of the frog and the buttresses themselves so far apart as not to press against the branches of the frog. A hoof cannot be considered healthy if it presents reddish, discolored horn, cracks in the wall, white line, bars or frog, thrush of the frog, contraction or displacement of the heels. The lateral cartilages should yield readily to finger pressure.—Dr. John W. Adams.

Alfalfa and the Wet.

Alfalfa does not like wet feet, wet land or wet weather, especially when young. I have had it all colors. When mowing alfalfa the second spring, cutting with the mower every day what the stableful of steers would eat, I had it turn yellow as the mower cut around the piece. The alfalfa being young and the wet weather was the cause of it. If the alfalfa has been five years old it would not have turned yellow with the amount of rain that fell. Nodules on the roots or off the roots are not the cause of it turning yellow. Good ground, mechanical condition of the soil and good seed bed cut more of a figure than anything else. You will find there is nothing grows like alfalfa, and it is harder to get it started than red clover. A person could not get a stand by sowing in a wheat field. I would advise you to hold Turkestan alfalfa till next spring.—R. S. Seeds in National Stockman.

The Inevitable.

I like the man who faces what he must
With step triumphant and a heart of cheer,
Who fights the daily battle without fear,
Sees his hopes fail, yet keeps unfaltering trust
That God is God; that somehow true and just
His plans work out for mortals; not a tear
Is shed when fortune which the world holds dear
Falls from his grasp; better with love a crust
Than living in dishonor; envies not
Nor loses faith in man, but does his best,
Nor ever murmurs at his humbler lot,
But, with a smile and words of hope, gives zest
To every toiler. He alone is great
Who by a life heroic conquers fate.
—Sarah K. Bolton.

A Generous Impulse.

"Suppose you succeed in owning the earth," said the abrupt man, "what good will it do you?"

"Well," answered the trust promoter, "I'm naturally a man of hospitable instincts. There will be a kind of satisfaction in feeling that I am permitting other people to inhabit this globe."—Washington Star.

THE WILD WEST SAVAGE

[Original.]

When Major Henderson of the —th United States cavalry was a second lieutenant serving on what was then always referred to as "the plains" he one day came upon a party of Arapahoe Indians who were about to burn a young Ute at the stake. Indeed the flames were curling about the boy's legs, and he was beginning to feel the agony of burning. Henderson, who had sufficient troopers back of him to warrant interference, dashed in, kicked away the fagots, cut the thongs and set the boy free. Then he took the Indian to camp, where a surgeon dressed his wounds and after his recovery sent him to his tribe.

When Henderson left the army he gathered a number of Indian implements of various kinds, which he took with him to his home. There were blankets, feathers, moccasins, beads, pipes and a few weapons, such as were used before the red man got the rifle, including bows and arrows. These the major hung about the walls of his smoking room, a profusion of calumets being especially appropriate.

The curiosities were of especial interest to the major's little boy, Russell, who was never so contented as when his father told him stories about them—stories usually invented by the father, for he knew but few incidents connected with them. Nevertheless the yarns delighted the boy, who had all a boy's love for adventure, and when it was announced on the billboards that a wild west show was coming to town Russell Henderson was wild with expectation. His father promised to take him out to see the procession of cowboys, Indians and "plains" people generally enter the city and afterward to give him an opportunity to see the performance.

When the show made its formal entrance the major was standing on the sidewalk, his little boy holding his hand, the youngster's eyes big as saucers and watching eagerly for the Indians. At their passage there was an element of surprise which neither father nor son had counted upon. An Indian suddenly threw himself from his horse, made a dash for the major and, extending his hand, said excitedly:

"How?"

Henderson stood looking blankly at the brave, who explained in a few words that he was the Ute whom the major years before had snatched from the burning. The Indian was so demonstrative, so delighted at meeting the man to whom he owed his life, that the major invited him when not engaged in his duties to come to his house. The invitation was accepted, and the Ute, who was not in good health, remained after the show had departed. Little Russell was at first very much terrified at him, but when his fright wore off depended upon him for most of his amusement, the Indian telling him more wonderful stories about the decorations of the smoking room than the major had ever dreamed.

Russell became much attached to the Indian, and the Indian, who worshiped the major, seemed eager to give the little fellow all possible pleasure not only from gratitude to the father, but affection for the son. Time slipped by, and the Ute, who was suffering from malaria, remained at the home of his benefactor.

