THE DEMOCRAT-LEADER.

VOL. 4. NO. 39. PORT ANGELES, CLALLAM COUNTY, WASHINGTON, FEBRUARY 16, 1894. 8 PAGES.---PRICE FIVE CENTS

Col. Visscher's Prediction.

Col. Visscher hath spoken these cheering words in the Tacoma News:

"People are coming, too, let me tell you. The spring will not be very ripe before you see the biggest tide of immigration setting in toward Washington that has ever been dreamed of, and it will be an element of immigration worth something. Good people, who will come here to fill up and develop this country, and our splendid empire will rise and shine. This is not chin music, my son. It is business, and you will see it."

Examination of Teachers.

The New Mail Route.

Steamboat mail service has been established on route 71,071, which will supply mail on a schedule satisfactory to the department six times each week, between Seattle, Port Townsend, Dungeness and Port Angeles.

The service on the new route is being performed by Messrs. Hatch Bros., of the steamer Monticello.

A New C. P. R. Map.

A very complete wall map of the Dominion of Canada and the greater part of the United States has just been issued by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which shows in minute detail every station on its immense system, and all its rail connections, including the Soo and South Shore lines. The steamship routes on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and on the island lakes are also given. The political divisions of the two countries—the provinces and districts of the Dominion and the states of the Union—are distinctly marked and every town of any importance is clearly designated. It is evident that great care has been taken in the preparation of this map which is geographically accurate. Printed in five harmoniously blending tints, as a work of art, it is not unworthy of ranking with that other production of the company which has attracted so much attention—"Around the World."

This new map will be invaluable to the business office, and if furnished the public schools would soon supersede, in many instances, the inferior charts now too frequently in use. The may is about 3ft. x 5 ft., and is neatly mounted. It is not only useful but ornamental, and creditable alike to the designers, the publishers and the Company.

Port Angeles, Wash.

Immigrants and returning voyagers find in Ayer's Sarsaparilla a cure for eruptions, boils, pimples, eczema, etc., whether resulting from sea-diet and life on ship-board, or from any other cause. Its value as a tonic and alterative medicine cannot be overestimated.

Any person desiring to travel would do well to consult J. H. Young, Agent Canadian Pacific R. R., this city, before purchasing tickets elsewhere. Unrivaled accommodations. Quick time, and money saved by this route.

THE TAXPAYERS UNION.

A Society Recently Organized Which Promises to be

A MOST POTENT AGENCY

In Purging and Purifying Local Governments—Synopsis of the Constitution Which Outlines Its Objects and Aims—The Trustees Elected for the Ensuing Term of Six Months.

Port Angeles has a new society, organized for a very laudable purpose, indeed—that of purging municipal and county governments of abuses, arising either from defective laws or the acts of dishonest and vicious officials. And best of all creating a healthy public sentiment that will give a strong, steadfast unerring support of the public condemnation either through the columns of the local press or by the Taxpayers' Union, of malfeasance in office. That taxpayers, who, above all others, are the most deeply interested in the honest, economical administration of public affairs, have at last become thoroughly aroused to the demands of the hour, is, indeed, auspicious of the beginning of a vigorous movement in the direction of rigid honesty and economy in the management of county and city affairs.

When officials prove recreant to their trust—become careless, loose and negligent in the discharge of their duties, and such action is treated with indifference by public opinion insensible to wrong doing, it is, indeed, a super-human task for a public journal single-handed to create a sentiment inimical to evil-doers.

With one accord there should be unanimity of action, of purpose, of motive, one sustaining the other in a firm determined effort to raise the affairs of city and county to a standard imparting confidence abroad, good feeling at home, that harmony and unity of action, purpose and aim, without which no community can ever hope for permanent prosperity, peace and contentment.

ARTICLE I.

We acknowledge God as our Father and the Giver of light and life and every good and perfect gift.

ARTICLE II.

This society shall be called the Taxpayers' Union.

ARTICLE III.

The object of this society shall be the mutual protection of its members and all law abiding citizens of Port Angeles and Clallam county in general in any matters concerning the acts of city or county officials and the promotion of a public sentiment by the encouragement or patronage by its members of a newspaper that will voice the sentiments of this society and criticise the wrongful acts of city and county officials and denounce corruption and wrong of any kind wherever found and the retention of an attorney or attorneys to look out and care for its interests.

ARTICLE IV.

The members shall consist of any person who is a bona-fide taxpayer and law-abiding citizen and not engaged in any disreputable business subscribing to this constitution.

ARTICLE IV½

Ny person while holding a city or county position shall be eligible as a member of this society.

ARTICLE V.

This society shall be independent in politics and religion.

ARTICLE VI.

There shall be a board of twelve directors, two of whom shall be the President and Recording Secretary, (seven of whom shall constitute a quorum) who shall manage the affairs of the society and who shall be charged with the duty of fulfilling its objects and purposes hereinbefore expressed.

ARTICLE VII.

This society shall have the privilege of extending to any place in Clallam county that desires to avail itself of its aims and objects.

ARTICLE XI.

An election of the directors and officers of this society shall be held once every six months, on the first Thursday in January and the first Thursday in July of each year, and such directors and officers shall hold office until their successors are elected and qualified.

All non-resident property owners are especially invited to identify themselves with this society and bear its burdens and thereby aid its efficiency in the protection of their property.

Last Monday evening a permanent organization was effected, with the following board of directors:

J. H. Fairbrook, President; W. S. Morrisey, Henry Nelson, D. W. Morse, L. T. Haynes, Chas. Tillman, H. K. W. Ayres, P. J. Donlan, John Bell, Herman Fisher, H. C. Miller, M. V. Albright.

MINERVA SOCIETY NOTES.

Last Week's Program—The Public Entertainment—Next Week's Program.

Pythian hall was crowded to overflowing last Monday evening by Minervians who were delighted with one of the most interesting literary programs as yet produced by members of that society.

The program was, indeed, truly American, an outburst of patriotic eentiment, commemorating the birthday of the savior of his country—Abraham Lincoln. Members responded to the roll call with quotations from Hamlet. The address of the evening, "Abraham Lincoln," by Judge McClinton, was an able and comprehensive review of the life and public service of that great patriot. The effort of Mr. McClinton was keenly appreciated by the society.

Mr. George C. Hatch gave an interesting address on the law, which was richly interspersed with humorous incidents, which illustrated quite vividly the point at issue.

A humorous reading by Mrs. H. B. Willson was one of the features of the evening, creating undue merriment among the members.

An essay by Mrs. Wm. Bell on the life of Mary Todd Lincoln, wife of the martyr president, was well produced and thoroughly appreciated.

"Osler Joe," Mr. Geo. Sims famous poem, was very cleverly recited by Mr. Frank S. Mackintosh, the society evincing appreciation with long continued applause.

A criticism by Mr. Horace White of Shakspeare's "As You Like It," afforded the society a delightful half hour's pastime. Throughout the evening was rendered most thoroughly enjoyable by the refreshing program produced.

The program for next Monday evening will comprise in part quotations from "Troilus and Cressida," from Shakspeare. A debate, "Resolved That English literature has Passed the Zenith of its Golden Agê. For the affirmative, Mr. W. W. Dedman and Mrs. M. J. Carrigan. On the negative, Mr. W. Ware and Miss Cook. An address by Mr. Frank Semon. A recitation by Mr. George Raymond. An address by Prof. Tiffany on "Thackery." And the subject of general discussion will be on "Thackery" the great English writer.

The committee appointed to arrange a program for a public entertainment which will be produced in the opera house March 7th, 1894, reported that the following named persons will participate in the production of the same:

Music—Miss Hall, Mrs. Jno. Troy and Mr. F. O. Lamoreux.

Addresses—Messrs. L. R. Cole, Horace White, R. A. Grimes, and Prof. Tiffany.

Each division will prepare five numbers.

Tableau by Mrs. H. B. Willson and Mr. L. Cole.

Judging from the talent which will assist in the production of the program the initial public entertainment of the Minerva Literary Society, will provide an enjoyable evenings' pastime for those privileged to attend.

MILLIONS IN NEW YORK

Banks Withdrawn From the Avenues

OF TRADE AND COMMERCE.

Mr. Hawks Wants a Royalty From the City On His Pipe Line—Some Interesting Facts About the Resurvey of the Port Angeles Tide Lands—Coal Prospecting in Clallam County.

Mr. Chas. E. Mallette returned Wednesday from a prolonged business visit to Washington and New York, and expresses himself gratified with the results of his visit.

"The outlook for the First Nationa bank of this city is," said Mr. Mallette, in answer to an inquiry from a representative of THE DEMOCRAT-LEADER, "very favorable, indeed. The matter is progressing as satisfactorily as could be expectd and we confidently expect that certain preliminaries will be properly adjusted before long so as that institution can reopen its doors to the general public.

