Our Timber Resources.

EAST CLALLAM, Feb. 18—The schooner Laura Madsen is loading spruce lumber for San Francisco and will sale Wednesday with 500,000 feet. The schooner J. B. Leeds is on her way from San Francisco to take also a cargo of spruce. These cargoes are part of an order which the Earles & Donahue Mill Company is now cutting for Hobbs, Wall & Co., of San Francisco. It is for 5,000,000 feet of spruce boards and will be used for making boxes, furniture and inside finishing of houses. The shipment of spruce from this port may be said to be a growing trade, and the East Clallam mill is the only one on the Sound that makes a specialty of sawing and cutting spruce. The mill was recently enlarged and its capacity increased from 20,000 to 40,000 feet per day. At the present time a resaw machine is being put in which will bring the cutting capacity up to 60,000 feet and will keep a line of four schooners steadily employed carrying lumber to San Francisco.

A Forty Mile Ride.

E. R. Swetnam, of Fairfax Station, Virginia, says: "A party came forty miles to my store for Chamberlin's Cough Remedy and bought a dozen bottles. The remedy is a great favorite in this vicinity and has performed some wonderful cures here." It is intended especially for coughs, colds, croup and whooping cough and is a favorite where known.

For sale by J. C. Hansen, the Fisher Pharmacy.

Messrs. Henry Bennett and James O'Donnell, from up-sound, came in last Saturday and are at present staying with William Bergerson. They are in quest of land, and will, as soon as the weather settles, take a look around. The two gentlemen are well pleased with what little they have seen of the valley and have great confidence in the future prosperity of the Quillayute. It is to be hoped they will find suitable claims in some good settlement.—Beaver Leader.

A Clallam county rancher is the editor of the Seattle Press-Times. This is Mr. Samuel R. Fraizier, who has a valuable claim on Lake Crescent. Mr. Frazier is making a lively newspaper of the Press-Times, a task for which his wide and varied newspaper training admirably equip him.—Beaver Leader.

"Pete" Bergerson placed two more marks to his credit on the Hunters' calendar, this week says the Beaver Leader. This time he brings in the finest elk killed in this neighborhood for several months, and a very beautiful young deer. They were killed within two miles of Beaver. Game of all kinds seem to be very tame this winter and penetrate into the heart of the settlement, only to pay tribute to the unerring aim of some Quillayute hunter.

THE ANGELES-VICTORIA

Route—The Steamer Garland Will Commence Tuesday.

DIRECT COMMUNICATION WITH

Victoria—No Longer Something to Be Hoped For, But An Actual, Tangible and Accomplished Fact—The Board of Trade Worked Faithfully in Connection With the Victoria Board and Other Institutions.

For some time past the members of the Board of Trade have been hard at work on several propositions for the advancement of this city, one of them is the matter of a ferry between Angeles and Victoria. The following communications will explain themselves:

Office of Board of Trade,
PORT ANGELES, WN., Feb. 8th, '94.

To the Board of Trade of the City of Victoria, B. C.

GENTLEMEN: The Board of Trade of Port Angeles has, for several weeks past, been endeavoring to secure better transportation facilities between the city of Victoria and Port Angeles. We have many interests in common that would be greatly subserved if the means of communication between Victoria and Port Angeles could be made more direct, and we have finally obtained the consent of the Hastings Steamboat Company (which now has two steamers on the Seattle-Angeles route) to put on a regular steamer service between Angeles and Victoria, providing they can receive remission of pilotage dues and entrance and clearance fees at Victoria, from your customs department, which fees, taken together amount to about $20 per trip.

What the Hastings Company desires at the hands of your government is a "ferry permit" that will enable them to enter and clear, at your port without customs or pilotage charges, the boat they will put on the route between Angeles and Victoria. Unless they can obtain the permit, they will be unable to put on the boat and establish this service, for in the present condition of traffic, they could not operate the boat, save at a loss if they had to pay these fees.

At our urging the Hastings Steamboat Company has made formal application your proper officiols for this permit; and we request your honorable body, which has a clear understanding of the need of this service, and of the mutual benefits that its establishment will confer, to lend your active aid and influence to the end that their prayer to your government may be speedily granted.

Holding ourselves in readiness at all times, to render your honorable body any service that may be of value in forwarding any public work that you may have in hand, we are

Yours in full respect,
JAMES S. COOLICAN,
President.

M. J. CARRIGAN,
Secretary.

In answer to the above Colonel Coolican received the following reply:

British Columbia Board of Trade,
VICTORIA, B. C., Feb. 26th, 1894.

James S. Coolican, Esq., President, Board of Trade, Port Angeles, Wash.

DEAR SIR: I am directed by the president and council to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 5th instant in reference to transportation facilities between Port Angeles and this city.

This Board understands that the pilotage fees complained of have been conceded and it is hoped that the concession will enable the proposed service to be run successfully.

Yours faithfully,
F. ELWORTHY,
Secretary.

The value of this concession to the city of Port Angeles and the county of Clallam, can not be appreciated until our situation and the resources of the county are thoroughly understood. The island of Vancouver, on which is situated the city of Victoria, is almost barren, consequently every year there is shipped into that city thousands of dollars of farm produce.

A large quantity of this is shipped from Seattle and other points on the route of the Victoria steamers, in fact, Clallam county's produce is shipped first to Seattle then by boat back to Victoria.

The following paragraph, clipped from the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, would indicate that our neighbor across the Straits will need considerable of our farm produce this coming summer:

VICTORIA, Feb. 23 — On Thursday, March 1, a force of upwards of sixty marine artillerymen, with 120 Royal engineers and 100 or more civilian artisans, will commence the long-promised fortification of Esquimalt harbor, under the Maj. Muirhead, R. E., one of the most valued and efficient experts of the British war department. Already the coast territory from Macaulay point barracks (at the entrance of Victoria harbor) to the head of Esquimalt lagoon, a distance of four miles or more, has been surveyed and resurveyed, and at intervals squads of uniformed men have for weeks past been busy with the work of preparation for the important operations to come. These, it is expected, will consume two entire years and involve an expenditure of millions of pounds sterling.

Mr. Metcalfe, who has just returned from Victoria, reports that the people of that city are anxious for us to trade with them.

Angeles-Victoria Route.

Arrangements are being made to run the steamer Garland to Victoria after March 1st. Captain L. B. Hastings, of the Hastings' steamboat company was in Victoria a few days ago and succeeded in making an arrangement, which he says, is perfectly satisfactory, by which the Garland will go to the British Columbia capital three times a week. The chief drawback in the matter has been the excessive charges to foreign vessels at the port of Victoria, but this has been ebviated by agreement satisfactory all around.—Clallam Record.