One evening Major Henderson came in before dinner and, going into the smoking room, found the Ute bending over Russell, who was standing near a table on which rested an arrow. Both the boy and the Indian were looking at the tip of one of Russell's fingers. On it was a red spot, about which the flesh was slightly swollen. A terrible anxiety was depicted on the Ute's features. As the major entered the Indian cast a glance at him, then at the arrow on the table, then back at the major.

"You saved me from a torture death. In return I have brought death on your idol. That arrow was poisoned; the child in handling it has pricked his finger. He will die."

This was what Major Henderson read in the Ute's face. Then suddenly, without a word, the Indian seized the boy's finger and, placing it between his lips, began to suck the wound, pulling so hard that the child cried out.

The poison was drawn from the wound and, entering the thin coating that lined the Ute's mouth, was quickly absorbed. A doctor was summoned and arrived in a few minutes. He administered a drug to the boy, then advanced to do the same to the Indian. His offer was refused. Indeed by this time, though Russell showed no signs of poisoning, the Ute was giving evidence that the deadly weapon of the savage had entered his system.

He began a low moaning which soon took the form of a chant in a tongue which no one present except the major understood, and even he only here and there caught a few words and expressions. The dying man recited the principal events of his life, dwelling upon his capture and intended burning by his enemies, the young "white brave's" sudden coming and the release. Then he sang of himself cared for when ill by the white brave, his affection for him and his son and the sin of having permitted the child to touch the poisoned arrow. At last the strain grew wild and triumphant as he described the sucking of the wound, the saving of the boy and his own coming death. Here was his satisfaction. He had created a new debt, but he had paid both. Then the song died away as his breath grew slower and longer and at last ceased. He was dead.

MAY ALICE BERESFORD.

AN EPISODE OF SUMMER BOARDING

[Original.]

The farmhouse was small, but it was wonderful how many summer boarders it was capable of storing away. Among others were a girl and her mother and the young man to whom the daughter was engaged. The lovers were supposed to have gone to the country for constant cooing, but somehow, so far as the other boarders were concerned, they saw very little of it. During the first few days they took walks together in the morning, but always came back looking bored. In the afternoon the girl went to sleep.

On one of these afternoons the lover sat on the porch with another girl.

"Did you ever walk down that lane?" she asked.

"No," he said. He had walked it every day with his fiancee since they had been at the farm.

"It's very pretty; shaded nearly all the way."

"Would you mind showing it to me?"

"What would she say if she saw us going out together?"

"She won't see; she's asleep."

They arose and went into the lane, she chatting glibly.

"Don't talk so loud," said the young man in a half whisper.

"Why not?" asked the girl without lowering her voice.

"It always makes her cross to be disturbed in her nap."

"Oh, I see. I'll speak lower." But by this time it made no difference, for they were out of hearing. The girl led the way to a rustic seat and sat down, the man placing himself beside her.

"I come here every evening to see the sunset," she said. "Isn't the view a pretty one?"

"Very."

"Tell me about your ladylove. Are you desperately wrapped up in each other?"

"You must judge for yourself. You have seen us together a great deal."

She was sitting with her face, he with his back, toward the house. Her eye had caught something. He turned to look, but saw nothing unusual.

"Let's go on to the brook," she said.

He assented, and they walked on. Before they came to the brook the girl led the way from the lane to a meadow. When they reached the bank she said:

"How provoking! We can't get across, and there's a much prettier view from over there than from anywhere hereabout."

"There's a bridge below."

"It's too far."

"You can step across on those stones."

"I'd fall in."

"I can carry you."

"Dear me, no! What would she say?"

"If that's your only objection, since she's not here to see, I'll undertake it." And, picking her up, he carried her across.

They went to the spot where the view was fine and looked at it so long that they came in late for supper. His fiancee did not notice them, but sat munching her food moodily. After supper she and her lover walked in the lane. The days were long, and there was plenty of light.

"I am fortunate," she said, "in so early discovering your flippant character."

"If my character is flippant you certainly are fortunate in finding it out."

"A man who is caught by every pretty face during his engagement is not likely to make a very constant husband."

"I presume you refer to my walk this afternoon. If you go to sleep and leave me to myself"—

"I was not asleep when you went away. I heard her boisterous talk and you trying to keep her quiet that you might get away with her unobserved. I followed you"—

"Eavesdropped?"

"Call it what you like. I saw you carry her over the brook."

"Well?"

"Well, you are free to carry her through life for me."

He accepted his fate with resignation, and they walked back to the house, the girl going up to her room. He sat on the porch for awhile, then strolled back into the lane. Again he was followed, this time by the other girl.