"The people of Washington have no conception of the demoralized condition of business at the East. Any person who closely follows the trend of business has but to remain in New York City a short time to witness the disastrous results of the panic, and to scan the columns of commercial and trade journals to find a review of the alarming number of failures in every branch of business. And this with $112,000,000 of dollars above the reserve required by the law in the banking institutions of that city. It is simply an artificial period of distrust that will quickly vanish when the country definitely adopts its commercial policy. The people are merely waiting to see what congress is going to do.

"The tariff bill will undoubtedly be passed, and in my opinion before the end of the present month. The country will immediately enter upon an era of business advancement which will continue until general prosperity again prevails throughout the length and breadth of the land.

"There is no use denying it, Eastern money-lenders are very apprehensive of Western securities. And, in referring to the West, they mean the great empire stretching west of Chicago. The severest losses have, however, been experienced in Kansas and Nebraska securities, which have depreciated, in the eyes of Eastern investors, all western securities. Loose, unbusinesslike methods have had much to do in establishing against the West this feeling of distrust and uncertainty.

If you imagine the Eastern loaner is not quite as familiar with the condition of our municipal and county government as you are, you labor under a grievous mistake. You approach him on the subject of a loan in county or citysecurities, and he confronts you with the distasteful fact that your paper is almost valueless at home—how then do you expect it to carry any value in the commercial markets?

"Flagrant abuses of sound commercial laws are responsible for this. We have criminally destroyed our credit, and therefore deserve to suffer as severely as do those who violate nature's laws. Outrageous misconduct in the management of city and county affairs; prodigal extravagance in public expenditures; and the shameless looting of the public treasury has so demoralized our credit abroad that the most heroic measures will have to be adopted to again establish credit and confidence abroad in local securities."

THE CITY RETRENCHES.

Expenses Cut Down in the Electric Light Works.

The council at its Wednesday evening meeting doubtless had caught inspiration from the trend of public opinion and makes a sweeping reduction in the operating expenses of the electric lighting plant.

The manager will receive only $25 per month in future, while the lineman's wages will be $37:50, the engineer, $50; assistant engineer, $37.50; fireman $30.

City Attorney Lamoreux expressed the opinion that the city could not grant privileges over the streets of the reservation as the thoroughfares in question had never been dedicated to the general public.

Mr. Hawks of Tacoma, whose services were sought and paid for by the city in devising plans for its proposed electric lighting pipe line, demands royalty upon his ingenious plan. Such audacity should be given a chilling rebuke, or even a worse fate. This man Hawks, through the intercession of a number of citizens, was forced upon the city as a progidy in engineering realms, and his services were accordingly secured by the city, to aid in formulating plans for the proposed pipe line. Now measure the ingratitude of this unique individual. Having been fully and adequately compensated for his services, he presumes to demand a royalty upon the plans furnished the city. He ought to get it.

Poor Angeles! It appears the dupe of adventurers, of schemers, of merciless tricksters, who cunningly use their wits for pecuniarygain, always at the expense of taxpayers.

After March 1st taxes must be paid in cash, excepting rebates on Front and First street grade assessments, which will be accepted im payment for taxes.

No franchises were granted. The council adjourned.

COMPLETES TIDE LAND SURVEY.

State Engineer Discovers Gross Inaccuracies in Old Government Surveys.

Mr. A. J. Gillis, engineer of the state board of tide land commissioners, has completed the examination of the survey of the tide lands of Port Angeles harbor. In referring to his labors, Mr. Gillis said to a representative of THE DEMOCRAT-LEADER: "When I first came to Port Angeles to begin work upon the survey I was of the opinion that I could accomplish the task within ten days, and informed the state board to that effect, but upon a more thorough examination of the character and extent of the work I was convinced that it would take at least thirty days to properly prosecute the re-survey.

"Only ninety days were given to make the survey of the harbor, which is certainly inadequate to perform as intricate and frequently arduous task, as the tracing of old government surveys in mid-winter, particularly with the unusual depth of snow on the ground that fell last winter, is supremely difficult to say the least.

"Some of the old government surveys are grossly inaccurate when examined in the field, but are fairly accurate if calculated from the notes and profiles. For instance take the Sampson estate, I have the original notes of the government survey of that tract of land, which when calculated from the tracings of the notes, demonstrates a discrepancy only of seven feet. But when I run the lines in the field beginning at a point and following the lines around the tract to the point of beginning was according to my tracings removed sixty feet from the monument set which established in the original notes the boundaries of this tract. This gross inaccuracy can only be accounted for with the theory that all the lines were not run. The line, no doubt, meandering the beach was never run, the notes having been 'doctored' to comply with a mathematical analysis.

"I have endeavored to thoroughly prosecute the work, to correct the discrepancies and inaccuracies appearing in the old surveys, and am confident occupants can get from the map I will file with the state board, an accurate description of their property, one which will be entirely acceptable to all concerned. And this is not only what tide owners desire, but what is absolute to avoid legal complications and entanglements that otherwise would constantly arise."

COAL PROSPECTING

At Blyn Being Rapidly Pushed, With Success in Sight.

Work has been suspended on the coal prospect south of Burnt Mountain, awaiting adjustment of internal strife with the company's affairs.

The company, mostly Port Townsend people, have got down about eighty feet altogether, fifty feet with a shaft and thirty more with a drill, when the drill broke. With it came some dissatisfaction with the working of the mine, which has now been about arranged, and work will soon commence again. At an expense of $1000 the promoters have just had an experienced expert report on the prospect, and his report was highly satisfactory. It is learned that thus far a two-inch vien has been discovered near the surface, which pitched rapidly downward, this was followed about forty feet and lost.

Another company, composed of Seattle and Tacoma parties is being organized to drill for coal at the head of Sequim bay, near Blyn.

They have had an expert in the neighborhood for sometime and are now awaiting a diamond drill. They have made contracts with the owners of property for the mineral rights. To a representative of THE DEMOCRAT-LEADER it was stated that those interested felt quite confident of success, not only in finding coal, but that there would be found petroleum in paying quantities.

AT THE COAL CAMP.

The Drill in Operation — The Water Wheel a Novel Contrivance.

At the coal camp of Messrs. Hibbard and Griswold is a scene of activity and bustle. The water wheel, although rudely constructed, works admirably in its cumbersome fashion, operating the drill apparently without any strain, raising it regularly and, as it falls, it penetrates deeper and deeper into the earth.

As yet nothing significant has developed, as the drill has not penetrated the earth to any consequential depth.

Further developments, however, will be watched with keen interest, as the community is thoroughly awakened to the vital importance of the utilization of the natural resources of the country.

Valentine Social.

Tuesday evening a Valentine social was held in the First Congregational church, under the auspices of the Ladies Aid Society.

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

CHAPTER VIII.

AGAIN AT PASONAGESSIT—PEACE AND GOOD WILL PREVAIL.

I was received with open arms by everybody on my arrival at Pasonagessit—not alone by members of my own family, not of course by the Bradford of all the Bradfords and a few others of that special brand of Bradfords, but I found life there very different from what it was on my departure for England. My father's house now seemed to be headquarters for nearly all the young people of the town. My sisters were "in the swim," and of course I very naturally dropped in with them.

I was glad to be able to meet Prudence in our family mansion. Our secret had been well kept. My sisters did not in the least suspect how matters stood between their brother and the "Mayflower of the Mayflowers." Not a soul was in the secret except our true blue Captain Shrimp, and to be the sole repository of such a secret made him the happiest of mortals. Besides, he did not much like old Amariah Bradford and "jist naterally hated" Standish. He had faithfully conveyed to Prudence all the letters I had written, both from England and New York, and began to feel almost like a father to the dear little Puritan maiden.

Prudence was a close and shrewd student of her austere father's whims and moods. She advised a continuance of our secrecy, as a premature avowal of our engagement would probably arouse her father's wrath. We therefore concluded to bide our time—to quietly wait and watch the effect of the ceremony of the entombing in the Pasonagessit cemetery of my titled ancestors. Whenever I spoke of these ancestors to Prudence, I was able to detect in her eyes just the faintest bit of a merry twinkle—and that twinkle continues to the present day with the addition of a roguish smile. The plainest hint she has ever given me in regard to the business was one day after my mother and sisters had been displaying and explaining their ancient jewels. On that occasion, as soon as we were done, she said, "Oh, Sam, I feel guilty, too, for I suspected all the time, yet said nothing."

"You suspected what, my dear?"

"Oh, Sam, only think that I am at the bottom of it all; that it was all on my account," and her eyes told what she would not permit her tongue to utter.