The Band Boys of Dungeness Give an Excellent Concert.

[Special to the DEMOCRAT-LEADER.]

DUNGENESS, Feb. 24.—Our male quartette cannot be beaten for amateurs.

J. E. Baker a late Eastern arrival is an artist of great talent.

The duet by Messrs. Holden and Slack brought tears to many eyes.

Geo. Hunt surpasses Mark Twain for comical reading.

Lewis Cays is strictly in it and will make a great hit some day.

Chas. Slack is our original Bill Nye and deserves great credit.

The darkey sketch by Lew Thompson and Mark Miner brought down the house.

Geo. Davis surprised all by his song and his voice is improving greatly.

The vocal solo rendered by Harry Holden was a treat. He was encored repeatedly.

Mr. Danforth, although a stranger here, found a tender spot in the audience, and we hope to hear from him again.

Holden and Thompson were applauded for their appreciated part.

The selection by the band was very rare—

The dance held in the hall was well attended and enjoyed by all who were there.

An elegant midnight supper at Hotel Groveland finished off the day.

The soul is safe in heaven.

If You Burn Yourself

The pain from slight burns is very great. An excellent application is a thick paste of common baking soda moistened with water, spread on a piece of linen or cotton, and bound on the part, writes Elisabeth Robinson Scovil in an article on "What to Do in Emergencies" in the March Ladies' Home Journal. This can be kept wet by squeezing water on it from a sponge or cloth until the smarting is soothed.

A thick coating of starch can be used instead of the soda, or wheat flour if nothing better can be had, but neither should be applied if the skin is broken. In this case it is better to use vaseline, olive or linseed oil. The doctor will apply some preparation containing carbolic acid.

If the air can be effectually excluded from a burn the pain is relieved.

Blisters should be pricked and the fluid absorbed with a soft cloth before dressing.

If the clothing adheres to the skin the loose part should be cut away and the patches of material soaked off with oil or warm water.

When the injury is extensive the sufferer will be prostrated and may die from the shock. Heat should be applied to the extremities and over the heat, and hot drinks given until the doctor comes.

In burns from a strong acid the part should be covered with dry baking soda or lime, as the alkali will neutralize the acid. No water should be used, but cosmoline or oil applied after the alkali has been brushed off.

When the burn has been caused by an alkali an acid must be used. A person recovering from the effects of a burn requires very nourishing food.

Any person desiring to travel would do well to consult J. H. Young, Agent Canadian Pacific R. R., this city, before purchasing tickets elsewhere. Unrivaled accommodations. Quick time, and money saved by this route.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS

Meet and Transact Routine Business.

REGETALIONS ADOPTED FOR THOSE

Deserving County Aid—The Treasurer Will Give a New Bond When Required—Some New Road Districts Created and Road Supervisors Appointed—Supervisors Report.

The Board of County Commissioners adjourned Monday, after a five days session, having met on the 20th ult.

The most of the business transacted was of the routine order, but a goodly quantity of this had accumulated during the six weeks since the adjournment of the January session. The board met Tuesday, February 20th, all being present.

It was ordered that those who desire assistance from the county be required to subscribe to the following affidavit:

That he is a resident of the state of Washington and a resident of Clallam county in said State that he has resided in said Clallam county for * years; that he is a man of family, consisting of * * in number; that he is not the owner of any property in this state out of which he can raise sufficient money to make a living for himself and family; that his family is now in needy circumstances and are utterly unable to procure the necessaries of life and that he is willing to work for the county for $1.70 per day in county warrants.

The treasurer appeared before the Board in response to notice heretofore issued and entered into a written agreement to furnish an additional bond in a reasonable sum, to the county, provided he got all the funds, or a considerable portion thereof of a third or more at any one time, aad he agreed to notify the county commissioners ten days prior to using any of said money of its being subject to his order, that the county commissioners may have time to meet and accept said bond, whereupon it was agreed that said agreement be accepted and entered into.

The prosecuting attorney reported that bondsmen in the P. Hedley road case had paid him county warrants to the amount of the costs in said road. It was ordered that the same be accepted, the bondsmen exhonerated and the said warrants, amounting to $67.30, be cancelled.

Sections 25, 26, 27, 35 and 36, of township 29, range 14 west, were transferred from Road District No. 30 to Road District No. 13.

The Blyn voting precinct was extended to include all of Road Districts No. 15 and 47.

WEDNESDAY.

The board directed the treasurer to accept and receipt for $368.85 from Henry McAlmond as payment in full of all taxes due on the McAlmond donation claim for 1890, 1891 and 1892.

Application of S. P. Carusi for damages on account of laying out of a county road over his addition was laid over.

Several cost bill in justice court were approved as follows:

Before Justice Brewster, State vs. Chas. Patten and State vs. Sarah E. Gleason.

Before Justice Holden, State vs. Henderson.

Before Justice Carusi, State vs. Minnie Schneider.

The western two tiers of sections of township 31, range 15 and all of township 31, range 16 west, were laid out as a road district to be known as Road district No. 37, and W. L. Ferguson was appointed supervisor of the same.

Petition of citizens of Collins for a bridge across Bear creek was laid over as was one also for a bridge across the Elwha river at Settlers' bridge.

FRIDAY.

The board established Road District No. 38, to comprise the central portion of the region between Pysht and Clallam Bay and Beaver, taking in portions of Road Districts No. 9, 9½ and 21. Peter McNally was appointed supervisor thereof.

Thomas Reed was appointed supervisor of Road District No. 9½.

Application of citizens of Road District No. 25, for assistance was referred to the supervisor of said district.

Joseph Kunstle was appointed supervisor of Road District No. 33.

The following supervisors' reports were approved:

O. J. Austin, district 16; John Brown, 14; A. Hansmann, 30; E. A. Esworthy, 13; F. S. Stillwell, 5; W. S. Miller, 19; Samuel Nelson, 9½; L. H. Sawyer, 27; George Haehnle, 31; Chas. Gallagher, 8; E. J. Pearson, 44; W. H. Carpenter 45; Lyman Stevens, 35; Elias Cays, 25; R. T. Smith, 28; James Keltner, 21; Frank Lotzgasell, 4.

SATURDAY.

Report of Geo. Lamb of work done on west division of Burlingame's county road was approved.

The balance of the day was spent in examining and auditing claims against the county.

MONDAY.

It was ordered that the chairman of the board and the auditor be directed to exchange the safe in the treasurer's office for one suitable to be placed in the vault having a time lock.

Upon motion it was ordered that the chairman be directed to check over the time of those having been employed on the county roads by the commissioners.

The board took a recess subject to call of the chairman.

