A Pretty Operetta

A Very Meritorious Production by Local Talent—Mrs. Carusi a Dignified Queen

Seldom have we witnessed such a unique and beautiful a performance as greeted us at the Opera House last Tuesday evening. Mrs. MacL. Richards had spent much time and patience in coaching all the actors and she was amply repaid by the work done by all engaged. The heroine, "Snow White"—Mrs. Mead—acquitted herself wonderfully well in her solos, part, songs and acting, and she was well supported by the dignified Queen. The gentlemen soloists, Messrs. Bown and Richie, gave much pleasure to all present, rendering their parts most satisfactorily. With respect to the numerous younger ones in the operetta it would be inviduous to make a selection when all did so prettily and so well. A word must be said of the "Seven Dwarfs," seven of our well known Port Angeles boys, who certainly added very materially to the complete rendering of the play. Their get-up, as with others, was certainly most conspicuous, and their activity, acting and singing beyond all praise. It was thought and expressed that seven uglier little dwarfs never appeared on any stage. One word more for the extras: The two Misses Richards gave much pleasure in their duett; while the "Three Jolly Sailor Boys and Girls" brought down the house indeed with their dancing of the Sailors' Hornpipe, and the pretty song they sang so well. Altogether we question whether a more delightful performance has been given in Angeles the whole year. A goodly company patronized the affair.

Silk Tie from Bellingham Loom

The editor is in receipt of a beautiful red tie from Lieut. George W. Mock, of Bellingham, as an 'Xmas gift. Of this tie the gentleman says, "It was made in Bellingham, in our own silk factory. I stood by the loom and watched it, together with five others of the same pattern but of different colors, while in process of completion. I also stood by while these six ties were cut apart and when the one sent you was separated from the others-

This silk factory is only operating two looms at present, but if all goes well we will have a factory in another year operating 100 looms employing 150 operators."

The tie is one of the finest seen in these parts and of an entirely new pattern, four-in-hand,

Vapor Gas Ignites at the Times Clothing Mart and Building is Saved Only by Quick Work

One of the happenings of Christmas Eve not generally known was a late blaze in the store of the Times Clothing Mart. After business had been closed for the time through the temporary shutting off of the electric lights, Mr. Muskett, the manager, was called upon to serve a belated customer. The lights being out and Mr. Muskett struck a match to find the article wanted when quick as a wink the whole room seemingly ignited and serious disaster appeared imminent.

Through the quick work, however, of Capt. Jas. Smith, T. R. Buck and Andy Pinyerd and son, the blaze was put out without serious damage to the contents of the store as a whole, but not before a large amount of goods had been scorched.

Those on the scene were too busy in extinguishing the blaze, hence no alarm was sent in.

The cause of the fire was undoubtedly the accumulation of gasoline vapor from a lamp not properly turned off, the lighted match furnishing the spark necessary to consume it.

It was a narrow escape.

Christmas Greeting to Nels Tanggard From Commissioner Christopher.

Port Angeles, Wash., Dec. 25, 1904.

Nels H. Tanggard, Esq., Shuwah, Wash. My Dear Sir:—Your undated letter addressed to me through THE DEMOCRAT-LEADER at hand, and through courtesy of the editor I make reply. Your primary attack seems to be the road supervisor, and secondary myself.

Had your attack been upon myself alone I would have considered it of so little importance as to take no notice of it, as you have continually harrassed me during my term of office with all manner of imaginary grievances.

As to Mr. Smith being in Angeles fishing for a re-appointment recently, will say that I saw him for a short time, but no mention was made by him of a re-appointment. What his business was here I know not, neither do I care.

As to the blacklist you croak so much about, you know to be a plain, simple, unvarnished lie, and I never heard any one imparting that information but yourself, hence my opinion of the originator.

As to me writing Smith to discharge any person or dictating whom he should employ is absolutely without any foundation and should be placed on an equal footing with the blacklist above mentioned.

As to Mr. Smith stealing from the men and the county, I know nothing about it, as I have never had or heard any reports of the kind before. If you have been robbed by the road supervisor, why didn't you report the matter to the board? Why sneak around like a cur and blame me with it?

It is true there are plenty of mud holes in the original road district No. 26 (your district). That original district 26 has less roads and a better show to make a good road than any other original district in the present road district No. 4. Yet you people turned that district into No. 4 with a debt of about $1000. What did you do for the money?