But I must not anticipate. As soon as we returned to Pasonagessit my father was again at work at what now seemed the one great business of his life. He at once had our genealogical tree placed in a massive oaken frame. "Heart of oak, Sam, my boy!" cried he as he suspended it upon the wall. Next he began the planting of evergreens on his lot in the cemetery, erecting brick walls in places and sparing neither pains nor cost.

He was now well up in the genealogy, and I am firmly of the opinion that from poring over it he had come to believe every word of it. It was beautiful to hear him entertain Rev. Nantucket Sperm and Captain Shrimp with long historical sketches extending back as far as the year 870, when old Geoffroi Johnston single handed slew half a score of Danes.

My mother, sister Eleanor and all my other sisters were in raptures at the sight of the ancient jewels which I brought home, and which I distributed as impartially as possible. They were never tired of the story of their faithful preservation for so long a time by the old barrister and his descendants, heirs and assignees, for I continually remembered new circumstances and wonderfully improved upon my original sketch. Not an article but had been stolen or lost to be miraculously recovered in some way; even from the fishes of the sea and the birds of the air, not to speak of dishonest servants and regular out and out burglars.

One poor girl was arrested at the very altar with one of the bracelets on her arm. My sisters always pitied that poor creature. She was a servant in the barrister's family. To the last, with tears and heart breaking wailings she declared that she only took the jewel for the occasion and intended to return it to its case immediately after the ceremony. But, poor thing, to Botany Bay she went, her mean spirited husband deserting her at the altar and leaving her to her fate.

These jewels became my father's pride and delight. He soon came to have full faith in their genuineness and in the truthfulness of the legends connected with them. He seemed to have quite forgotten that on my return from London I had given him the bills for the manufacture of every article, all in square staring pounds, shillings and pence. Doubtless he had destroyed the bills and adopted my stories.

"Heart of oak, Sam, my boy!"

It may be asked by you mentally whether I did not in all this business feel some compunctions of conscience. I can truthfully say that I felt nothing of the kind. In all I had done I had not wronged or in any way injured a single living soul. On the contrary, wherever I had gone and in all I had done I had made people happy. In Pasonagessit I had found all going wrong socially, and instead of setting to work with a butcher's cleaver of reform and getting myself heartily cursed for my pains I gently, gently ministered to all the whims and prejudices I found in my path, when all rose up and called me blessed. In a peaceful and congenial way I had been able to bring about a greater harvest of happiness than any fierce reformer with brandished cleaver could even have proposed or dreamed of.

The genealogy and pretended ancient jewels were mere harmless toys, the making of which doubtless placed food in many hungry mouths. And besides these toys gave to several hearts daily and hourly a vast deal of happiness which they would never have known had I not caused the pretty baubles to have an existence. As for my exploit in what might, by some puritanical sticklers for the purest and best methods of rendering the human race unhappy, be termed "body snatching," I do not feel that the freak of digging up and bringing over the sea some neglected and forgotten bones, to give them new sepulchers and fresh honors in a younger land, under brighter skies, harmed so much as a fly. On the contrary, out of this freak grew all the good that was accomplished at Pasonagessit and in every other place to which I came while in process of working up my plan for humanizing out of the way of wholesome and hearty happiness the whims and prejudices that upreared themselves in my path.

Were it possible to find their tombs I would be ready to set out tomorrow and transport to Pasonagessit or some other spot in our country the bones of our first parents, old Adam and Eve, could I thereby render happy a sufficient per cent of the human family to justify the trip.

Before me I now every day saw the good fruits of my work. My father had in a remarkably short time gathered in and deposited with the Pasonagessit undertaker the remains of my great-grandfather, Walter Johnson, put down in our genealogy as being the only son of Sir Archibald; those of my great-grandmother, Mary Johnson, and also those of Samuel and Martha Johnson, my grandfather and grandmother, all of which had been placed in fine and costly caskets provided with silver plates properly inscribed.

Having secured these, I thought my father would rest satisfied. But not so. He had set his heart upon obtaining the remains of Lady Arbella or Arabella Johnson from Salem, where they were interred in 1630, only 10 years after the landing of the pilgrims on "Forefathers' rock." Accompanied by the Pasonagessit undertaker, and having with him the great parchment genealogical record as authority, he went to Salem and actually returned in triumph with the ashes and tombstone of "Lady Arbella, daughter of Thomas, fourteenth earl of Lincoln, wife of Isaac Johnson," as was inscribed upon the silver plate which he affixed to the beautiful casket containing the noble ashes. This being an exploit of my father's own conception and execution it gave him great satisfaction.

My father's next whim was to brick up all the graves he had caused to be dug and turn them into cement lined vaults. He kept a small army of men at work in the cemetery.

CHAPTER IX.

REV. WALTER MOWBRAY—FUNERAL ORATION AND CEREMONIES.

Leaving my father engaged in making his many improvements in his plot of ground in the Pasonagessit cemetery, aided by the friendly counsel of Rev. Nantucket Sperm, Captain Shrimp and half the village besides, I went up to New York to look after Rev. Walter Mowbray.

I found him in excellent health and spirits. He was so improved in appearance that I hardly knew him. Both face and form had plumped out, and he had a well to do look. The man actually looked 10 years younger than when I had last seen him. He informed me that he felt nothing but disgust for all kinds of liquors and for his former course in life. He said this feeling was so marked and decided that he was confident it was due to his having been hypnotized, and added: "Your father was right in what he did. It has made my new course easy for me—indeed my easiest course."

He had finished the funeral oration to his entire satisfaction and was anxious to deliver it. It had been a labor of love with him.

Not only was he glad of an opportunity of pleasing and obliging my father, but also of the chance afforded for making his exit from his former life in a manner so conspicuous and decided. At his first step he would rise to respectability.

All being thus favorable, I wrote and informed my father that he might safely announce in Pasonagessit that on the occasion of the reinterment of the ashes of our ancestors there would be a discourse, historical and explanatory, by Rev. Walter Mowbray, a clergyman of English descent who had traveled in many lands, and who had been for a few months sojourning in New York.

My next care was to provide for my resurrected minister a new suit from top to toe as fine as could be made in the city. In this suit he might safely have ascended any pulpit in the Union and would have been pronounced a clergyman of most distinguished appearance. Not only was he now a "man of God" in outward appearance, but also inwardly—at heart.

Indeed he one day informed me, with tears of joy in his eyes, of what he thought a strange phenomenon if not an actual miracle wrought in his case. This was the fact that all his old religious fervor had returned to him or had been in some way revived in his heart; also with this had been restored to him much of his youthful religious knowledge—the love of the good men of all times. When I spoke of all this a few days later to my father, he said, "Sam, my boy, there is more in hypnotism than is 'dreamt of in our philosophy!'"

When I returned to Pasonagessit with the magnificent caskets containing the remains of Sir Archibald and Lady Eleanor, accompanied by the fine and benevolent looking clergyman, Rev. Walter Mowbray, nothing else was talked of in the village. The undertaker at once became the most popular man in town. Nearly every man and about half of the women of the place invented some excuse in order to get a glimpse of the caskets and tombstones. The tombstones effectually dispelled whatever doubts may have arisen in the minds of any Pasonagessit person. They showed for themselves, and there was no disputing their antiquity. The undertaker would have made a good thing could he have ventured upon charging a small admission fee. However, he contented himself with the glory of the commission that had fallen to him and made the most of it. I even caught a glimpse one day of the Bradford of all the Bradfords as he vanished within the doors of the undertaker. Prudence and I put this down as a "good sign."

At my father's house Rev. Mr. Mowbray was treated as an honored guest. My mother and sisters were delighted with him, and he certainly made himself very agreeable and entertaining. He and Rev. Nantucket Sperm at once became great friends, and even Captain Shrimp heartily enjoyed him.

The great day appointed for the reinterment of our ancestors—bogus and genuine—at last arrived. All the truest, bluest blood of New England was present. There was great curiosity to hear the history of our ancestors from over the sea. It had been my father's plan to convey the caskets to the cemetery and have the funeral discourse delivered in the open air, but it being represented to him that there were many very aged persons in Pasonagessit desirous of hearing Rev. Mr. Mowbray who would find the fatigue of standing too great he altered this part of his programme in deference to the generally expressed wish of the villagers. The people of the town begged that the discourse be delivered in the principal church, where all could be comfortably seated. My father cheerfully consented to this proposition.

This change greatly pleased Rev. Walter Mowbray, the dearest wish of whose heart was once more to ascend a pulpit.

In conformity with the change of programme all the caskets, seven in number, were transported from the undertaker's to the church, and the bright array was surveyed by my father with infinite satisfaction.

I was glad to note the presence of Amariah Bradford, even though crouched in an obscure corner. Prudence was of course present and I thought looking somewhat anxious, for she knew not what would be the tenor of the discourse and feared something might be said that would touch the pride of her father and perhaps arouse his wrath.