For Clallam County People by Hon. Marsh Atkisson.

Marsh Atkisson, special agent of the United States land office, returned yesterday from an extended trip to lower Clallam county. He was far into the interior and waded through a great deal of snow to reach some timber which he wished to examine. As on previous visits to this county Mr. Atkisson retnrns with words of praise for the hospitable people who took him in out of the inclement weather and treated him as if he were a long-lost brother.—Seattle Telegraph.

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

CENERAL DEBILITY CURED.

San Francisco, Cal., August 14, 1892.

Dr. A. T. Sanden, Dear Sir:—Before I used your belt I was troubled with lost vigor, vital weakness, and almost a complete loss of power. I would get up with a very tired feeling, bones aching, etc.; since using your belt I have had a new lease of life. I now enjoy life better than I have for ten years past. I have the utmost confidence in your treatment. You can publish this statement, also have others write or call on me. Truly yours, H. A. BOWEN, 26 and 28 Turk St.

RHEUMATISM AND LAMENESS CURED.

Portland, Oregon, April 18 1892.

Dr. A. T. Sanden, Dear Sir:—I got one of your belts two weeks ago for rheumatism, from which I suffered for several years. For the past six months I had not been able to work. Your belt has placed me in almost perfect health in the two weeks I have used it. I can walk comfortably, and feel like a new man generally. M. E. HUGHES, Proprietor International Hotel.

NERVOUS DEBILITY—LOSS OF VIGOR.

Tacoma, Wash., October 24, 1892.

LAME BACK AND RHEUMATISM.

Portland Oregon, September 26, 1892.

Dr. A. T. Sanden, Dear Sir:—Years of exposure and hard work, combined with the strain coming from the jar of an engine, gave me a severe case of lame back, from which I suffered for seven years. I was so bad that I could not bend my back. Was all doubled up with it. I bought one of your belts. It helped me inside of two days, and I continued to wear it for four months, being perfectly cured. That was two years ago, and I am as well to-day as I ever was in my life. I know your belt well, and I know lots of people who have been cured by it. Many others need it, and if they would try it they would find it the same as I did—the best remedy in the world. I am located here permanently, and will be glad to talk with any one who wants to inquire about it. ROBERT BURREL, Engineer Hotel Portland.

LOST VITALITY AND STRENGTH.

Everett, Wash, June 18, 1892.

Dr. A. T. Sanden, Dear Sir:—Since wearing your belt I have been greatly benefited. I feel my old energy fast returning; and after a month's use of the belt I find myself twice as vigorous as before. My memory is now nearly perfect, and each day shows for the better. I feel much stronger than before using the belt. Yours truly, HENRY SCHULTZ.

CHAPTER X.

MAURICE.

The morning dawned cheerless and gloomy. A storm was setting in. The dull gray clouds weighed upon the horizon even as my dreadful discovery oppressed my heart.

Life seemed intolerable. As I sat at breakfast and studied Portia's face—the face of a murderer—it was at times with difficulty that I kept from screaming aloud. I did not allow Daphne to go out of my sight, but kept her with me, amusing her in every possible way with toys and story books.

I was conscious, too, that Portia was watching me. She evidently possessed half defined suspicions, for once she asked me in a careless manner, which was palpably assumed, whether I had heard any unusual sounds about the house the night before. I said "no" and in return asked the reason of her inquiry. She replied she had slept lightly and would have said that once she heard the hall door shut.

"She is sounding me," I reflected and forthwith grew as cunning as my interlocutor.

"No," I said indifferently. "I heard nothing."

It was nearly noon when a carriage dashed up to the piazza, and a tall, fashionably dressed man alighted, looked about with some curiosity, paid the driver and then ran lightly up the front steps. Presently the great knocker resounded through the hall.

"A visitor," I said, with some interest, for visitors were not numerous at Swamplands.

Tom, the butler, came into the library carrying a card on a silver salver. Portia was lying on a broad couch drawn up before the open fire, sleeping or feigning sleep. She had not seen the carriage drive up and opened her big eyes lazily as Tom approached her.

"What is it?" she murmured languidly.

"A gem'man, missis."

Portia took the card and read it. She stared at the name before her in a dazed manner. At last she turned her bloodless face toward me.

"Prudence," she said, wearily passing her hand over her head.

"Yes, Portia," I answered, leaving Daphne in the window with her dolls and going over to her mother.

"Read that name—aloud," she commanded, thrusting the card in my hand.

I read, "Maurice Raymond."

"I could not see—then he has come," Portia muttered in incoherent, wandering fashion. Then sharply to Tom, "I will not see him."

Tom bowed gravely and was about to go, when I said: "Portia, is not this the guest you have been expecting? What would Colonel Marchmont say if you were to send such a message as that? Had you not better reconsider?"

"You see him, Prudence," she begged in an almost childish fashion. "I cannot go in now. I must go up stairs, dress and compose myself."

"Very well, Portia. I will do my best to entertain him until you are ready to relieve me. But do not tax me too long."

Portia did not reply, but rose and left the room. She appeared confused and helpless. Suddenly I recalled the prophecy of the old negress—"Dangeh is comin from de souf." Ah, perhaps the peril which had menaced Portia was at hand.

As I entered the drawing room the visitor rose quickly and came forward to greet me. What most impressed me in this first meeting with Maurice Raymond was the atmosphere of latent power which seemed to emanate from his personality. He was not a handsome man, though his face was good, his deep set eyes keen, his nose straight. His lips were not hidden by beard or mustache, and in their firm lines I read the positive character of the man. He carried himself like a prince, with grace and hauteur. His general appearance was impressive and commanding.

"You are not Mrs. Marchmont?" he said half in inquiry as he took my hand.

"No, indeed," I replied—"Mrs. Marchmont's friend, Prudence Mason. Mrs. Marchmont is not feeling well and hopes you will excuse her for a little while."

"And the colonel?" asked the visitor.

"He is somewhere about the plantation, but will soon be in for luncheon."

"I have arrived a few days ahead of time," said Mr. Raymond, "but I finished my business in Atlanta sooner than I had anticipated and so hurried on. I was so anxious to see the country in which I passed my boyhood, and above all to see my dear cousin again, whom I remember as the idol of my youth—a beautiful and lovely girl."

"Mrs. Marchmont is a very beautiful woman," I said gravely.

"There is a child, I believe," said Mr. Raymond. I called Daphne from the library, glad of an excuse to have her once more in my sight. She came running in, delighted to see a stranger, and was soon on very good terms with the visitor.

Presently Colonel Marchmont entered, profuse with apologies and extending a genuine southern welcome to his guest.

"Why, where is Portia?" he demanded, looking about after the first greetings were exchanged.