"Has she dismissed you?" she asked.

"Yes."

"It didn't take much of a cause to make her do it."

"I suppose the cause was sufficient."

"Who's her correspondent in the city?"

"I didn't know she had any?"

"I was at the post office the other day when the mail came in. She seized upon a letter addressed in a man's hand."

"You don't mean it?"

"I saw her following us while we sat on the rustic seat."

"Why didn't you tell me?"

"Oh, I thought she wanted an excuse to break her engagement with you, and—men are so stupid—I thought you might"—

"Give her a chance. And you permitted me to carry you across the brook knowing she was looking on."

"I told you she mightn't like it."

They went on and sat on the rustic seat.

"What did you do it for?" he asked.

She looked down and smoothed her dress; then she looked out at the view, then down again and smoothed her dress.

"Come, tell me your object"—

"You're too good for her, and she didn't want you anyway."

"Am I too good for you?"

"That's for you to decide."

He was bending close over her. He kissed her.

Silage In Beef Making.

Professor Mumford has found that for beef making silage is ahead of shock corn in some respects and behind it in others. Silage made the most beef (7,895 pounds against 7,665 pounds), while the corn made the most pork on hogs following (1,620 pounds against 1,015 pounds). The silage from a given area went further than the shock corn in feeding. The cattle all brought the same price, but the silage steers had a slight advantage in the killing, showing the greater percentage of dressed meat, but this is not significant. About the only thing the silage experiment has settled is that further tests are necessary.—National Stockman.

When the Home Market Is Best.

It is the most natural thing in the world to consign to a city market that which does not have a ready sale at home. Four times out of five such a shipment is unwise. As a rule the goods will find a buyer at home, and that which is neglected cannot command a good price when sent into a city market to compete with the best the world produces. There is always a demand for the best, and it will sell at a fair price when second rate stuff will not move. It is better to sacrifice a second grade at home than to let freight and commission charges be placed upon it.—Home and Farm.

Poultry That Sells.

If people would always learn to use neat, clean packages, neat, clean, white or waxed paper to wrap the poultry up in, shape the head, wings and feet all in the same manner and have their poultry marked in a clean, attractive, presentable condition there would be less opportunity for finding fault with the commission man, and they would realize more profit.—Country Gentleman.

CAUCA need not think that because Panama was so quickly recognized that she will be if she throws off the yoke of Colombia. She has no canal pull.

THE millmen of Grays harbor met last week and decided to close unless employes would agree to accept twenty per cent reduction in wages until lumber market is better.

THE San Domingo provisional government, too, asks for recognition, but is turned down, It's a shame to build up the hopes of these 'adventurers only to blast them."

THE Colombian province of Antioquia also seeks independence, encouraged, no doubt, by the success of Panama. But what an awakening is in store for her should she depend on U. S. recognition.

FROM Cleveland's letter to the Brooklyn Eagle reciting his determination not to accept the nomination for the presidency, it is evident the old gentleman considered the subject more seriously than anyone else.

THE Brooklyn Eagle, which has so persistently advocated the nomination of Grover Cleveland by the Democrats, now declares it will support Judge Parker with the same zeal. Parker now may as well give up.

A PROTEST comes from a Canterbury girl that she cannot now dress on $500. a year, whereas five years ago she could get along nicely on a little over half that amount. She is no more extravagant, she says; the difference lies in the increased price.

THE effect of the supreme court's Ruling this week is to bring the Chinese exclusion act into court for scrutiny as to its scope, which, in view of the clause which re-enacts the old laws only "so far as the same are not inconsistent with treaty obligations" may be curtailed so as to render the act valueless.

Ben-Hur to be Staged in Seattle.

After four years of patient waiting the State of Washington at last is to have a "Ben Hur" season. The announcement is made that Klaw & Erlanger's original massive and magnificent production of Gen. Lew Wallaces "Ben Hur" will be staged at the Grand Opera House, for the entire week of Dec. 7 to 12 with matinees on Wednesday and Saturday. This spectacle has scored the biggest kind of a triumph both in this country and Europe It has completely eclipsed the record of all stage offerings, and is acknowledged to be the grandest, most impressive, instructive and stupendous indoor entertainment ever offered the public.

Seattle and Spokane are the only cities in the state that "Ben Hur" will be presented in. The company numbers over 350 persons. Ten 60 feet baggage cars are required to transport the scenic effects while two stock cars are pressed into service to care for the horses and camels used in the production. In the great chariot race scene alone eight horses, harnessed to two chariots, are shown in their struggle for supremacy.