As to the promise of the $300 worth of work, I feel certain you refer to the postmaster at Tyee, as he is one of your neighbors whom you have attempted to force to dance to your whims, but he didn't dance. If Smith has made this promise I commend it, as with such people working on the county road you will soon have those mud holes converted into a good turnpike road.

You wail about the poor taxpayer. What is that to you? You are not on the tax rolls for a five-cent piece, personal or real. You are troubling yourself about a bill Smith sued me for. The amount of the bill was $2.50, instead of $2. I declared to the board that road district No. 17—Forks—should not pay the bill. The board of county commissioners passed that bill over my head Oct. 1, 1901, and as the auditor was issuing the warrant on No. 17, which was No. 816, I deposited the $2.50 with the county treasurer. The receipt I took from the treasurer was No. 397, and provided that the deposit was expressly for the payment of warrant No. 816, issued on road district No. 17 of same date. I paid this bill, so I do not think it any of your business, as it has nothing to do with J. R. Smith as road supervisor of district No. 4.

The facts of the matter are that I took no notice of your demands for the removal of Smith when he fired your son. I approved of Smith's action in regards to your son then as I do now, as he was absolutely no account on the roads and expensive at any price.

In conclusion let me say that I am prepared to answer any attack on any official act of mine.

Very respectfully,
D. A. CHRISTOPHER,
Co. Com. 3d Dist.

A special from London says: "The people of England are more convinced than ever that King Edward is as near the ideal king as it is possible for a human being to be, and that but for him England would probably today be involved in a war with Russia.

"The recent Hull incident aroused such a storm of indignation throughout the kingdom that but for the diplomacy and personal influence of King Edward the wave of bitter hatred against Russia would probably have swept the government off its feet and brought about the most tremendous war in the history of the world, a war in which all the powers of Europe would sooner or later have become involved.

"The king, however, remained firm and so great was the confidence of the English nation in the son of Queen Victoria that he accomplished what no living diplomat could have done and averted the war."

The accompanying portrait of King Edward is one of his latest, taken on his recent trip to Denmark, in the uniform of the Royal Danish Hussar Regiment of the Guard.

We would like you to know more than you do about our suits. Came in; bring a friend with you to help you choose; you'll be doubly pleased with another's judgment. S. J. Lutz & Co.

THE SIMPLE LIFE.

Simplicity is a state of mind. It dwells in the main intention of our lives. A man is simple when his chief care is the wish to be what he ought to be; that is, honest and naturally human. And this is neither so easy nor impossible as one might think. At bottom it consists in putting our acts and inspirations in accordance with the law of our being, and, consequently with the Eternal Intention which willeth that we should be at all. Let a flower be a flower, a swallow a swallow, a rock a rock, and let a man be a man, and not a fox, a hare, a hog or a bird of prey; this is the sum of the whole matter.—Pastor Charles Wagner.

SENATOR FOSTER is claiming fifty votes on first ballot for his return to the U. S. senate, and hopes to get sufficient to elect him. The lumbermen in the state have a large vote in the legislature to convene next month and it is very possible the doughty senator will make considerable converts if he can make the showing he claims. Anything for this section, however, but a Seattle man.

IT is reported that the commission forces in the next legislature will spring the name of Gov. McBride for U. S. senator, believing though now in the minority that at an opportune time they can place their forces, if held together, where they can be the deciding factor, which will not only give them power and prominence, but something more tangible with which to enter the coming campaigns for the adoption of their ideas.

IT is very improbable that there will be any legislation at the present session of congress enlarging the powers of the interstate commerce commission, despite the recommendation of President Roosevelt. Nevertheless, the president's message has served to bring the railroad problem to the front, both in congress and in the press, and Mr. Roosevelt has his party in the hole for the coming session of the 59th congress. The Democrats will heartily second the president's recommendations for the enlargement of the commission's powers, and the Republicans in power will have to go on record. It will then be up to the independent Republicans to decide whether they will stand by Roosevelt in his fight for reforms within reach or by the plutocrats of the party entrenched in the senate. We do not believe the decision is even now in doubt

DESPITE the fact that the Democratic candidate for governor of Colorado is elected on the face of the returns by about 11,000 plurality, the chances seem good that Gov. Peabody will be given the certificate of election, and enough Democrats elected to the legislature will be counted out to give the Republicans control. The whole proceedings seem to be so high-handed as to be beyond belief, for in throwing out all illegal votes the Democrats suffer little loss. Punish corruptionists in all parties, by all means, but do not as a court of justice, willfully seek to change the expressed will of the qualified electors of the state.