As diplomatically as possible I explained her absence. But a dark look crossed her husband's face, and ringing for a maid he ordered her to tell her mistress that Colonel Marchmont desired her presence at once in the drawing room.

In a few minutes the soft swish of Portia's silken skirts was heard. She came in with bowed head and toying nervously with a dainty fan she held. She did not look her cousin in the eyes as she extended her limp hand and turned coldly away as quickly as possible after her little speech of welcome uttered in perfunctory fashion.

I could see that Mr. Raymond was both puzzled and disappointed with his reception. He watched his cousin curiously, though he did not address much of his conversation to her, but chatted with the colonel on various topics, occasionally turning to me with a swift, rare smile which brightened his rather severe face.

Portia preserved her attitude of constrained defiance. When questions were directed to her, she answered them briefly, but kept her eyes fixed upon the floor. Colonel Marchmont was greatly annoyed, but did his best to cover his wife's delinquencies in entertaining. We were all relieved when luncheon was announced.

At the table the constraint was not quite so marked. Once or twice Portia lifted her heavy lids and shot scrutinizing glances at her cousin. But Mr. Raymond's face was inscrutable and sphinx-like. He had lost the puzzled air he at first wore, and no one could possibly have read what was passing in his mind.

He complimented Portia upon the preservation of her beauty; he petted Daphne; he charmed the colonel. How did he affect me?

Maurice Raymond fascinated me. I had never met a man at once so brilliant and kindly. A beautiful, strong soul looked out of his keen gray eyes. His conversation was intellectual and refreshing. I studied him constantly, always recalling the words I had heard at the gate the night before, "Dangeh comin from de souf—awful."

If the prophecy of old Jezebel should come to pass—if indeed the danger which threatened Portia were coming through her cousin—she well had need to tremble, for in this keen, observant, brainy man she would meet an adversary worthy of her skill.

CHAPTER XI.

A SLIGHT ENCOUNTER.

After luncheon the colonel took his guest out to view the plantation, and we did not see them again until dinner.

Portia was absolutely dazzling when she swept in and took her seat at the head of the table. She was dressed in scarlet from head to foot. Her superb shoulders rose from folds of fiery silk, and the little feet that wandered in and out beneath her skirts were shod in the same lurid hue. She looked a veritable daughter of Mephisto. Her eyes sparkled dangerously, and on her face was an expression of audacity. Evidently she had nerved herself for the oncoming contest which was in the air.

When Maurice saw her, he coolly and deliberately ran his eyes over her costume and then said nonchalantly as he shook out his napkin, "Evidently you have overcome that intense dislike of scarlet which was one of your marked traits as a girl, belle cousine."

Portia did not answer, but looked straight at him.

"It was most extraordinary," continued Maurice. "I never knew any one to hate a particular color as you hated red. Do you remember what you used to call it?"

"No," said Portia.

"A nigger color," replied Maurice, "and declared it only fit for the quadroon girls."

A great pallor overspread Portia's face, but she laughed and lifted her glass of sherry to her lips.

"How absurd!" she said. "Well, other times, other manners."

"Yes," said Raymond as he lifted his glass to her, "I myself adore scarlet. It is vibrant with life and action."

"Do you remember, cousin," he went on as he set down his glass, "do you remember the day your pony ran away and threw you? I can see you now lying white and cold on the moss and—and—why, what the deuce was your pony's name?—the one your father brought from Atlanta and to whom you were so devoted. Astonishing that I can't remember—I know the name of that particular nag as well as I do my own. Surely, cousin, you can help me."

"No, I do not remember," said Portia in a low voice.

"The chestnut with the white mane and tail. Jacko—no—ah! was it not Jacqueline?"

"Oh, yes!" cried Portia, as if greatly relieved.

"No, no, cousin," said Maurice. "Why, no; Jacqueline was the pony your father got after the runaway—a black one. But the chestnut—how amazing that neither one of us can recall her name!"

"I have such a wretched memory," began Portia.

"There, too, you have changed," rattled on Maurice. "Why, Portia, I used to boast of your remarkable memory. The dates, the names, the numbers, you would dash off were astounding. I remember it was rather a trial to me that your memory should be so superior to mine."

I could see that Portia was worried, and also that for some reason Mr. Raymond was trying to trap her. But to what purpose? Was this his revenge for the frigid reception she had given him?

All through dinner he was constantly reminding her of some of their youthful experiences. Occasionally, she answered him understandingly, but as a rule her replies were wide of the mark. One would have said that so far as that period of her life was concerned Mrs. Marchmont's memory was a blank.

When we entered the drawing room, Maurice opened the grand piano, and turning to Portia said with great amiability:

"Dear cousin, I am longing to hear your sweet voice again. Sing some of those dear old songs."

I looked at Portia. Would she sing at his bidding? Again and again during my stay had I asked her to sing for me, but she had always refused on one pretext or another.

"You will excuse me, cousin," she said coldly. "I gave up singing long since. I found my voice was growing thin and metallic and could not endure its sound."

"That is absurd," said Colonel Marchmont, suddenly rising and coming over to us. "She sang just as well as she ever did before I went to England. On my return she refused to sing and has persisted in that determination ever since. One of her many caprices."

"How long were you in England, Marchmont?" asked Mr. Raymond quietly.

"A year," replied the colonel. "I was detained on business. I was sent for as the heir to property near Nottingham, and after I got there a pretender turned up. Well, you know the law's delay, especially in that slow going country. The result was, I was away from Swamplands for over a twelvemonth."

"And during that time you were lady of the manor," said Mr. Raymond to Portia, "What an interminable absence!" he continued, fumbling the music, "but then the reunion—how delightful!"

Colonel Marchmont looked embarrassed, while Portia was very pale. What manner of man was this who appeared to play upon their heart strings? It was not possible that so observant a student of human nature could have failed to remark the cool relations existing between the husband and wife. No. Mr. Raymond was simply drawing them out. The situation was becoming strained, when I broke the ice by sitting down at the piano and playing a few selections in my amateur fashion.

I was conscious that Colonel Marchmont left the room after a few minutes and that Portia and her guest were alone. Just over the piano hung a huge old fashioned mirror, and glancing in it I saw an extraordinary scene. I saw our polished, courtly visitor suddenly approach his hostess, who shrank back with a look of absolute terror on her face. I saw him roughly seize her arm and push back the loosely flowing sleeve and intently scrutinize the lovely bare flesh. In vain she silently struggled to free herself. He held her firmly and examined her arm as a scientist might study an insect under a microscope. Suddenly he raised his eyes from her arm to her face and smiled so tauntingly, so malevolently, that Portia gave a faint little moan and fell back in her chair.