The entire stage of the Grand Opera House is to be reconstructed for the handling of this collossal production. A force of carpenters are now busy putting in a new stage with a sub stage for the mechanical effects of the charit race scene and the moving panorama showing the excited spectators in the Roman hippodrome.

During the run of Ben-Hur in Seattle all the railroad and steamboat lines entering the city will make special excursion rates for all persons desiring to take in this great dramatic spectacle.

THE WEEK IN SOCIETY

One of the enjoyable social events of the week was the meeting of the Ladies' Book Club, Monday afternoon, at the pretty home of Mrs. Wm. K. Clark. Among other things it was decided that the club's annual banquet to the 'silent' members of the club would be given on Friday, January 8th., at the same place. An elaborate program is promised. Mesdames Hatch, Johnson, Ware, J. O. Morse, S. J. Lutz and Miss Crocks were named on entertainment committee, while the other members, Mesdames Appleton, Clark, H. E. Lutz, White, Fitz-Henry and Cosser, were placed on the refreshment committee. The club also elected officers for the coming year. Mrs. W. J. Ware, president; Mrs. H. E. Lutz vice-president; Mrs. Geo. C. Hatch, recording secretary; Miss Lulu Crooks, corresponding secretary.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace White entertained the Diamond whist club Wednesday night at their home on First street. An interesting session was held and most delicious refreshments served. After luncheon Mr. Johnson and Dr. Appleton entertained the club with comic songs until adjournment. Guests of the club present were Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Smith, Mr. E. W. Merrill.

Probably one of the most elaborate events of its kind ever held in the city is THE FAIR given by the ladies of the Civic club and the Maccabees, now in progress at the opera house. The hall is handsomely fitted for the occasion and skillfully fitted with booths to catch the eye and incidentally the pocketbook. There are enough auxilliary attractions to supply a mammoth circus and great crowds are attending. Some very pretty home made and other things are being offered for sale with good results. There are raffles on everything; side show attractions and pretty things everywhere. Thursday evening a vaudeville entertainment of considerable merit was given under the direction of Mrs. Brophy which received many complimentary remarks. Last evening a very pretty cantata was given by a large number of the young girls of the city. Mrs. Geo. Wiggins had charge of this performance and its unqualified success speaks volumes for her ability in this line. Tonight Mrs. Brophy promises to eclipse all previous efforts in the production of living pictures. Elaborate preparations have been made for this entertainment and some very pretty productions are promised. During the afternoons and early evenings the sales continue, admission is free; 10c is charged for the evening entertainment.

"I lost courage and thought I would never regain my health."

"Three years of delicate health trying doctors' prescriptions and patent medicines" without benefit might well sap the courage of any woman. And yet Mrs. Bryant proved that the question of the cure of womanly disease is only a question of using the right remedy. A few doses of 'Favorite Prescription' restored her courage and revived her hope, because she could see "a decided change from the first." Three months' use of the medicine restored her to perfect health.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures irregularity, dries weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration, and cures female weakness.

Mrs. Sarah Bryant, President of Memphis Social Science Club, residing at 271 Atkinson Ave., Memphis, Tenn., writes: "I suffered with delicate health for three years, trying doctors' prescriptions and patent medicines until I lost courage and thought I would never regain my health; but a few doses of your 'Favorite Prescription' made me change my mind. Could see a decided change from the first, so I kept on taking it for three months faithfully and am now in perfect health."

Through the Orchard Gate

By HARRIET WHITNEY

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

"Kree-e-ee," went the frogs down in the marshy corner of Miss Bennett's meadow where the cattails grew.

The high buttoned crown of Miss Bennett's white sunbonnet had but now been pink with the bloom of sunset. It was pushed back off the young lady's head and hung around her neck by two ruffled strings.

"I hate the country after sunset," complained Miss Bennett's visiting sister, standing forlornly on the back porch. Violet twilights shot with gold and faint pink afterglows were dust and ashes and the far twilight voices from marsh and thicket were desolation to Mrs. Belinda Bonsel. "These old frogs drive me frantic."

Marjorie seated herself upon the shallow lower step, untying her bonnet and gathering it up closely in her supple hands. There were two indistinct horizontal lines in her forehead.

"I always love the frogs," she said, turning her face toward the meadow "only—they remind me of the evening I nailed up the orchard gate—years ago."

"And I wish you'd unnail it." Belinda's nimble mind frisked into another grievance. "Ed 'll be up from the city tomorrow evening again, and he always cuts through the orchard. Last time he tore an acre of lining out of his coat climbing over the fence, and I had it to darn. Whatever did you nail it up for?"