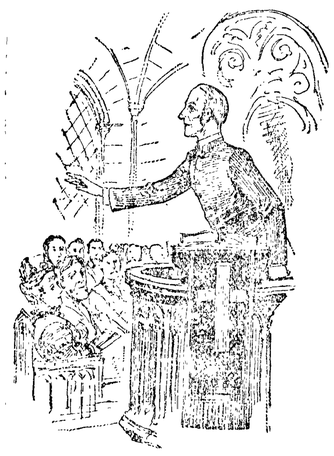
While we were awaiting the gathering of the people Rev. Nantucket Sperm came to where we were seated and said to my father: "It is good in these days, given too much to the whirl and rush incident to the race after wealth and the worship of Mammon, to see one man in our community who halts and turns aside to do honor to the bones and ashes of his ancestors. Mr. Johnson, you have set an example in this village which is being followed. Your action, sir, is bearing good fruit."

"It has always been the dearest wish of my life," said my father modestly, "to thus bring to one spot and permanently inter the ashes of my ancestors, both those here and those still lying in graves beyond the sea in the mother country. It was bequeathed to me, sir, as a sacred duty by my father, and to him by his father, to bring the bones of my great-grandparents to this country, but until recently circumstances have always prevented the performance of that which has always been looked upon by myself, as by my father and my father's father, as a holy duty."

"God will bless your pious work," said Rev. Nantucket Sperm.

"I feel that he will," said my father.

Rev. Walter Mowbray was the focus of all eyes as he arose in the pulpit. He acquitted himself well and was listened to with marked attention by the great audience by which the church was literally packed. He lightly touched the Johnston of the period of the sacking of



Rev. Walter Mowbray was the focus of all eyes as he arose in the pulpit.

Thetford by the Danes and passed over the exploits of old Geoffroi with a mere glance at his "several victorious hand to hand contests with the foreign foe."

My father thought he should have considerably enlarged upon the puissance of this old thane, seeing that he constituted the very taproot of the Johnson family tree.

After tracing the history of the Johnsons during the days of their wealth and power, the orator came to where they were overtaken by misfortunes through being involved in costly litigation, inaugurated by needy lawyers and greedy neighbors. This brought him to Sir Archibald Johnson, my great-great-grandfather—by importation. He said that, harassed by litigious neighbors and reduced to comparative poverty, Sir Archibald at last in his old age determined to seek a home in the new world. He would bid an eternal farewell to a country wherein he had suffered so much at the hands of avaricious and unprincipled persons. With what could be saved from the wreck of his fortune he sent his only son, Walter Johnson, to America, intending to follow as soon as a place of shelter was found for him in one of the New England settlements. But misfortune attended the family in the new world as well as in the old.

Before Walter was able to permanently establish himself and send for his parents Lady Eleanor died. Soon after Sir Archibald fell ill. When informed that his sickness was likely to terminate fatally, he dictated a letter to his son Walter in which he made it his dying request that as soon as possible his remains should be taken to America for permanent burial. He could not endure that even his bones should lie in a country where he had suffered so much and among people who had so persecuted him.

The various misfortunes which had prevented my great-grandfather and my grandfather from fulfilling this sacred trust were then touched upon, and it was shown that my father was the only one of the descendants of Sir Archibald who had ever been in a position pecuniarily to bear the great cost of complying with the dying request made so long ago. But the dying request had never for a moment been forgotten. The removal of the remains of Sir Archibald and their reinterment in the soil of free America was bequeathed as a sacred duty by father to son till at last we were witnessing the fulfillment of that duty in a most notable and honorable way. "Yes," said the reverend gentleman, "in another hour the dying request made nearly 100 years ago will have been complied with, and the bones of Sir Archibald will repose in American soil."

Here my father buried his face in his handkerchief, and I could see by the convulsive shaking of his frame that his feelings were almost too much for him.

My father was highly complimented by the speaker for the pious manner in which he had fulfilled the sacred trust bequeathed to him. He had indeed so far exceeded the strict terms of the dying request as to bring over the remains of Lady Eleanor. He carried in his breast a heart that respected the mandate, "Whom God hath united let no man separate."

Here I observed one of my father's eyes slyly peering out at me from beneath the handkerchief that covered his face.

Our orator greatly extolled my father for the deep reverence he bore for his ancestors as exemplified in the mournful task in which the people of Pasonagessit had seen him so long and earnestly engaged. I also came in for my full share of this praise, during which I cautiously turned my head so far as to see that Prudence was slyly peering at me from behind her fan. Even old Amariah threw an eye in my direction.

In speaking of the evil days when the Johnson family in England fell into pecuniary embarrassment Rev. Walter Mowbray said that so honorable was their course and name that they still formed matrimonial connections with the highest families in the land. "Lady Eleanor," said the orator, "was a Howard, the proudest name in Norfolk, and Norfolk gives the title of premier, duke and peer of England to the Howard family as descendants of the Mowbrays."

At this my father gave me a nudge and whispered: "There he got in a neat little stroke of work on his own account. As though by a mere slip of the tongue he sets the Mowbrays above the Howards, the Johnsons and all others in Norfolk. The Mowbrays indeed! But, Sam, we can't help it. We must be satisfied with that which we can fairly and honestly claim as our own—ancestral rights which no one can gainsay."

The speaker did well with Lady Arbella. As she arrived at Salem only 10 years later than the landing of the Mayflower pilgrims at Plymouth, he made quite a feature of her. In this part of his discourse he took occasion to highly compliment the Puritans. This of course earned him the good opinion of his hearers, nearly every one among whom claimed to be descended from the pilgrim fathers. While working for our family, Rev. Walter Mowbray was not forgetful of his own interests. I was glad to observe this sign of reawakened ambition.

CHAPTER X.

VICTORIOUS AT LAST—"A BEE" IN MY FATHER'S "BONNET."

No sooner were our ancestors safely deposited in their respective vaults than my father inclosed his burial lot with a fine iron fence and set up a number of huge stone vases to contain hanging vines. To these he from time to time added such other ornaments and improvements as were suggested by Rev. Nantucket Sperm, Captain Shrimp and others. These works occupied his days, and his nights were given to the study of the genealogy.

Rev. Walter Mowbray created so favorable an impression that he was invited to become the pastor of a church in the neighboring village of Weenipsit. As he had now become reimbued with the spirit of the true and earnest Christian soldier and teacher, he felt it his duty to make a full and humble confession to the bishop in authority and beg to be reinstated. In this my father and I lent our assistance, and the story of Jepson was made known to only a few discreet persons. In his preaching he is said to be doing good work. The pictures he draws in his warnings to young men are so realistic that his hearers wonder how the good old man is able to so faithfully portray the many evils of this wicked world, of none of which he can possibly have had any personal experience.

My father's example caused many iron railings and handsome monuments to be erected by his neighbors, and the Pasonagessit cemetery is not only the pride of the village, but also is the model for all the neighboring villages, in nearly every one of which the work of improvement is in progress. Rev. Nantucket Sperm is always loud in his praise of my father for his inauguration of the good work which is now being carried on with so much pious enthusiasm.

But that which gave my father the greatest pleasure was the following incident, which he was never tired of relating: One day as he was coming in from the cemetery he was stopped by a woman apparently about 90 years of age, who, cane in hand, stood before her cottage. "Mr. Johnson," said the venerable dame, "I want tew thank you. I've been a-holdin back for years all I knew heow jist to keep from bein stuck deown out there among the weeds and briers, but now I'm willin tew go whenever the Lord calls. The homes of the dead of the village are neow as bright as the homes of its living, and changin from one to the other don't seem dreadful like it used tew. I've always been tidy in my home among the livin, and I'd like to be tidy in my home among the dead."

It is my father's delight to accompany my sisters when they go forth to strew fresh flowers on the tombs of our ancestors. On such occasions he favors them with long extracts from the genealogy. He never tires of discoursing of the career of the Johnsons of England, and in speaking of the trials and tribulations of Sir Archibald his face is at one moment flushed with righteous wrath, and at the next he becomes pathetic, and tears roll down his cheeks. He has now not only fully adopted our imported ancestors, but has also so fondly studied their history that he has come to firmly believe them of his own flesh and blood.

I was made aware of this the day after our grand funeral ceremonies when I said to my father, "So ends the grimmest, most protracted and elaborate practical joke ever perpetrated on the soil of New England."