Mr. W. Briskey, of Mission, Wash., is helping his sister-in-law, Mrs. Dougherty, to make the holidays lively for the young folks up in Eden Valley.

The usual annual Forsberg family reunion took place at Mrs. Hartley Goodwin's on Christmas day. This year, however, there was a bad break in its membership Axel having died during the year and Charles and Hilda Forsberg Darrar having moved to their new home in Oregon. The little folks had a tree and before their presents were distributed entertained the company with appropriate recitations. All enjoyed an elegant supper, with which Mrs. Goodwin did herself proud.

Mark Dougherty is spending the holidays with relatives at Wenatchee, Wash.

The masked ball at the Goodwin hall, Freshwater, on Christmas eve, was very well attended and gave those participating any amount of fun. Quite handsome costumes were worn by Miss Irene Dougherty, symbolizing "Night," Miss Ella Meagher as "Day," and Miss Mabel Johnson as "The Daughter of the Revolution." Among the conspicuous male characters were Lester Guthrie and Harry Fredericks, dressed as guardians of the peace, and sustaining their characters fine; Ephram Olson made an excellent Santa Claus; Erny O'Brien had his shapely form dressed in a uniform and displayed all possible soldierly galantries towards the fair maskers. After unmasking, the ladies of the neighborhood furnished a delightful midnight lunch, after which was followed by several more hours of lively dancing.

His Postponed Voyage

[Copyright, 1904, by Ethel Holland.]

"Mother, dear, there is something I wish to tell you," began Sue Emerson. "Last evening Sam Congdon asked me to be his wife, and I have promised to answer him at Mrs. Mynter's reception. I don't know what to say to him. I am awfully fond of Sam, but then there is Harvey Merritt. He is so clever, and I am sure he likes me. I wish I could make up my mind."

Mrs. Emerson stroked her daughter's hand.

"You must do your own choosing, dear," she said. "There is no one that could do that for you, but my heart has gone out to Sam."

That afternoon Sue called on her friend, Mrs. Curtis. She found her with a most disconsolate expression on her face.

"My dear Jessie," cried Sue, "what is the matter?"

"I have a serious problem to solve," she answered. "Jack gives a stag party tonight, and about ten minutes ago the maid came to me and said her mother was seriously ill, and she must go to her at once. Now who can I get to serve these men tonight?"

Sue meditated.

"I have it," she said at length. "I will be your maid tonight."

"You?" gasped Jessie.

Sue nodded.

"But," exclaimed Mrs. Curtis, "Harvey Merritt and Sam and other men that you know are going to be here."

"It will be such a lark, Jessie. You will remember I was a maid in those amateur theatricals which Mrs. Mynter gave. I have my costume now, the wig, and the liquid to stain my face. Consider it settled, Jessie. No one will ever know me, and you will see what an efficient maid I can be."

"If they don't recognize you, I shall be extremely thankful to you for helping me out of this strait," was Jessie's answer.

"It will be great fun," Sue declared, "but you mustn't tell a soul, not even Jack, until the evening is over."

Evening came and with it the new maid. As she entered the room where Mr. and Mrs. Curtis sat Jessie said to her husband:

"Oh, Jack, Alice was called home this afternoon by the serious illness of her mother. This is Mary, who takes her place this evening." And Jack, looking at the dark skinned, black haired girl before him, did not for a minute suspect she was dainty Sue Emerson.

While waiting on the guests the new maid gave a start at the turn the conversation had taken.

"Well, Merritt," Curtis was saying, "you and Sam are the only bachelors among us tonight."

"And I won't remain one for long," answered Merritt.

The maid was passing him salted almonds, and her hand shook a trifle.

"I have made up my mind to ask a certain young lady to be my wife, and she has given me reason to believe she will not refuse."

The men looked up in surprise.

"Who is the girl?" asked Curtis.

"Miss Emerson."

The dark blue eyes of the maid flashed as she filled the punch glasses.

"A toast to you," a young friend of Merritt's cried. "Here's to your success in winning Miss Emerson." The guests raised their glasses and drained them, all save Sam Congdon, whose glass but touched his lips. A man at the end of the table called out:

"Who would have guessed that our cynical friend had fallen in love?"

"Of course I am marrying for love," Merritt retorted, but his tone was tinged with sarcasm.

"You'll get the money along with the love this time," some one ventured to remark.