"Kree-e-ee," echoed faintly. The silver gray had almost overcome the rose lights. A slim little curve of moon lay against the dim gold of the west. Marjorie was fluting the cape of her bonnet over her fingers.

"I nailed it up so that Ben Harper couldn't come through it any more."

"You always were a queer little trick," commented Belinda, "and never knew beans so far as men were concerned. But I forgot you and Ben fell out. What was it—jealousy, misunderstandings or meddling friends?"

"Clotheslines," said Marjorie.

Belinda's laugh broke into the tremolo of the frog chorus.

"Whatever! You can do a good many curious things, Marge, but how did you manage to get your romance tied up with a clothesline?"

"Becky Bean always would fasten the line to the plum trees this side of the orchard and forget to take it down. Ben invariably came through the orchard gate at twilight and the line never failed to knock his hat off. Men are singular about their hats. He and I were combative, anyway, in those days. One particular evening, like this, and the frogs piping just that way, we were unusually predisposed to battle. We had been to a picnic. Both our noses were peeling with sunburn and our shoes were tight. The sunburn was a just retribution to him, for he had sat for an hour on a tumble down stile in a snarl of blackberry bushes with Sadie Plummer beside him, and then flung thunderbolts of wrath about because I gave Joe Lawton most of the jelly cake out of the lunch basket. But he came over as usual in the evening, and as usual Becky had left the clothesline in the trees, and it happened to sag a little and caught Ben right across his poor sunburned nose where it was tenderest. The war broke out then. Among other things he said if I wanted him to come I would at least see that he could get in without maiming himself. I said he could come the front way as a well regulated person would or not come at all. He said it would be not at all, then—and after the frog I nailed up the gate."

LIKE TWO HEEDLESS CHILDREN THEY SPED, LAUGHING.

"And so nailed out the only man you ever knew that was worth a yard of calico," was Mrs. Belinda's consolation. "You might as well unnail it now and let it be of some use, as long as the whole business is ancient history and Ben vanished away into airy nothing. He won't bother you any more. While you are mooning among dismal memories and frogs, intrenched behind your nailed up gate, he is living comfortably somewhere with a fat little wife and probably seven children. No doubt one of them, a little freckled one who meddles, is named Marjorie."

It was dark now and Marjorie's cheeks could burn unseen.

"Kree-e-ee," croaked the frogs derisively.

Before the mists were out of the hollow lands the next morning Marjorie Bennett, with a claw hammer, was drawing the bent and rusted nails from the old orchard gate.

"Belinda told the truth," she admitted in the inner circle of her heart. "I nailed my own happiness out when I drove in these nails. However, the crooked little nails of miserable pride and temper (I called the mixture 'independence' then) I drove every day would inevitably have had the same effect in time. And not a nail here is an atom more rusted than my hopes if his ever coming back. But the old gate may as well be of some use to others. Belinda knows a few things, and I dare say it's true, all she said."

The hammer fell into a big bunch of spiderwort on the outside of the gate, and Marjorie rested her elbows on the top rail of the fence. The clover lay in deep billows, crested with the silver of the dew. The ruffle on her pink gingham gown was limp and wet. The early sun looked at her through a soft, long vista of orchard, out of amethystine vapors. Robin songs bubbled and splashed all about.

The gate swung wide open on a loose hinge that creaked a note of relief.

"I must have Hiram Bean fix it," Marjorie decided practically, coming out of her retrospect and passing through the gate in quest of the hammer.

A man had come trampling along the orchard, leaving a wake of crushed wet clover behind him.

"You've broken the latch," he said, with a laugh that swept Marjorie into old paths and byways, while he spread a broad, brown palm for her hand. "Just the way you broke the latch off my poor heart long ago, so I could never keep you out of it any more."

"I could nail it together again," she said sedately, with eyes that sparkled under their lashes.

"No; you couldn't drive the nails straight. Look at those wretched little twisted things. Mayn't I come through the old gate now, Margie? Only if I do you can't bar me out any more."

"I will never try," she answered, with dimples of happy laughter that were swiftly washed out by a recollection.

"Wait, Ben; I'm afraid—at least, Belinda said"—

"What did Belinda say?"

"That you must have married some one long ago."