"Joke, sir!" sternly cried my father, staring at me as though he thought me losing my wits. "Do you call that which has been wrought by the hand of Providence a joke? Let me never again hear you speak in that light manner of what the Lord has brought about. I am as certain as that I live that Sir Archibald Johnson was my great-grandfather. The proofs are so many and so strong that I cannot doubt them. Not a man in America doubts them. My son, what has been done may have been commenced in a spirit less serious than was befitting a work of such great gravity and importance, but all the time unknown to us God was guiding us aright. By his hand you were led to the tombs of our ancestors, and in all we have since done we have had his aid. Thus has our work been made to prosper and bring forth good fruit.

"How you can doubt that those whose remains we have so dutifully honored are our ancestors I cannot conceive, especially in the face of all the proofs you have brought home from the mother country. In the Bible we read that the patriarchs of old experienced certain internal physical commotions termed 'yearning of the bowels' when brought into the presence of those to whom they were united by ties of consanguinity. Formerly I could not understand the phenomenon, but now I never approach the tomb of Sir Archibald that I do not experience similar internal sensations in the region of the diaphragm, which I accept as a sign given me from one now in the other world."

My father, being thus curt and decided with me, his own son and fellow conspirator, convinced me that had any stranger dared to even so much as hint a suspicion that our imported ancestors were not all we claimed the old gentleman would have belabored the doubter with his cane.

As I had no desire to detract from the family enjoyment, I ever thereafter kept whatever light thoughts I may have had to myself. Indeed it was to me always a great pleasure to observe my sister Eleanor strewing fresh flowers with pious care upon the tomb of Lady Eleanor, her great-great-grandmother—by importation.

If there were any who were previously inclined to stand aloof from our family, the discourse of Rev. Walter Mowbray brought them into the fold of our friends. Still old Amariah Bradford was by no means disposed to at once admit that I was worthy of alliance matrimonially with a family of the "truest, bluest New England blood."

Charity Bradford, the wife of old Amariah, was in full sympathy with her daughter and through her mother Prudence was able to learn something of the state of her father's mind. She informed me that after he had listened attentively to the discourse of Rev. Mr. Mowbray her father had said in a conversation with her mother that, though a member of my family had landed at Salem in 1630, still it was 10 years later than the pilgrims, and, besides, arriving in an ordinary trading vessel was very different from coming over in the Mayflower.

However, as Lady Arbella Johnson seemed to have been of a very respectable Puritan family, her not coming to the country 10 years earlier might be overlooked. As her husband's name was Isaac, he was inclined to the belief that they were a genuinely God fearing pair. As for titles, they were all mere worldly vanities. He therefore pretended to care nothing at all for Sir Archibald and Lady Eleanor. He said they were probably persecutors of the righteous. Soon after this was reported to me I one day by chance found the Bradford of all the Bradfords at the cemetery contemplating with much satisfaction the tombs of Sir Archibald, Lady Eleanor and Lady Arbella. I remained aloof, being content with the knowledge that the leaven was working.

Upon consultation with Prudence we arrived at the conclusion that I might now safely "speak to her father." In a long time he had said nothing about Standish Bradford and had winked at my escorting Prudence to and from the "gatherings" of the young folks.

When I bearded "the Bradford" in his den, he gave his consent to my making Prudence Mrs. Johnson, but almost in the same breath plainly gave me to understand that through Lady Arbella and her husband Isaac, as the earliest representatives of the Johnson family in New England, we need never expect to rank with the true blue Bradfords. As for Sir Archibald and Lady Eleanor, he said he looked upon them as mere vanities not to be taken into consideration for a moment in a country where titles are unknown and despised.

Captain Shrimp was delighted when the seal of secrecy was removed from his tongue and he was at liberty to speak openly of the important part he had played during the courtship. My father was taken completely by surprise. He had been so absorbed in the "grave" affairs to which he had long devoted his time that he had never thought of such a thing as my taking a wife in Pasonagessit. He did not go out to the cemetery for a week, but gave his whole time to the genealogical tree, making many measurements for the new branches that must soon be added. My sisters were "not at all surprised." They "had had their eyes open."

On the occasion of my wedding I surprised Prudence with a number of articles of jewelry I had caused to be made in London. On a bracelet I had a beautifully engraved representation of the Mayflower and the landing of the pilgrims. Then other articles were adorned with the mayflower of old England (the hawthorn blossom), and the blossom of the trailing arbutus, the mayflower of New England, composed of suitable precious stones.

I think the placing of the mayflower in some shape on every article of jewelry that I gave Prudence had its effect upon the Bradford of all the Bradfords, as he warmed to me wonderfully after the wedding. One day when he had been particularly good I gave him one of the silver gilt buttons taken from the grave of my great-great-grandfather. He said it was "a thing of vanity," yet his eyes sparkled as he took it.

My father, as time passes, devotes himself more and more to his genealogical records and almost daily regales some one with the exploits of old Geoffroi at the sacking of Thetfort by the Danes. Of late he has developed some new symptoms. In all seriousness he one day said to me: "Sam, my dear boy, I am out of place here. Indeed we are all out of place. We should be in England. I am really and truly Sir James Archibald Johnson and your mother Lady Jane Johnson. I ought to take our genealogical record, go back to the mother country and claim my rights there. That would place us all in our proper position." Privately he sneers at the descendants of the pilgrim fathers as "persons of no blood," and publicly (in Pasonagessit) he scorns all who are not able to prove their descent from the pilgrim fathers as "persons without ancestors."

I surprised Prudence with a number of articles of jewelry.

In carrying through to an efficacious conclusion our scheme for curing the Pasonagessit people of their ailment, it is very evident that my father has absorbed a very malignant type of the very disorder we sought to eradicate. So I find that in all good works we must expect some drawbacks. Absolute perfection is almost unattainable, even in the most pure, noble and praiseworthy undertakings in which we can embark.

CHAPTER I.

THE CRY IN THE NIGHT.

The night had grown very dark. Black clouds were drifting over the moon and fast blotting out the somber light of the cold stars.

As I leaned from the carriage and with straining eyes vainly sought to pierce the gloom of the night the soughing of the wind through the great pines foretold the oncoming storm.

A feeling of intense depression seized me. Why had I come? At this moment I wished myself miles away. What a senseless quest this upon which I had entered! Suppose I were to find my old friend; would she be glad to see me? Was it not an unpardonable intrusion to arrive thus, unheralded, at dead of night? Was there, in fact, any greater imbecile on earth than I, driving here, near midnight, over miles of rough country road in search of Portia Vane?

Ten years had gone by since Portia and I were graduated from the Canadian convent in which we had spent four happy, uneventful years. During that time we were as inseparable as any schoolgirl friends. I had idolized the beautiful, amiable southern girl, whose tales of plantation life in all its tropical color and indolence had completely captivated me. Born and brought up in a rigid northern atmosphere, the glimpses I got through her conversation and letters of Portia's home life were visions of fairyland. Portia was stately, clever and talented. I was poor, inferior and plain. But the loveliest and wealthiest girl in the convent singled me out as her friend, and my gratitude and devotion to her were unbounded.

After our graduation we corresponded for two years, during which time I was employed in teaching and laying by money, for I intended some day to visit Portia in her southern home. She wrote me of her approaching marriage, urging me to be one of her bridesmaids, which pleasure I was forced to forego.

I received a few letters after her marriage, in which she spoke in glowing terms of her new life. Then I heard no more. We drifted apart, as all school friends invariably do.

It is always the unexpected which happens. Whoever would have fancied that from his numerous train of relatives my uncle, John Mason, would have selected me, poor Prudence Mason, as the heir to his great property? When I had finished gasping over the announcement his lawyers made me, my first thought was of Portia, and that I would seek her at once to tell her the good news. Perhaps we might travel together; perhaps she was poor and needed assistance. Possibly there were children for whom I might do something. Remember an obscure plain teacher has few frends, and never in all my desolate, colorless existence had I so clung to any human being as to Portia Vane. I thought of her now as the carriage went jolting through this wilderness over the uneven roads, occasionally banging against a stump or the root of a tree. I saw her sweet face and heard again her gentle voice and remembered all her gracious and kindly acts.

"Will we soon be there?" I asked my driver.

He was a typical specimen of the southern "cracker," and in the monotonous, mellow accents borrowed from the negroes drawled out:

"Putty soon, ma'am. It ah 'bout tu mile. Soon's we uns git by Dead Man's swamp ye kin see the lights down yondah."

"Dead Man's swamp!" I repeated involuntarily, "What a horrible—a dismal name."

"Dismal place, tu," he replied, "thah hain't white noh niggah dah go in thah at night. All sorts o' curus an awful goin's on thah."

"What do you mean?" I asked.

"Waal," he droned, "I hardly know myself what I du mean. Thet's it. You know, ma'am. thet it's the mystery, thet's what skahs. Now, if ye knows what's happened, it takes half the scah off, but if thah's only stories an nobody willin to find out it's kind o' awful. Anyway, I kin tell ye this much—thah's lights seen in thah at midnight and terrible sounds heard. An some says, an they don't hahdly like to whispah the word, thet thah's whah the voodoos meet."