"Miss Mason," said Mr. Raymond, "I fear Mrs. Marchmont is ill."

I sprang to her side and lifted her head. Portia had fainted!

CHAPTER XII.

A BATTLE ROYAL.

In reading over what I have written I find I appear more or less in the role of an accidental eavesdropper. I am now about to describe a scene to which I was an intentional listener.

Let me excuse myself. I had become firmly convinced that Portia was plotting harm to Daphne; that she was visiting the old hag of Dead Man's swamp to urge her to hasten the destruction of the child, for whom, through some unaccountable madness, she had conceived a violent hatred.

I felt myself, then, quite justified in frustrating her wicked schemes. I constituted myself a detective and watched Portia unceasingly. I determined that at the first suspicious movement I would report everything to Colonel Marchmont and leave him to act.

But Maurice Raymond! He was almost as great a mystery to me as his cousin. And my instinct warned me that he, too, was studying and watching Portia. His puzzled air at first sight of her, his quizzing and leading questions, and above all that inexplicable examination of her arm in so rude and masterly a fashion were all mystifying and vexing. How I wished to penetrate his thoughts, to read what was passing behind the impassive face! At times I was prompted to seek him and confide all the details which were so troubling me, but my natural timidity and reticence forbade this step.

Portia was like a caged tigress these days. She fumed and stormed and lashed herself into tempests of rage. She feared and hated this cool, calm, inscrutible man, who was for some reason dissecting and analyzing her. She tried to avoid him, but it was useless. He was ever at her side. Did she lounge in one of the great bamboo piazza chairs, Mr. Raymond took the one next her. If she snatched a shawl and fled down one of the garden paths, Maurice at once lighted a cigar and followed, keeping at a respectful distance enough, but allowing her to see she was under his constant surveillance.

His manner, too, when he addressed her was peculiar. It was a combination of authority and mocking courtesy. She winced perceptibly when he spoke to her and seemed relieved when his utterance was not a question concerning the past.

I marveled greatly that Colonel Marchmont did not mark the comedy—or was it a tragedy?—that was being enacted under his eyes. But he appeared to live apart, wrapped in sorrowful and gloomy thoughts, and rousing only when his child sprang upon his knee and cuddled closely to his heart.

But to return to the scene of which I was at first an involuntary, then intentional listener. One dreary, rainy afternoon I was sitting in the window seat of the library, the heavy curtains shutting me in and completely concealing me from view. I knew Daphne was asleep in the nursery with Sophie watching her. The colonel had driven to the neighboring town. Portia had shut herself in her rooms after luncheon and refused to admit me when I knocked. I supposed Mr. Raymond to be in the smoking room at the end of the hall. Presently, however, I heard a man's tread, and peering be-

ANARCHY IN HIGH PLACES.

Roswell G. Horr, writing for the New York Ttibune, claims that the Senate Republicans will be justified in using every means at their commsnd to defeat the Wilson bill, and by this he includes fillibustering. And to all of this the Post-Intelligencer and many other Republican papers over the land give assent.

Thus we find the worst and most dangerous of all kinds of anarchy advocated by those in high places.

The Post-Intelligencer can find no words of condemnation too strong for the common citizen, who advocates anarchy. No matter how grievous the cause, no matter how hard or how cruel the oppression, the man of the common people who says "let's resist" is shown no favor or quarter by these high moral censors. Even the law is strained in its construction against anarchy when these are the offenders. But what have we here?

We find the Republican party advocating that a minority of the regularly elected law makers of the United States use every effort at its command to prevent the majority from exercising its constitutional duty. They desire, these people who have so long howled anarchy at the Democrats, to defeat the expressed will of the people who chose their representetives in Congress, and thus defeat the very object of a constitutional republic.

This is a fitting position for these men. They are living up to their New England federalistic teaching with a vengeance. It is history repeating itself.

This same party, under the leadership of the same old influence once supported secession, only to oppose it when another section seceded. They have talked patriotism when their interests were at stake, only to advocate the sacrifice of American honor when England was terrorizing our merchant marine and again when Mexico was bulldozing the border states.

And thus to the end of the chapter, it is first hot then cold.

WELL DONE.

The deadlock which has disgraced the House of Representatives, caused by filibustering Republicans, aided by a handfull of Democrats, was broken yesterday and the Bland seigniorage bill passed by a majority of 37. This is the first step toward a proper solution of the financial problem.

The Senate will pass the bill without doubt, as it has the support of the administration, besides the silver men of the South and middle West and the President will sign it.

Under this, before another year, there will have been added to the circulating medium of the country $54,000,000.

Now let Congress pass Tom L. Johnson's bill, providing that all United States bonds, no matter by whom held, can be exchanged for treasury notes and then increase the greenback circulation to the $400,000,000 limit, and the country will manage to pull along for ten years. provided, of course, the tariff reformers can continue to pass reform tariff bills—enlarging the free list and reducing the tariff on necessities.

Again the people will say to the Democratic administration, well done.

PORT ANGELES-VICTORIA.

Port Angeles and Victoria owe a debt of gratitude to those of her citizens who have labored so untiringly and so successfully for the permit to have a licence granted the Hastings Steamboat Company for its steamer Garland to run between Port Angeles and Victoria. The charge of entrance, clearance and pilotage fee, amounting to about $20 per trip, made frequent communication between these cities a luxury too dear for these times. But, now that this has been removed, the Garland will be permitted to make three trips a week between these cities. The benefit to both cities in consequence will be great, especially so now, that the policy of the United States government is to build up closer commercial relations with foreign countries.

HON. DAVID E. DURIE, the Democratic nominee for mayor of Seattle, is one of the best men in the state of Washington. He is a journalist of splendid abilities, a capable business man and his character is spotless and unasailable. He should be elected mayor of Seattle.

THE Seattle campaign is getting quite interesting. There are now six full tickets in the field and from fifteen to one hundred public meetings every evening. The friends of at least four of the six tickets seem confident of success.

BILL MCKINLEY, Tom Reed and Ben Harrison, in the order named, are Republican presidential nomination favorites, while, it is said, John Sherman and Julius Caesar Burrows are much pleased to hear mean things said of them all.

FOR once the representatives of Washington were recorded at a roll call of the House as their constituents would have them. They voted with the Democrats for the seigniorage coinage bill.

A WORD to New York: It is as wrong to fillibuster over the Bland seigniorage coinage bill this winter as it was last fall to fillibuster over the Wilson repeal bill.

THE Populists again voted with the Democrats yesterday. Where is that Demo-Republican combination about which some talk so much?

Care of Curtains and Portieres.