Merritt shrugged his shoulders. His manner was near to insolence.

The maid's hand trembled visibly as she poured the wine. She placed a glass at Sam's plate, noting the pallor of his face as she did so. Her blue eyes grew darker still as Sam arose and said:

"Won't some of you fellows drink with me? Tomorrow night at this time I'll be on my way to Europe."

"Why, how is that?" some one asked.

A wave of color spread over Sam's face for an instant as he deliberately told the falsehood.

"My father wishes me to look after his business in Liverpool."

All drank to his prosperity. Only one present knew the real reason for this sudden voyage. The new maid blushed furiously under her stained cheeks.

At 10 o'clock the following morning Sam stood waiting for the cab that was to take him to the wharf. His trunk, strapped and labeled, stood in the hall. His grip and umbrella were on the table. Sam went to the dresser and taking from it a photograph cut out the head and shut it in the back of his watch case. It was the head of Sue Emerson. He heard the cab stop in front of the house, and, pulling his hat down over his eyes, he started out, nearly falling over a small boy in a blue uniform standing in his path. A dirty hand passed Sam a yellow envelope.

"Sign here, sir."

Sam signed his name on the blank indicated, tore open the envelope, read the message and then raced down the stairs. Umbrella, grip and trunk remained behind.

"Emerson's, —— Eighty-first street," he shouted to the driver as he stepped into the cab.

The chambermaid walked into the room just vacated by Congdon.

"Would ye mind these bits of yellow paper flying around," she murmured to herself. With a maid's curiosity she put them neatly together and read:

I need you more than Liverpool does.

A Polish Kissing Bee.

In Poland New Year's eve is observed in a dance called St. Sylvester's ball. The dancing proceeds decorously until the clock strikes 12. Exactly at that moment the men fall to kissing their own and their neighbor's partners, each taking particular pains to thus salute the one he loves best before the one with whom she chances to be dancing can perform that duty. Those not in the mood for dancing gather in another room or remain at home to entertain one another with stories about the departing year.

New Year's Day In Russia.

At every country house in Russia there are a feast and a procession in honor of New Year's day. Horses, sheep, cows and hogs are dressed with garlands and led to the landlord's house. The idea is that the animals shall be taken into the dining room, but when the landlord has a handsomely furnished apartment and does not care to have it ruined he sets aside some other room and allows the mob to take possession of it.

An Old English Custom.

The old country Englishman never fails to unbar his door at 12 o'clock New Year's eve to let the old year out and the new year in.

An Exception .....To a Rule

[Original.]

How did I become a barrister in England? That's a secret, but since you are my son I will tell you. The story illustrates how a man must take risks in his decisions, but I believe it is always safer to act from conscientious motives.

Soon after I was admitted to practice in Chicago one Christopher Rowan was accused of murder. I had a fancy for criminal practice and took his case; but, despite my best efforts, he was convicted on circumstantial evidence. I was not only convinced from the man's manner that he was innocent, but he told me certain facts, which I was unable to get before the jury, that confirmed me in my opinion.

I secured a stay of proceedings and in one way or another delayed the execution, but finally there was nothing more to do for him, and I saw the day near at hand when he would have to swing. The matter had a terrible effect upon me, not doubting, as I have said, that the man was innocent.

A few weeks before the execution a letter came for him from a distant part of the world. The sheriff took possession of it and instead of giving it to the condemned sent it to me. It contained official information that Rowan, through the death of a cousin, had fallen heir to an entailed estate worth nearly a million. It was in itself proof that the man about to die came of an excellent family. This he had told me, but hoped that if he died on the gallows the matter might escape the notice of his relatives.

For awhile I was in a quandary; then, suddenly coming to a resolution, I called a cab and hurried to the jail to deliver the letter to its owner. I was not surprised that it did not have any very great effect upon him. The truth is he was stunned by his misfortune and the near approach of death, which he had for some time considered inevitable.

Instead of returning to my office I went to my room—I was then a bachelor—and, locking myself in, considered what I would do. In an hour I had made up my mind to use what money was necessary to save the man's life, though it must be applied illegally. I cabled in Rowan's name to know for how much I might draw on the estate, and a goodly sum was named. Then I told Rowan of my plan, and he signed a draft.

In due time the prisoner was put through the process, or, rather, an appearance of the process, the law had directed. The newspapers told of the brave manner in which the prisoner had met his death, though he had refused spiritual consolation. The name was spelled (as he had given it when arrested) Rowan, so that his relatives might not know of his fate. The coroner pronounced him dead, and his body was turned over at my request to me for burial. Instead of burying it I sent it in the guise of a negro to New York, where it sailed alive for Liverpool.