"The voodoos?" I said.

"Yes, niggahs, ye know, what do unearthly things—eat dead babies, tah out folks' hearts an play with sahpents"——

"Oh, don't tell me anything more!" I exclaimed. "I've read of them."

"Waal, ma'am, it is somethin disgustin an awful to think on. I'm allus powahful glad when I'm past the place."

A few rods farther the great forest broke away a little, and in the pallid light I could discern under the scattered trees stretches of morass, black, slimy and filthy. From the gaunt trees the long gray moss hung like lifeless figures dangling and dipping in the sullen surface of the stagnant pools. The swamp seemed interminable, reaching away in endless gloom under the low hanging branches. The moon came out from the clouds for one moment and sent a cheerless light down on the forbidding scene, but quickly withdrew, as if alarmed at what she saw.

It was a frightful place—weird and uncanny. The wind shuddered through the trees, and ghostly shadows seemed to lurk beneath their swaying, writhing branches.

"What a horrible place!" I exclaimed.

"Horrible? Yes, this hyah is Dead Man's swamp," whispered my companion.

Though I was oppressed by these hideous surroundings, yet I was at the same time unaccountably fascinated, and leaning out I looked as far into the black vistas as the waning moonlight would permit. It seemed to my excited fancy that the trees beckoned me, and that the moaning wind muttered that this awful place held secrets for me. I was conscious of a strange mental exaltation—almost a clairvoyancy. Away, away in the depths of that melancholy swamp was there not something calling me?

Hark! What was that?

With a frantic grasp I clutched my companion's arm as out of the night, out of this dismal swamp, trembled and shrilled an awful cry like the wail of the judgment day.

It reverberated through those black mysterious avenues and was caught up by a hundred mocking echoes, then slowly died away.

"My God! what is it?" I cried.

"They're at it," whispered my driver, and he struck the tired horses a smart blow, which sent them flying over sticks, stones and roots of trees. On, on we dashed in our wild flight from a cry.

It was not repeated.

The dead silence that followed by its contrast made the remembrance more appalling.

THE INCOME TAX.

There is a good deal of pious hypocricy in the Republican objection to the income tax, because it is a class tax.

The Republican party never gave us anything but a class tax. Class legislation has been the delight of the Republican; in such it has reveled and held high carnival for a quarter century. The only apparent reason for it to raise this cry at this late hour is that the income tax is not class legislation. It is simply a recognition of that old principle that has actuated every state, county and municipality in the United States for a hundred years in local taxation, that the expenses of government should be borne in proportion to benefits derived. This, with ability to pay are alwayss conidered by the common people in levying taxes and that is all.

If the income tax is a class tax, and therefore unfair, the only just tax would be a direct poll tax. What would granny P.-I., for instance, say should a bill be passed by a Washington legislature providing that the revenue of this state, its counties, cities and towns should be raised by a direct poll tax?

It is all bosh. The income tax is one of the fairest taxes ever divised. That is why the people want it.

WELL, WHAT OF IT?

The Post-Intelligencer is as mad as a hornet because all of its taunts and prophesies that the Democrats were too much rent and torn to get together on the tariff question are to come to naught

The imminent passage of the Wilson bill has given the old granny the hysteria, and of course to its sectional and narrow mind the worst thing it can say about the Democrats is that their party is controlled by the south.

Well, what of it? Why has not the South as much right to have its say as any other part of the United States? Your worm eaten old party is controlled by the tariff beneficiaries of the North East. There you are!

A dancing puppet that bows its shallow head and bends its weak knees, whenever Mat Quay's high tariff whip cracks, should not talk of sectionalism.

EVERY assistance and all encouragement should be shown Messrs. Seymour, Barto & Company, whose Mr. Edmund Seymour is here investigating the condition of the First National Bank securities with the re-opening of that institution in view.

This is a splendid and strong company and the fact that we could name it amongst our friends would of itself be a great thing, to say nothing of the interest we have in seeing the bank opened up for business.

Messrs. Seymour, Barto & Co., have large interests in New York City where their main house is and their investment in this city would bring us into closer touch with the financial world, consequently we would sooner feel the improvement in times when it occurs than otherwise.

THE Olympian-Tribune tells of a young lady who was so modest she would not retire as long as there was a copy of the Christian Observer in the room. Wonder if she would object to the Skokane Review?—Tacoma Herald.

Or the Snohomish Eye? Tacoma Union.

Or the La Conner Mail?—Bellinghan Bay Express.

Or the Hamilton Spectator?—Tacoma Herald.

She might if the Chehalis Bee flew in.—Seattle Telegraph.

Yes, and she would have an elegant kick coming if she happened to spy the Walla Walla Statesman or the Oaksdale Sun in the room. Olympian-Tribune.

What would she do if she should discover a Washington Workman in her room?—Chehalis Bee.

Probably she would summon the Whatcom Champion and thereafter keep the Shelton Sentinel at the door.—Seattle Telegraph.

IT is now conceded that Representative Bland's bill for the coinage of the silver seigniorage will pass the House and the Senate and be signed by President Cleveland. This means about $54,000,000 more money for circulation. The desires of the people seem to have a good deal of weight with the present administration after all.

FROM all sections of the state comes one chorus of condemnation of Governor McGraw for his hasty and indecent action in removing Hon. John McReavy from the capitol commission. Irrespective of party, John McReavy has held the confidence of the people of this state, and from a standpoint of pnblic policy it would seem that Gov. McGraw should have acted otherwise.

THE president has appointed Mathew E. Logan, of Spokane, to be register of the U. S. land office at that place.

Richmond W. Star, recent candidate for attorney-general, has been appointed to the same office at Waterville, Douglas county. Both are good appointments.

JERRY SIMPSON says money might be made out of Baled Hay. Well, Bill Nye did it. But he did it for fun, while Mr. Simpson is painfully serious.—Tacoma News.

Of course Jerry is serious. He could become wealthy by coining his surplus hayseed should this favorite scheme be adopted.

THE Tribune-Times has blossomed out into a full-fledged calamity howler. It prohesies dire disaster and hard times for a long time to come—probably for generations. Great Scott! How the mighty hath fallen!

THERE was a time when the worst our calamity howling neighbor on the Cherry street piles could say of an enemy was to call him a calamity howler. What a change time hath wrought!

He says: "I contracted a cold early last spring that settled on my lungs, and had hardly recovered from it when I caught another that hung on all summer and left me with a hacking cough which I thought I never would get rid of. I had used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy some fourteen years ago with much success, and concluded to try it again. when I had got through with one bottle my cough had left me, and I have not suffered with a cough or cold since. I have recommended it to others, and all speak well of it." 50 cent bottles for sale by J. C. Hansen, the Fisher Pharmacy.

COUNTY NEWS.

Interesting Paragraphs Gathered From the County Press.

Beaver Leader.

Supervisor Brown is working a force of men on the road between the postoffice and the prairie. This portion of the road bed is much in need of repair.

Clallam county is getting in the position of being no longer a dependency of any other section of the state. We have resources enough and scenery enough to do business for ourselves in thoroughly independent fashion.

Mr. Joe McAleer, one of the most prosperous and progressive ranchers on the upper Solduck, came down from his ranch Monday. Mr. McAleer will soon begin slashing twenty-five acres of timber by way of adding to his already extensive improvements.

The Clallam county boys who have gone to the South African gold fields will, if the latest reports are true, soon wish they were back in good old Clallam where salt salmon, clams and potatoes can always be had and where a sturdy young fellow can put an axe and a gunny sack full of grub on his back and find 160 acres of the best land that lies out of doors; all furnished him as a homestead from the United States government. This is the best country in the world anyhow.

The mountains, streams and lakes of the region about the headwaters of the Solduck and neighboring streams form a field for exploration with rod, gun and camera that can hardly be equalled in the United States. The coming summer should see a large influx of pleasure-seekers in quest of this form of amusement. Magnificent mountains, glaciers lakes and hot springs are sights that rank with the best. Much of the territory has been little explored and novelty will add zest to the pleasure of the trip.

We were both relieved when we turned into a broad avenue lined on either side by a double row of pines, at the end of which lights could be seen.

I clutched my companion's arm.

"Thah is Swamplands, Kunnel Mahchmont's place," said the driver, "an thah hain't a finah plantation in Georgah. Lord! I can't go back to town tonight nohow. I'll ask Jake to put my team up an let me sleep yah some human critah. An I reckon, ma'am, yeah powerful glad to be at yoh jouhney's end."

I did not answer. Before me rose the great corinthian pillars and broad porticoes of the house of Portia Marchmont. I was trembling from apprehension.