When any cleaning or sweeping is in progress the heavy curtains or portieres should be removed, and and after being thoroughly brushed and shaken should be allowed to hang in the air until the rooms are cleaned and ready for the return, writes James Thomson in a very practical article, "Artistic Doorways and Windows," in the March Ladies' Home Journal. Heavy hangings will absorb the odor from cigar smoke or from any food which may be cooking, and the greatest care should therefore be taken that they be kept well aired. The doorway curtains may be so easily removed and placee in position again that there should be no excuse for any unpleasant odor being attached to them.

BEN HUR A FAILURE.

The Entertainment at the Opera House Not a Success.

The entertainment given at the opera house last Wednesday evening by J. W. Fairbanks, secretary of the Chatanqua circle of this state, disappointed many who were induced to attend by the very complimentary notices this entertainment received from Seattle, Tacoma and Victoria papers.

The illustrations were all copies from old pictures which have been published in magazines and with which the audience were more or less familiar, hence the general disappointment when something new was expected.

The pictures of Ben Hur and mother, Esther and the Egyptian girl were fair, but with these exceptions the exhibition may be accurately considered a failure.

The explanatory remarks were in perfect harmony with the "magic lantern" illustrations as many expressions such as "He fall upon his feet and worshiped," assailed the ears of the eager, attentive audience and occasioned unfavorable criticisms from all.

Three days is a very short time in which to cure a bad case of rheumatism; but it can be done, if the proper treatment is adopted, as will be seen by the following from James Lambert, of New Brunswick, Ill: "I was badly afflicted with rheumatism in the hips and legs, when I bought a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It cured me in three days. I am all right today; and would insist on everyone who is afflicted with terrible disease to use Chamberlain's Pain Balm and get well at once."

EXPORTING FLOUR.

Chin Gee Hee Believes in Supporting Seattle Industries.

Chin Gee Hee, the well-known manager of the merchandise house of the Quong Tuck company, believes in giving his allegiance to home industry. Some time ago his Chinese correspondents sent here for a sample brand of local flour with a view to the export trade from this city. Mr. Gee forwarded 200 sacks of the Novelty mills brand. made in this city. It was proven to be a good export article, and a cable was sent to him ordering 6,000 sacks. The next steamer carried 2400 sacks, which was sent to Tacoma and loaded aboard the outgoing steamer. On the present trip of the Victorian 1600 sacks more were carried of the 6000 ordered. The Quong Tuck manager says that he believes the beginning of a fine export trade has been made and hopes to see the opportunity arise soon for the direct shipment of our flour from our own docks to China—Seattle Telegraph.

PORT ANGELES, WASH., Feb. 27, 1894

EDITOR DEMOCRAT:

I have in my possession 150 acres of as good land as can be found in this state, which for want of means I am unable to put under cultivation. It lies altogether in a river valley, six miles from the present center of the city o Port Angeles. I desire to see it occupied and have therefore this offer to make to co-operators:

I will plat on the bluff overlooking the valley, lots 50x120 feet in size which lots I will bond to sell at $100 per lot. As soon as 40 lots are sold I will deed besides the lots 30 acres of the land as a fine gift to a co-operative farm company, and as soon as 200 lots are sold I will give the balance of the valley land, that is 120 acres additional to the. 30. Money for the lots will be placed on deposit subject to call of depositor, if I do not comply with above conditions. The $100 entitles the colonist to one lot and a share in the co-operative farm.

It is unnecessary to speak of the productive qualities of the soil of the Elwha river valley to any person who is a resident of the state of Washington. I will only ask for space to state that a better location for a first-class dairy farm cannot be found, and that the colony should make a start with such an industry at once. Cream separators and all modern methods for dairy work should be dopted. Mills for cutting lumber, shingles and excelsior should be put up, for the utilization of the timber, which is on the valley land and contiguous to it. Fruit culture, market gardening and poultry raising carried on.

Beet sugar making, fish and fruit canneries, starch from potatoes and no doubt many other industries could be carried on and made profitable here, whilst the land which contains these wealthy producing elements now lies idle, a tax burden, for the want of means and muscle to develop its resources.

But I must not ask for more space in your paper, and will close by inviting correspondence. Address,

MRS. LAURA E. PETERS.

A United States minister had, with due form, presented this American to his serene highness, the duke of Bologna.

A Kansas Man's Experience.

Mr. Albert Favorite, of Arkansas City, Kansas, wishes to give our readers the benefit of his experience with colds. He says: "I contracted a cold early last spring that settled on my lungs, and had hardly recovered from it when I caught another that hung on all summer and left me with a hacking cough which I thought I never would get rid of. I had used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy some fourteen years ago with much success, and concluded to try it again. when I had got through with one bottle my cough had left me, and I have not suffered with a cough or cold since. I have recommended it to others, and all speak well of it." 50 cent bottles for sale by J. C. Hansen, the Fisher Pharmacy.

Taxpayers' Union at Work.

The Taxpayers Union is laboring arduously to stimulate a sentiment of economy in the management of the affairs of city and county.

They have had a neat circular letter printed, which will be mailed to non-resident property owners, requesting that they associate themselves with the movement in as far as to contribute in defraying the incidental expenses of the Union.

The Taxpayers' Union appears to be demonstrating that its labors will be productive of good results.

If the care of the hair were made a part of a lady's education, we should not see so many gray heads, and the use of Hall's Hair Renewer would be unnecessary.

Saved Her Life.

Mrs. C. J. WOOLDRIDGE, of Wortham, Texas, saved the life of her child by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

"One of my children had Croup. The case was attended by our physician, and was supposed to be well under control. One night I was startled by the child's hard breathing, and on going to it found it strangling. It had nearly ceased to breathe. Realizing that the child's alarming condition had become possible in spite of the medicines given, I reasoned that such remedies would be of no avail. Having part of a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the house, I gave the child three doses, at short intervals, and anxiously waited results. From the moment the Pectoral was given, the child's breathing grew easier, and, in a short time, she was sleeping quietly and breathing naturally. The child is alive and well to-day, and I do not hesitate to say that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved her life."

An Old Land Mark Gone.

Among the many changes that have taken place in the transformation of our business center, none will be noticed more than the removal of the Old Reliable Pharmacy, more familiarly known as Fisher's Drug Store, from the Fisher building to the building recently occupied by H. C. Strong, the hardware merchant, in the Colony block.

Mr. Hansen, the well known proprietor, came here from Chicago three years ago, where he was employed for some time in one of the best drug stores of that city.

He graduated with high honors from the Illinois College of Pharmacy which is a branch of that world famed institution, the Northwestern University of Illinois. During the three years that he has been in this city, he has succeeded in building up an enviable reputation in all the departments of his business.