"Oh, Belinda! It was Belinda's dear delight when we were all less than ten to create strife by getting me suspected by you of a deeply rooted resolve to marry Peggy Dodson when we grew up. She has come just about as near the mark now. No, Margie, Mrs. Ben's name is to be Marjorie or nothing. Providence has let me come back at just the right time. Let's take hold of hands and race through that gate the way we did when we were little—come." He caught Marjorie's hand. "Now—one for the money and two for the show, three to make ready and four—to—go."

Like two heedless children they sped, laughing, with linked hands through the old orchard gate, straight into an enchanted country.

A Just Judge.

Theophilus Harrington, a Vermont judge in the early part of the last century, was a man who loved the right and cared little for mere legal quibbling. "If justice controls your verdict," he would often say to the jury, "you will not miss the general principles of the law."

At one trial when the possession of a farm was in question the defendant offered a deed of the premises, to which the plaintiff's lawyer, Daniel Chipman, objected because it had no seal.

"But your client sold the land, was paid for it and signed the deed, did he not?" asked the judge.

"That makes no difference," said Chipman. "The deed has no seal and cannot be admitted in evidence."

"Is anything else the matter with the deed?" asked the judge.

"I don't know that there is."

"Mr. Clerk," said the judge, "give me a wafer and a three cornered piece of paper."

The clerk obeyed, and the judge deliberately made and affixed the seal.

"There, Brother Chipman," said he, "the deed is all right now. It may be put in evidence. A man is not going to be cheated out of his farm in this court when there is a whole box of wafers on the clerk's desk."

"The court will give me an exception?" pleaded the counsel.

"The court will do no such thing," answered the judge, and he kept his word.

Can Stand It.

"Commercially, we are taking money from you right along," asserted the American.

"Well, as long as you use it to buy titles we don't mind," returned the Englishman.—Chicago Post.

Your Heart

May Be Weak. One Person in Four Has a Weak Heart.

One of the surest signs of a weak heart is shortness of breath after exercise.

Your heart is not able to pump the blood fast enough to your lungs.

Some of the other symptoms of Heart Trouble are: Pains in the Side, Back and Shoulder; Fainting or Weak Spells; Dry Cough; Swelling of Feet and Ankles; Cold Feet or Hands.

No one can afford to allow a weak heart to go without medicine, because weak heart means poor circulation, and poor circulation means weak lungs, stomach, liver, kidneys, etc.

If, therefore, you suspect heart trouble, begin taking Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure. The Heart Cure will do you good, as it is a splendid tonic for the blood and nerves, and will revitalize your entire system.

Finally, remember, Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is sold under a guarantee that the first bottle will do you good.

If it doesn't—your money back.

"I was afflicted with heart trouble for three years. I would be apparently all right, and without a moment's warning would fall as though shot. The attacks were frequent, and a terrible dread possessed me, as I never knew when or where, nor under what conditions I would be attacked, and whether I would survive them. I consulted and was treated by some of the most eminent physicians of the state. Not finding relief from this source, I began taking Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and began to improve at once. I used ten bottles, which entirely cured me, as I have not had an attack for five years."—MRS. JOHN DRESBACK, Lessier O.

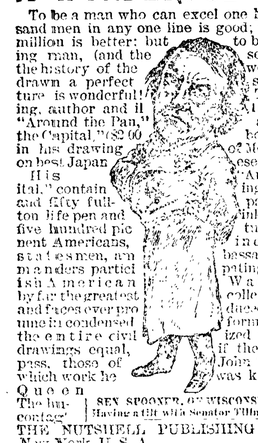
A WONDERFUL WORK.



To be a man who can excel one hundred thousand men in any one line is good; to be one in a million is better; but to be the only living man, (and the second one in the history of the world), who has drawn a perfect single line picture is wonderful! This Mr. Fleming, author and illustrator of "Around the Pan," and "Around the Capital," ($2.00 books) has done in his drawing of McKinley. Price on best Japanese paper, $1.00.

His "Around the Capital," containing fifty full-page one hundred pictures. Washington life pen and ink sketches and five hundred picturs of prominent Americans, including the statesmen, ambassadors and commanders participating in the Spanish American War—comprising by far the greatest collection of facts and faces ever produced in one volume in condensed form, will interest the entire civilized world. The drawings equal, if they do not surpass, those of John Temiel's, for which work he was knighted by Queen Victoria.

A COLLEGE CHIT

[Original.]

"Doctor, I'm used up. Have palpitation of the heart, no appetite, bad digestion"—

"In short, you are a healthy man who has been running in one groove so long that the mind is tired, and works on the body. Go into the country, where you will see no rows of brick houses, no people on business, no gay society. These you are used to; seek the reverse."