What if she were not at home? Would we be obliged to return over the dismal road we had come? Should I again hear that doleful cry? My nerves were stretched to their utmost tension as we drew up in front of the great house.

I looked at my watch. Half past 11 o'clock.

The hall door was wide open, and a flood of light poured out upon the broad piazza. As I looked a shadow moved from out a dark corner. A figure drifted into the doorway. It was a woman, tall, graceful, dressed in white. Something in her graceful, languorous movement set the wheels of memory rolling.

I forgot my doubts, my fears, my terror.

"Portia!" I cried.

CHAPTER II.

PORTIA.

There was no answer.

The woman stood motionless as if carved from stone.

"Portia!" I cried again.

Slowly she moved across the piazza.

"Who calls me?" she asked.

"Portia, it is I—your old friend, Prudence Mason. Oh, do not tell me you have forgotten me—that you are not glad to see me. I have come so far," and choked with my emotion I hurried up the steps, holding out my arms to her.

The light from the huge bronze lamp in the hall shone straight upon my hostess. I saw the face of which I had so often thought—the face of my old friend.

Why, what was it?

I stopped, dazed and bewildered. This was not Portia!

I had prepared myself for a great change in my friend. I had not looked to see the girl. I remembered the morning we bade each other farewell, but had anticipated seeing an older, a maturer Portia, in whose features I yet might trace the lines and expression of my friend of long ago.

But this cold, proud—yes, insolent—faced woman, where were the amiability, the sweetness and the tenderness I remembered? Vanished—all—and in their stead I remarked only disdain and vexation.

She saw my surprise, my hesitation—yes, my alarm—and a singular expression crept in her face, an expression of mingled cunning and dread.

"Why, you are not Portia!" I stammered.

"Oh, yes, I am," she replied, with a light laugh—"yes, and very glad to see you, Prudence. It was good of you to come so far. You think I have changed? So I have. But I am Portia," and she bent and kissed me.

The caress was intolerable. I could have screamed when her cold lips touched mine. Ah, how different a reception I had pictured! What did it mean? Was it she who was changed or I? She led me in, with many polite inquiries, uttered in perfunctory and mechanical fashion. Servants were summoned; tea was brewed; my bags and wraps taken; everything that the most punctilious hostess could do for a guest was done for me. And yet through all these kindly offices I was conscious of a vague feeling of uneasiness and distrust.

Under the glow of the great drawing room chandelier I studied Portia's face closely. What was it? Where was the great change which seemed to separate the friend of my youth from me as by a gulf. There was the same lustrous hair, untinged by a thread of silver; there were the great almond shaped liquid eyes, like black velvet; the same faultlessly faultless features; the same ivorylike complexion. But the soul was gone from the face; the essence of an exquisite nature no longer looked out from the eyes. It was Portia and yet not Portia.

She caught my intent scrutiny.

"I have grown old, Prudence," she said in answer to my inquiring looks, "and our southern climate has not improved my complexion. Then, too, I have lived a monotonous life, have been very much alone, and that, you know, is not good for one," and then she laughed.

I recalled Portia's laugh—mirth provoking, contagious, hearty. I could hear again its silvery sweetness ringing through the leafy avenues of the old convent gardens. My hostess' laugh was hollow, sinister and harsh, like the crackling of thorns under a pot. Had the years wrought a complete revolution in her character as well as her face?

"I am sorry Colonel Marchmont is not at home," she said after she had graciously pressed a second cup of tea upon me. "He went to Atlanta last week. I expect him back very soon—possibly tomorrow."

"You have children, Portia?"

"One," she replied coldly, as if the subject were obnoxious—"a little girl 6 years old—a headstrong little creature. I can do nothing with her. I'm glad I have but one."

I looked at her in amazement. I had often thought of Portia as a mother. How tender, loving and womanly she would be in that relation! I had pictured her holding a baby on her breast and looking down at it with that divine expression only to be seen in a young mother's eyes, and I had fancied her surrounded by merry, romping, happy children. Her scarcely veiled distaste for maternity shocked me.

"You must be very weary, Prudence," she said after a little. "If you like, I will show you to your room."

As I was only too anxious to be alone, I signified my wish to retire at once.

Rising, my hostess took from the mantel a tall silver candlestick and led the way through the wide hall and up the old time winding stairs.

I followed, with a strange sinking at my heart. My reception, though courteous, had been utterly mechanical. I saw my blunder in having thrust an unsolicited visit upon an old friend who, alas! was not the friend of old. I reflected, however, that it was not necessary to prolong my stay and decided that as soon as possible I would return north with my stock of disillusions, which now weighed upon me like the burden on Pilgrim's shoulders.

The room into which Portia led me was large and gloomy. There were a vast four posted bed and a huge wardrobe with carved panels. A fireplace with ancient andirons, mahogany table, chairs and old fashioned lounge, made up the main furnishings of the apartment. There were quaint gilt candelabra on the marble mantle, and a few portraits of dead and gone Marchmonts adorned the walls. The only modern piece of furniture was a tall cheval glass standing directly opposite the enormous windows, which, by the way, opened on a balcony running the entire side of the house.

Below is given a short biography of the author of this story, which will be continued from week to week:

Edith Sessions Tupper has the talent, the industry, the pluck and the power of application, that are better than genius and are often mistaken for it. She has won her high reputation in literature legitimately and is today as widely and favorably known as any other writer of her sex. Mrs. Tupper is a daughter of Hon. Walter H. Sessions, an ex-member of congress, and was born at his home in Chautauqua county, N. Y. Her formal education was received in the public schools and at Vassar college. She began to write for the Buffalo Express at an early age, sending it letters, character sketches and stories.

In 1887 she launched out for a career in Chicago, where she soon made a reputation by her brilliant work on The Herald and Inter Ocean. She was the winner of the Chicago Tribune's $500 prize, offered for the best long story. There were 200 competitors. The work has since been published in book form. She finally removed to New York city, where she soon took her place among the most versatile and talented literary women in a circle of brilliant journalists and writers. Since her entrance into newspaper life she has furnished an enormous amount of correspondence, and her work for the great New York dailies, as well as the better class of periodical literature, is of decided merit. She is one of the few successful women interviewers in New York. Lillian

EDITH SESSIONS TUPPER.

Russell, the actress, says she would rather be interviewed by Mrs. Tupper than by any other reporter, for she never misrepresents. Mrs. Tupper's own amusing estimate of the trials and difficulties attendant upon interviewing women is in itself worth quoting. She says:

"Having received an intimation that the lady will grant an interview, one must fortify one's self for delay, disappointment and continual torment, for rarely is the interview obtained at the appointed hour. When you have gained an audience, you will wait until patience ceases to be a virtue. Then she comes to you with languor, indifference, condescension or cordiality, as the mood may be. The successful business woman is a capital subject for the interviewer. She is yet a novelty—not a back number, like the actress and the agitator. She is educated, broad, original, daring in her advertising methods and often possesses a unique and picturesque personality. She has luxurious surroundings, handsome jewels and gowns, and knows all sorts of famous and interesting persons. She is a rich mine to the zealous digger for gossip, and from the tints of her corsets to the creams she uses for her daily massage she furnishes invaluable material for the assiduous interviewer."

In 1890 Mrs. Tupper had an experience which was decidedly sensational and quite as unpleasant. It is well worth recounting. She went to Toronto to visit relatives, and when she reached that city she was placed under arrest on the supposition that she was one Mary Wilson, who was wanted by the Buffalo police for robbing the house of her employer of property valued at $3,000. Mrs. Tupper had a through ticket, return coupon and various letters and other evidence with her that she was not the person wanted, but the inspector of police of Toronto declined to release her until he heard from Buffalo. Mrs. Tupper did not answer the description of the thief in many important particulars, but in spite of this, however, she was detained two hours before she was allowed to go and treated in an extremely brutal manner. Her own account of the affair is in part as follows:

"What is your name?"

"Edith Sessions Tupper," I answered, with a violent effort. What was the matter with my voice, and why did my tongue seem paralyzed?

"You travel under the name of Mary Wilson, do you not?" he demanded.

"No," I said. "I do not."

"You got the check, didn't you?" he asked the detective who had brought me in.

"Oh, yes, I've got the check all right enough," he answered.

"She answers the description very well," went on Sergeant Reburn, reading a dispatch he held in his hand: "'Arrest Mary Wilson. Wanted for stealing goods. About 20, blue eyed, brown haired, ladylike in appearance.'"

I interrupted him. "But I am not Mary Wilson. You must see for yourself that I am over 20, and I am by no means slim. I am no thief, and if you will send for Dr. —," naming a woman physician who stands at the head of her profession in Canada, and whose house was only a few blocks from headquarters, "or Mr. —," a prominent business man, "or Mr. —," a well known journalist, a member of the staffs of the Toronto Globe and Toronto Saturday Night, "any one of them can and will identify me."