AT THE COUNCIL.

Tom Moore Denies the Rumor that He Is In With the Ring.

At the council meeting last Wednesday a communication from Tom Moore was read, in which he denied the rumor that he was in with any gang, which had for its object the impediment of the city's progress. He said it was time that he held some rights over the water power which the city proposed to use, but he would relinquish that right if the city would pay him back the actual money which he had spent in obtaining it.

Councilman Crockett said "Mr. Chairman, if Mr. Moore has spent this money, I think we had better try and settle with him and the balance of the property holders, for we may be able to settle cheaper than if we tried to force a right-of-way."

Councilman Crockett and Krueger were appointed as a committee to wait on all claimants.

Moved by Councilman Beam seconded by Krueger that all parties who owe the city for electric light shall have the same deducted from any bill the city may owe them. Carried.

The city clerk was instructed to notify the late street commissioner to appear before the council and account for tools entrusted to his care during his term of office.

Odd Fellows' Social.

The regular weekly meeting of Clallam Lodge, No. 72, I. O. O. F. took place as usual last evening, but instead of the dull routine of business and the solemn proclaim of ritualistic work, a merry, happy throng of Odd Fellows, their ladies and friends, enjoyed an agreeable and a pleasant social, the happy treat of Clallam Lodge.

A short literary program was given. It consisted of recitations by Laura Foss and Maggie Garfield, which were both heartily applauded; an able address on Odd Fellowship by D. S. Allen and a presentation of a beautiful emblematic rug to the order by Dr. W. W. McGeorge on behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Meagher, to which A. N. Taylor responded on behalf of the lodge, and extended the thanks of the order to Mr. and Mrs. Meagher.

After the literary program, dancing and card playing was the order of the evening. Luncheon was served at 11 o'clock. All present agree that the evening was most delightfully spent.

ENTHUSIASTIC DEMOCRATS.

The County Central Club Re-Organizes—Sterling Democrats Chosen Officers.

The Democratic Central Club of Clallam cpunty met at the city hall last Saturday night pursuant to call.

There was a good attendance, and a harmonious and enthusiastic crowd of Democrats they were. The meeting was called to order by President Brumfield, and Secretary Clark read the minutes of the previous meeting which were approved. All those present who had not signed the roll were given an opportunity to sign, a recess of 10 minutes being provided therefor.

It was moved and unanimously carried that the club proceed to reorganize. The following were elected officers, all by acclamation: President, Chas. O'Neill; 1st Vice-President, H. B. Willson; 2nd Vice-President, Wm. Ritchie; Secretary-Treasurer, A. M. Johnston.

The election of each officer was heartily applauded. A committee consisting of R. A. Grimes, Thomas Malony and F. O. Lamoreux, was appointed to prepare constitution and by-laws. The president and secretary were added to the committee. A committee consisting of H. B. Crockett, Macolm McGill and O. N. McLaughlin was appointed to make arrangements for a hall.

After the business of the meeting was over many of those present were called for to make speeches, and the following responded in the order called: C. E. Mallette, F. O. Lamoreux, John W. Troy, A. A. Richardson, Thos. Malony, Wm. Ritchie, D. McInnes, H. B. Crockett, H. B. Willson, Daniel Campbell, D. W. Bryan and D. P. Quinn. The speeches were all happy in tone and exhibited much good will and some Democracy.

Throughout, an enthusiastic harmony was exhibited which bodes much good for the Democracy of the county.

The next meeting will occur one week from tomorrow.

The whole number enrolled is seven less than in the previous month; but the average number belonging and the daily attendance are both greater this month.

The number of cases of tardiness is about half as large as usual. This is a great improvement, and it is to be hoped that it may continue.

The pupils generally show an increasing interest in their work which cannot fail to produce good results. But some of the departments are so crowded that the pupils cannot receive the individual attention needed. Promotions and re-divisions must necessarily be somewhat retarded with the present insufficient number of teachers.

The superintendent, having to hear seven recitations daily, is obliged to neglect the general supervision. This is to be regretted, but it seems to be unavoidable these hard times.

tween the curtains saw him come in the library, throw himself down in a big easy chair in the corner by the fire and fall to studying the glowing coals.

I reflected whether I should speak to him, but decided not. "He will go soon," I thought, "and in any event he would not care to talk to me."

The door softly opened, and Portia came in. She wore a long white dressing gown, and her heavy braids of hair were tumbling down. She appeared half asleep and did not see her cousin. Crossing to the bookshelves, she selected a novel, and turning prepared to leave the room, but with the quick, stealthy spring of a tiger Maurice was before her. He locked the door, and turning gave her a terrible smile.

"How dare you?" she panted.

"The stereotyped question of a woman when she is vanquished," sneered he. "Dear cousin, why do you not go in for something original?"

"Open that door," she fumed, "and let me go."

"I will not," he retorted. "Do you think after all the skirmishing between us since my arrival now that it has come to battle that you are to escape me? That may be your mode of fighting—to run away; I think it very likely—but it does not please me."

She turned toward the bell rope, evidently with the intention of summoning help. With a cruel laugh, he whipped out his knife and cut the rope and tossed it contemptuously at her feet.

"Ring for your servants, do," he said tauntingly.

I began to be frightened. Ought I to make my presence known? While I hesitated Portia spoke:

"I am not afraid of you, you coward."

"Oh, yes, you are," he retorted lightly. "You have been afraid of me ever since I came—before I came. I do not wonder—you—you"——

"Maurice, Maurice," she cried wildly.

"Don't dare to call me Maurice when we are alone," he said, "you may keep up the farce before others a little longer"——

"Farce!" she cried. "Enough. I will not be insulted any longer. Open that door, Mr. Raymond, and let me go, or I will rouse the whole house."

He simply burst out into a ut of the most mocking laughter I have ever heard. It maddened Portia, and she flew at him like a fury. He caught her hands and pushed her way.

"Sit down," he said sternly, "and listen to me. You have not imposed upon me. I have recognized your infamy. You have deluded everybody but me, though I think the little northern girl suspects you. She is not a fool. You are clever and cunning, but you have gone too far. Your inhumanity to that poor innocent child shall be avenged. I know more than you suspect. I know the key you carry which will only unlock one door. I know of your midnight walks. I know your friends in Dead Man's swamp."

Portia staggered to her feet.

"Have mercy! Have pity!" she moaned.

"The mercy you have shown to the innocent shall be yours," he said, with flashing eyes. "You are not a woman, but a vampire. Go now," and he unlocked the door. "Go, but do not for one moment think you can escape me. You are as much my prisoner as though chained in a cell. Go to your rooom and stay there until I send for you."