Rowan before leaving offered me any portion of his estate that I would accept, but I declined to take a penny. After his arrival in London he wrote me renewing the offer. I still declined. He made me different propositions at different times, but I declined them all. Meanwhile he had entered various enterprises and doubled his capital. Finally he wrote me that if I would come to London and practice he would see that I had the most lucrative clients. It was ten years after I had been the means of saving him from an ignominious death that I went to London and consented to act as his and his friends' attorney. In time I became a barrister.

I have left out the most important part of the story? How did I contrive Rowan's flight, the sham hanging and all that? Money, my dear boy; money. It will accomplish anything. We don't need to go to Russia for corruption; there is plenty of it in the United States. But it costs a big sum. I paid it all to one man in gold—$300,000—though I didn't pay more than a sixth of this at the time of the hanging, and the go betweens paid all the rest. Besides the sheriff, those in attendance and the coroner it was necessary to give plenty of hush money to any one who might have the slightest suspicion.

How did they fool those whose duty it was to see the man executed? Come here. The evidence has been in this safe ever since you were born. Do you see this rope loop? It fitted around Rowan's chest. I'll put it on and show you how it worked. I have no horror of it; it saved a life instead of taking one. You see it passes across the chest and under the arms. Higher, where the ends join, is a hook, small, but strong. On the hangman's rope close to the knot was a little loop made of a hundred fine steel wires, and just before the condemned was swung off the hook was pulled up under the coat collar and fastened to the steel loop. Hook and loop were lost in the hangman's knot behind the ear and the victim's coat collar.

Have I ever regretted my act? Never. In a sense I did wrong to work a right, and I don't believe in the principle of doing wrong that right may come. But an isolated case like this doesn't make a rule; it is simply an exception to a rule.

THOMAS KENT WATERMAN.

He Got His Choice.

Mother—Johnny, I see your little brother has the smaller apple. Did you give him his choice, as I suggested?

Johnny—Yes'm. I told him he could have his choice, the little one or none, and he took the little one.

New Year's Violets.

I sighed to give you flowers bright,
Though vanished sweet the summer's glow.
The violets heard my longings deep,
Oh, way down 'neath the turf and snow.
They were not due till April fair,
Yet, in December's wilderness,
They felt the warmth of friendship's spring
And robed themselves in royal dress.

"This was satisfactory. But Mr. Belvin, who was present, spoke up and said, 'But we don't intend to do anything west except to bring trade from Quillayute. We would not under any consideration permit a connection that way.'

"I said, 'It is no use to talk further then. The Port Angeles Pacific is to connect with the Northern Pacific or it is of no use,' and I bid them good day. Here Mr. Belvin again spoke up, saying, "We have franchises to all streets for wharves in the city and soon will get yours. We have left sufficient money in Port Angeles to accomplish this.' "

Mr. Smith stated he then went to certain gentlemen in the city whom he is not at this time permitted to name, but who are reputable bankers of New York, whose plans and conditions are known to Lester Turner, president of the First National Bank of Seattle, who will advise those interested and who have a right to know. These people have agreed to come to Port Angeles and build the P. A. P. independent of the P. A. E., but they want to know if the people of Port Angeles want to close the western door.

"Now what I want to know," said Mr. Smith, "is what is the status of our grants? Will these people be allowed to go ahead if they desire?"

Councilman Hallahan stated as far as he knew no action had been taken in the matter.

Mayor Lewis said he was free to say he had no knowledge of any such proceeding as was mentioned by the gentleman. There is no applications before council and he has heard no intimation of intention of any parties to apply. The P. A. P. franchises expire by limitation Jan. 1st. If the company wish to perpetuate grants, or have any assurances that it would be worth while to rehabilitate them, he thought there would be no difficulty. Anyone with a definite proposition would, in his opinion, receive careful and just consideration. This was the last meeting of the old council and that body could not do anything or pledge new council to any action. In his opinion the P. A. P. would receive just treatment at the hands of the new council.

Mr. Smith thanked the mayor and said he would take things in spirit of council when he left here. His people are coming to Port Angeles as soon as it is possible for them to get together and come, and he was pleased with the assurances that nothing had been done against the Port Angeles Pacific interests, but that his people would get fair treatment upon their arrival.