Sergeant Reburn is one of that class of policemen who believe that the best way to examine a person under suspicion is to yell at them. This he proceeded to do.

"Understand me now," he savagely roared, "you are a prisoner. You might as well understand that first as last. You can no more get out of here than I can move the stones of this building. The chief of police of Buffalo wires me to arrest the woman presenting check No. 22,479. He also wires me to arrest Mary Wilson, dressed in a greenish dress"——

"Well, see, mine is navy blue."

"That's a sort of green," he snapped. "Besides, here's another message saying you have changed your clothes on the way over."

"Oh, well," I said wearily. "I see you are determined that I am the thief, and you will not give me an opportunity to tell you who and what I am. I wish to prove to you that I am not Mary Wilson, but Edith Sessions Tupper."

"Where do you come from?" he demanded.

"From Panama, N. Y.," I answered. "I left there this morning with my father, who accompanied me to Brocton. From there I came along to Buffalo."

"Who is your father?"

"Walter L. Sessions, a man well known in New York state."

"Have you any business?"

"I am a newspaper correspondent."

"A newspaper correspondent!" with an air of utter disbelief.

"Yes," I said determinedly, for I was beginning to get a little courage. "Yes. I am well known in Buffalo. If you will wire any of the newspaper offices—The Express, The Courier, The Times, I don't care which—any of them will gladly identify me. I have worked for The Express. Telegraph this Buffalo chief of police to send to The Express and find out who I am."

Mrs. Tupper was not permitted to communicate with friends, nor did the officers act on the suggestions she made that would prove her identity. Her trunk was searched, and the detective, "finding nothing which by the wildest stretch of imagination could be termed valuables, restored my keys. To brother detectives who had come in and were staring at me as if I were some new species of wild animal I heard him say, 'There's absolutely nothing against her but the number of the check.'"

Finally this message was sent to Buffalo:

We find check on woman who says she is Edith Sessions Tupper, and that she has been correspondent of the Buffalo Express. She has also a pass from Panama, N. Y., to Buffalo and return by the W. N. Y. & P. R. R. Is this the woman you want?

Then followed an agonizing wait of 2½ hours, during which Mrs. Tupper was put through another examination. Mrs. Tupper tells what followed:

At last—nearly 1 o'clock—a messenger boy ran up the stairs with a telegram. My heart seemed to stop beating, and through a mist I saw the room—the open door—the next room, where, with folded arms and a pitying expression on his face, stood a young, fair haired detective, the only one who had given me a kind word through all that fearful ordeal—and Reburn bending his dark face over the yellow document.

"He wants me to hold you," were the words I heard, "but I'm not going to do it. It would be as absurd to hold you as it would be to hold a man. I don't believe Morin ever went near the Buffalo Express office to find out who you are."

He paused. The fair haired detective—God bless him!—sent me a kindly smile and gradually the blessed truth stole upon me that I was not to be locked up in a cell.

"Wait a moment," said Reburn suddenly. "Give me your keys."

Once again I saw my poor, simple little cotton and muslin frocks tumbled over and the mysteries of my wardrobe laid bare. Then I broke down and sobbed aloud, but only for a moment or two, for Reburn's sharp "Now, there's no use of your doing that" quickly made me resummon all my pride. He replaced the articles in my trunk; then, taking up the telegram, read it slowly aloud. It was in substance as follows:

"One of our officers leaves for Toronto at 11 o'clock. Wilson girl has short hair or switch tied on behind. Trunk contains silk dress, lace dress, gold watch, jewelry, towels, nightgowns. Hold this woman anyway."

I hope every free American citizen who reads this story will carefully note the malicious insanity of this message. Morin gave a test by which Mary Wilson could be positively identified, but added, "Hold this woman anyway." No matter if she be innocent, hold her. You've got her in your power. Hold her. Make her suffer all you can.

And right here I want to give Sergeant Reburn all the justice due him. Harsh and autocratic as he was, I can never forget that he had the humanity to release me in the face of that peremptory and cruel order from Buffalo.

"Take off your hat and let me see your hair," he said.

I obeyed. The only beauty with which nature has gifted me is wonderfully long and thick hair. I unpinned the plaits and let them down. Even then the sergeant could not believe his eyes.

"That's a switch tied on, isn't it?" he asked.

Then I removed the string which confined my hair close to my head, and the two braids fell over my shoulders—indisputably my own hair and not another's. With a half muttered exclamation of disgust, Sergeant Reburn tossed Morin's message on his desk.

"You are discharged," he said.

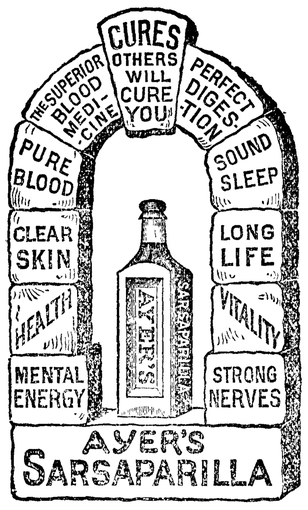
Mrs. Tupper was then driven to the house of a sister-in-law, and thus she concludes her story:

It is yet a mystery why the mere fact that Mary Wilson went from Buffalo to Toronto should have been deemed sufficient ground for Morin to intercept a woman who chanced to pass through Buffalo en route for Toronto the day the robbery was committed. The imbecility of Morin's detective methods is only equaled by the brutality of his final message to Reburn.

Such is a chapter of international outrage. I give it to the American public for their consideration. I especially beg American men to remember that their wives, sisters or daughters may be subjected to just such fearful ordeals unless the police system of this country is radically reformed. I would respectfully call my government's attention to the manner in which an American citizen may be treated in a foreign city—refused a privilege which would scarcely be denied a suspected nihilist in Russia.

And if, by giving my sad story to the reading public, I can in any remote fashion shield one sensitive, refined woman from the agony, shame, suspense, indignity and torture I endured on that frightful night, I shall feel that I have not told it in vain.

Mrs. Tupper has written many short stories and some poetry. She has a pleasant home on the banks of the Passaic, in New Jersey, where most of her work is done. She is thoroughly domestic in her tastes, though necessarily much in public places, and is the wife of Mr. Horace E. Tupper, a gentleman connected with the Erie railroad. Mrs. Tupper is young, handsome, and her big eyes are fine and expressive. Her story "A Transferred Identity" is considered one of the best that has yet come from her prolific pen.



M. Hammerly, a well-known business man of Hillsboro, Va., sends this testimony to the merits of Ayer's Sarsaparilla: "Several years ago, I hurt my leg, the injury leaving a sore which led to erysipelas. My sufferings were extreme, my leg, from the knee to the ankle, being a solid sore, which began to extend to other parts of the body. After trying various remedies, I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, before I had finished the first bottle, I experienced great relief; the second bottle effected a complete cure."

Are acceptable to the stomach and truly beneficial in effects. A single TABULE taken after the evening meal, or just before retiring, or, better still, at the moment when the first indication is noted of an approaching cold, headache, any symptom of indigestion or depression of spirits, will remove the whole difficulty in an hour without the patient being conscious of any other than a slightly warming effect, and that the expected illness failed to materialize or has disappeared.

Disease commonly comes on with slight symptoms, which when neglected increase in extent and gradually grow dangerous.

A Word About the Times.

Have You Decided.

To buy your Groceries as they should be bought. If we are not receiving your patronage we would ask you to kindly remember that we are the leading Grocers of the State; that now-a-days a concern to get to the front and stay there, must be hustlers Our business extends to all parts of the State and to far-off Alaska.

Surely, if others can save money by trading with us, you can do the same. If a saving of fifteen to twenty cents can be made on one single dollar of Groceries by buying from us, how many dollars can be saved during the year?

This Month

We are offering better values than ever. Take advantage of our prices and buy your Groceries with the srme common sense you use in buying anything else to the best advantage.

Our Best—This is the name of a brand of Baking Powder put up expressly for us—It is the very best baking powder that money and brains can manufacture. We claim it equal to the "Royal" or "Prices" and offer it for much less money. In place of spending thousands of dollars in advertising, and adding this cost to the price of the Powder, we have decided to introduce it among our customers. Royal and Prices baking powder are first-class, still these people spend hundreds of thousands of dollars in keeping their names before the people. Who do you suppose pays for all this? You and everybody who buys their powder. Try a can of OUR BEST POWDER in your next order; if it is not fully as represented return it and we will cheerfully refund your money. Compare these prices with Royal and recollect what we say regarding the quality of OUR BEST BAKING POWDERS. Full weight—guaranteed.