Moaning, shivering and cowed, Portia rushed by this terrible man. I heard her lagging footsteps ascend the stairs and the sound of her moaning die along the corridor.

Then I parted the curtains and stepped out.

CHAPTER XIII.

NORTH AND SOUTH.

I think for once in his life Mr. Maurice Raymond was nonplused. However, he speedily recovered.

"Ah!" he cried, "you sly little Puritan, eavesdropping were you? Do you think that is a nice trick for good little girls?"

"Sir!" I said stiffly, "I am neither a Puritan nor a good little girl"——

"No?" he asked good humoredly, "are you then a pagan and a bad little girl?"

"Please remember I am not on the witness stand," I retorted, "and do not try to muddle me with vain questions."

At this he shouted with laughter.

"I am glad you find me amusing," I said, with considerable severity.

"I do," he cried. "You are delicious with your prim little ways, and your stiff little speeches, and your dear little face"——

"Sir!" I exploded.

"Pardon me, my child. I have no right to speak of you in that way. But come," catching my hands in his and drawing me away from the window, "tell me, how came you to be spying and eavesdropping?"

"I was not spying," I sputtered indignantly. "I was reading there when you came in. I wish now I had made my presence known, and that I had not been a witness of your unpardonable severity to that poor, wretched, half mad woman."

"Oh! She is half mad, is she?" he asked, assuming his puzzled and questioning air.

"Why, cannot you see her condition for yourself?" I asked. "And I must say that while it is just as well she should know that you have remarked her cruelty toward Daphne I think you might have been less harsh with her. Poor Portia is not to blame. She is the victim of some dreadful spell cast over her by those vile creatures, those voodoos in Dead Man's swamp."

Mr. Raymond caught me by the shoulders and bent his head to scrutinize my face.

"What do you know, child," he muttered, "of Dead Man's swamp and the people there? You couldn't have been in that ghastly place."

"No," I replied, "I have not been there, but I know enough about it and the baleful influence it has exerted on my poor friend's life. My desire is to save Portia, to see her restored to her right mind and bring her once more to her husband and child."

"Why, so is mine," he answered, with a curious expression.

"Well, this is no way to go about it," I said, "to fly at a crazy woman, call her a vampire, taunt her, alarm her, talk about chaining her in a cell and all that. To be sure, it's just like a man. You are not to blame, I suppose, for your brusquerie, which amounts almost to—to"— I hesitated.

"Well, well, out with it! Let's hear the dreadful word," he cried.

"Brutality!" I said.

"So I was brutal, was I?" he asked.

"Indeed you were. I had no idea that a courteous gentleman could behave so villainously to a suffering woman."

"Well, now, tell me," said Mr. Raymond quite solicitously I fancied, "how should I have approached Portia?"

"It is quite right to be firm and decided with her," I answered. "I think myself she needs a strong hand. You can see for yourself how little attention her husband pays to her, and I blame Colonel Marchmont greatly for this deplorable state of affairs. He neglects his wife, treats her with contempt and coldness. What can a man expect? Why, I heard him say a dreadful thing to her one evening. She was dancing in the hall—somewhat boisterously, to be sure"—the blood rushed to my face as I recalled that abandoned dance—"and he told her that her dancing was more suitable to the orgies of Dead Man's swamp than to a gentleman's house."

"Quite right, too," interposed Mr. Raymond.

"Oh, you are as bad as he," I said, and it suddenly occurring to me that Maurice was still holding my hands I tried to draw they away, but he only tightened his grasp.

"Don't, Prudence," he said very quietly, "don't take your hands away. Poor little fragile claws," looking down on them, "I could easily crush them, but they are good hands." He suddenly bent his head and kissed them.

It was the first caress I had ever received from any one save Portia and Daphne. I trembled, and with an effort released myself and left him, going over to the fire.

Mr. Raymond followed, but did not attempt to touch me. He took up his station opposite me on the rug, and leaning his arm on the mantel said:

"Possibly I was too severe with her; but, as you say, she needs a strong hand. She must not be allowed to harm little Daphne, must she?"

"On no account," I replied quickly. "Since that night I have watched and guarded the child constantly."

"Since what night?" he asked carelessly.

I hesitated. I was conscious that he was trying to draw me out. Should I tell him? He knew of the closed gate; he knew of Portia's visit to the swamp; why should he not know of this? I studied his face before speaking. Candor and honesty were written there. He might be severe, but he was just. Yes, I would tell him.

I then as briefly as possible recited the story of that night. When I spoke of the knife she carried, and which she held so long as if in invocation toward the moon, he gave a perceptible start. And when I repeated the conversation with old Jezebel at the gate he was again visibly affected. Once he ground his teeth and stamped his foot in rage, and more than once the strong white fingers clinched as if they ached to throttle somebody.

Then, growing more confidential, I told him of my first night in the house and of Portia's stealthy survey of me through the window; the experience in the arbor; her anger when I tried the closed gate, and at last of that awful cry in the night which had welled up from the interior of Dead Man's swamp.

His face grew tense and white with suppressed passion, and the veins stood out on his neck like cords.

"Oh, Portia, Portia!" he cried as I finished, "my poor tortured girl. It is time for me to act. Yes, it is time for me to act."

"Can we save her?" I asked tremulously.

"Can we?" he said, rousing from the study in which he was plunged. "Yes we will."

Then once more, taking my not too unwilling hands in his, he said gently and almost tenderly:

"Little woman, I believe you to be of the stuff of which fighters are made. There must be a drop of Bunker Hill blood in your veins. I believe you to be loyal, honest and brave. You are courageous? Yes, I know you are. I want you to trust yourself to me, to go through a terrible experience. To what end? you will ask. To this: We will save Portia. Will you help me?"

"With all my heart."

"Very well. Say nothing to a soul, but prepare to go with me at midnight to Dead Man's swamp."

Only the Scars Remain.

"Among the many testimonials which I see in regard to certain medicines performing cures, cleansing the blood, etc.," writes HENRY HUDSON, of the James Smith Woolen Machinery Co., Philadelphia, Pa., "none impress me more than my own case. Twenty years ago, at the age of 18 years, I had swellings come on my legs, which broke and became running sores. Our family physician could do me no good, and it was feared that the bones would be affected. At last, my good old mother urged me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I took three bottles, the sores healed, and I have not been troubled since. Only the scars remain, and the memory of the past, to remind me of the good Ayer's Sarsaparilla has done me. I now weigh two hundred and twenty pounds, and am in the best of health. I have been on the road for the past twelve years, have noticed Ayer's Sarsaparilla advertised in all parts of the United States, and always take pleasure in telling what good it did for me."