The season of strangers in the country had passed and Pendleton found no difficulty in finding a farmhouse where he was the only boarder. For a few days he took great pleasure strolling about alone through the woods, over the meadows, by the streams, breathing the fresh country air. Starting out on one of his walks he met a young girl whose condition of life he could not quite make out. If she did not appear to be city bred she was certainly different from the ordinary farmer's daughter. Returning he met the same girl. She had evidently been to the post office, for she was reading a letter. Pendleton looked at his watch.

Why he did so should need no explanation to one who has ever been similarly situated. If his reasoning were analyzed it would be thus: "She goes for the mail at this hour. What hour is it? Four o'clock. Tomorrow at 4 o'clock I will pass over the same ground."

And he did. Before setting out he had framed a question to put to the girl, and when he met her, raising his hat, he asked deferentially:

"I beg your pardon, but can you direct me to the post office?"

"Certainly. It is half a mile down this road."

"And the mail—the eastern mail—it comes in"—

"At 4:15."

"Ah, thank you very much." And, pulling out his watch, he took a glance at its face. "It's just 4," he added.

"I'm going to the post office. I'll show you where it is. You have to turn into a bypath just before reaching it and might not find it."

"How kind of you, and how fortunate that I met you!"

Three weeks later Pendleton and the girl were sitting on a log beside a stream. They had sat on the same log nearly every day about 4 o'clock in the afternoon since he had come to the place, and their letters had remained in the post office till the next morning. Pendleton heaved a deep sigh.

"What is it?" she said.

"My stay here ends tomorrow. I came for a change, a two weeks' rest, and I have taken an extra week." He sighed again.

Now, there are different kinds of sighs—at any rate sighs that express different things. Pendleton's sighs appeared to indicate his unwillingness to leave his companion. Really they were sighs of repentance. He was burdened with the thought that he had yielded to temptation and had won a heart that it would never do for him to possess. He cast a side glance at the girl. She was stirring up the dead leaves with the end of her parasol.

"I suppose we must say goodby here," he said. "My train goes in the morning, and since you have never permitted me to call upon you (for the want of an introduction) I can't go to your house this evening.

They were not to part immediately, for they had just met, but Pendleton put his arm around her waist and seemed inclined to begin the adieus. She drew away.

Pendleton did not ask her why she refused the kiss she had so often granted. Useless question. Had he not made love to her and had she not a right to expect that he would make good his advances and ask her to be his wife? He felt like a whipped cur.

"I've something to say to you before you go," said the girl. "I hope you will not be angry with me. You have certainly been very sweet to me, and I shall never forgive myself if you blame me. Of course that first kiss was not my fault; it was yours, but it was no excuse for my letting you kiss me again."

"Yes," said Pendleton gloomily, "the first was my fault, but the first step is always the fatal step. Besides, there is no fault in you in the matter, for you had a right to what my heart prompted me to say and what"—

She stopped him with a gesture. "Say no more," she said, "or you will be adding to my sin. I cannot let you go on or go away in ignorance of—Well, to confess, the afternoon you first met me I was going for a letter from"— She paused, then blurted, "my lover."

"Your lover!"

"Yes. Think of me as you will. Despise me. I have a lover, and till you came I never missed going for his letter as soon as it arrived. Since then—well, I've sent a boy for it and got it on my return from my walks with you. Don't be angry with me. I know I have done wrong, but you must remember I'm only a girl, a mere college chit. And now I'll explain further that I go back to college tomorrow. I've been rusticating here, having to pass a condition. But next June I'll be through with the horrid studies, and Frank and I are to be married the day after 'commencement.' You'll come to our wedding, won't you?"

Her conscience was sufficiently seared for one parting kiss and they separated. Pendleton heaved a sigh, but whether of relief or regret he could scarcely himself tell.

"A mere college chit," he repeated to himself, "and I—I supposed I was a man of the world. Well, she has cleared my conscience, and as for her own—after all, as she says, she's only a girl."

Saved His Life.

J. W. Davenport, Wingo, Ky., writes, June 14, 1902: "I want to tell you I believe Ballard's Snow Linimem saved my life. I was under the treatment of two doctors, and they told me one of my lungs was entirely gone, and the other badly affected. I also had a lump in my side. I don't think that I could have lived over two moths longer. I was induced by a friend to try Ballard's Snow Liniment. The first application gave me great relief; two fifty cent bottles cured me sound and well. It is a wonderful medicine and I recommend it to suffering humanity." 25c, 50c, $1.00. C. E. Nailor & Co.

Probate Notice.

In the Superior court of the State of Washington, for Clallam county.

In the matter of the estate of John Thomas, deceased.

Notice is hereby given that letters of administration on the estate of John Thomas deceased, were granted to the undersigned, on the 7th day of Nov. 1903, by the superior court of Clallam county. All persons having claims against said estate are required to exhibit them to me for allowance, at the office of A. A. Richardson, Port Angeles, Washington, within twelve months after the date of this notice, or they shall be forever barred.

Dated this 13th day of November, 1903.

ANNIE THOMAS, Administratrix.

A. A. Richardson, Attorney.

Try for Health

222 South Peoria St.,
CHICAGO, ILL., Oct. 7, 1902.

Eight months ago I was so ill that I was compelled to lie or sit down nearly all the time. My stomach was so weak and upset that I could keep nothing on it and I vomited frequently. I could not urinate without great pain and I coughed so much that my throat and lungs were raw and sore. The doctors pronounced it Bright's disease and others said it was consumption. It mattered little to me what they called it and I had no desire to live. A sister visited me from St. Louis and asked me if I had ever tried Wine of Cardui. I told her I had not and she bought a bottle. I believe that it saved my life. I believe many women could save much suffering if they but knew of its value.

Georgia Dunbar

Don't you want freedom from pain? Take Wine of Cardui and make one supreme effort to be well. You do not need to be a weak, helpless sufferer. You can have a woman's health and do a woman's work in life. Why not secure a bottle of Wine of Cardui from your druggist today?

WINE OF CARDUI

Notice to Delinquent Co-Owners

To Ben. Johnson, William Banks, their heirs and assigns.

You are hereby notified that during the years 1899, 1900, 1901, 1902, the undersigned have expended more than $100, for each year above named, less $10.00 paid in the year 1898, by the said Ben. Johnson, and less than the sum of $45.00, paid in 1899 by the said William Banks, in labor and improvements upon the "Iron King Mining Lode," situated in Clallam County, and State of Wasmington, on the West End of Hurricane Mountain, in which mining location you, each, respectively claim an undivided one-fourth interest, as shown by the notice thereof of record, on page 170, vol. 3, of Mining Records, in the office of the the Auditor for the County of Clallam and State of Washington.

The said labor was performed as and for the annual representation of said claim for the said years of 1898, 1899, 1900, 1901, and 1902, as required by the provisions of Section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the amendment thereto approved January 22nd., 1880, concerning annual labor upon mining claims, and the same was the amount required to hold said claim for each of said years. You are further notified that unless within ninety days after the personal service of this notice upon you, or within ninety days after the publication thereof, you contribute, each, your portion of such expenditure as a co-owner, to-wit: The sum of $115.00 due by the said Ben. Johnson; and the sum of $80.00 due by the said William Banks, your respective interests in the claim will be forfeited to the undersigned co-owners who have made such expenditure, and will become their property in the manner provided by law.

Dated September 28, 1903.

New Type And Machinery.

THE DEMOCRAT LEADER is now better than ever prepared to do fine job printing; in fact it is the only office in the city that has a large press for large work and small presses for small jobs.

We recently purchased the handsome Courier press—the best in the city—and have received direct from the manufacturers in the East some handsome new type of mammoth size together with borders, rules, etc., and a handsome new furniture rack. We now have everything to do first-class work, and if we cannot now do satisfactory job work of any description it cannot be done in town, or this side of Seattle. Our prices are right, too, as you will find them.

Receiver Qualifies.

Receiver C. J. Farmer of the Smith-Mastick Construction Company, appointed last Saturday, qualified Wednesday and is now in charge at the offices of the company.

When seen Thursday Mr. Farmer stated that of course he could not, as yet, give out any statement as to the condition of the company or what he could do in the premises. There are two courses, of course, open to him; that of closing up the affairs of the company as promptly as possible, giving to the creditors the best possible settlement, and the running of the concern on business lines whereby the work will promptly go forward to completion.

For a certainty it is the desire of all that the affairs should be straightened out in the interest of all parties as speedily as possible and if it is found that the work cannot be done by the receiver satisfactorily and profitably, the sooner the first named action takes place the better for all parties concerned and the city in general.

DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable.

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of the wonderful cures made by Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of scientific research by Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is wonderfully successful in promptly curing lame back, kidney, bladder, uric acid troubles and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you have kidney, liver or bladder trouble it will be found just the remedy you need. It has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of this paper who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The regular fifty cent and dollar sizes are sold by all good druggists.
