The Ethics of Democracy.

F. J. Stimson writes a brief essay on "The Ethics of Democracy," with particular application to liberty—an essay that is of unusual significance at the present time, when socialistic laws are so much discussed. Mr. Stimson has classified the laws of this kind, which have been recently added to the statutes of various states.

Next Republican Ticket.

The Memphis names the next republican ticket in this way: For President, David Bennett Hill of New York; for Vice-President, Thomas B. Reed of Maine. It is beginning to look that way.

Pointer for Travelers.

While Mr. T. J. Richey, of Altona, Mo., was traveling in Kansas, he was taken violently ill with cholera morbus. He called at a drug store to get some medicine and the druggist recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy so highly he concluded to try it. The result was immediate relief, and a few doses cured him completely. It is made for bowel complaint and nothing else. It never fails. For sale by J. C. Hansen, The Fisher Pharmacy.

A revivifying of nature's latent forces occurs every spring. At this time, better than at any other, the blood may be cleansed from the humors which infest it. The best and most popular remedy to use for this purpose is Ayer's Compound Extract of Sarsaparilla.

THE SEALING INDUSTRY.

An Enterprising Local Firm Establishes a Market for These Valuable Skins.

Last Saturday Messrs. J. I. Kirschberg & Co., received another consignment of seal skins from Cape Flattery.

The handling of these valuable skins requires the most careful treatment, and thorough preparation to preserve them on the long journey to London, where they are cured and prepared for use.

The skins are first spread and covered with layers of salt, then rolled and securely tied, after which they are packed in heavy, firmly made barrels.

Strange as it may seem, the art of curing and preserving these skins is only known in London, a fact which, doubtless, explains the reason why sealskin cloaks are so luxuriously costly.

The enterprise of Messrs. Kirschberg & Co., is commendable and will, no doubt, prove profitable. There certainly is no reason why Port Angeles should not be made headquarters for the seal industry of the northwest. Its situation is the most advantageous, its shipping facilities unsurpassed, all that is required is the business pluck and sagacity to embrace the opportunity, and the latter appears to have been supplied by this firm, so look for satisfactory developments.

Bridge Needed Over the Solduck.

Among the more necessary improvements of the upper Quillayute valley is to provide some safe and convenient way of crossing the Solduck river at that point where the Quillayute-Port Angeles county road crosses the river at Mr. Wm. Hopkins'. It is only necessary to take a trip up the river and witness the present method of crossing that dangerous stream, to convince one of the urgent need of a bridge over those waters. The only way of crossing the Solduck at present is by a small boat, which is hazardous at any, and absolutely impossible at many times. When one realizes that there are, at least, thirty-five or forty persons, including about fifteen children residing on that side and who are constantly crossing and re-crossing the river it is a matter of surprise that there are no more lives lost by drowning.—Beaver Leader.

COUNTY NEWS.

Interesting Paragraphs Gathered From the County Press.

East Clallam Record.

There is talk of a Methodist church being built in town.

J. H. Marlette, deputy assessor, has been out at Ozette Lake this week assessing property.

The schooner Lena Sweazey arrived from San Francisco last Saturday, and is loading a lumber cargo.

R. S. Dimmick returned from Neah Bay on Monday. He says that Agent Powell has received no orders from Washington to replace the reservation building burned down about two months ago.

Major H. H. Hobson, special agent of the U. S. Land Department, arrived here on Wednesday from Seattle to investigate certain alleged acts of parties in illegally cutting timber from public lands. Major Hobson will remain here several days, and will make a thorough investigation.

Richard Bennett swore out a complaint sworn out last Friday before Justice of the Peace Marlette, charging J. F. Liebeck with assault with intent to commit murder on April 23rd. The parties appeared before the justice on Saturday morning and on the request of the defendant a continuance was granted for one week and the hearing set for Saturday, May 5.

Herman's surveying crew have finished the survey of two townships which they have been at work upon for the past two months, and they returned up-Sound on Monday. One of the townships surveyed is 31-12, lying immediately south of town, a portion of which was surveyed some years ago and taken up. There are vacant claims yet to be had in that township.

Dan Starritt, deputy assessor of Jefferson county arrived here on Saturday from an assessing tour through the western portion of this county. He traveled 60 miles from here on foot to cover his district and has been away about a month. Property to the amount of $18,000 was found to be assessable. This is the first year that property over in that country has been assessed.

Beaver Leader.

Judge Irving Garland, the popular upper Solducker, is in Beaver to-day. He is circulating a petition to have the commissioners open up the Quillayute-Angeles road. The petition is being generously signed by the settlers, for they all recognize the importance of having the road opened to travel at once.

S. B. Laughlin will leave on next Friday for the alluring land of California, where he will rusticate for a time and may remain permanently. We regret to see Sam tear himself away like this, and we hope that when he returns he will be better pleased than ever before with our own matchless Quillayute.

Carl Oberg went out to East Clallam yesterday where he will take the steamer for San Francisco. Mr. Oberg goes to California for the benefit of his health, and will probably be absent for several months.

Off the Japan Coast—Christened the Ella Johnson—The Terrible Climate of the East—Timber Entries in Clallam County Have Been Relieved From Suspension by Order of the General Land Office.

The schooner which has been lying on the ways at the east end for the past two years was launched last Saturday.

This substantially and compactly built little vessel has been christened the "Ella Johnson," and will be rigged and fitted for a fishing cruise off the Japan coast, among the Alutian islands, where it is believed cod banks exist in great quantities. The schooner will be commanded by Capt. E. H. McAlmond, a veteran Puget Sound navigator, and will carry a crew of fourteen men.

The ownership will rest with Messrs. Johnson and Hansen, the builders, and Capt. McAlmond, the latter will join the former on the northern cruise.

It will require about three weeks to rigg and outfit, after which the Ella Johnson will start on her northern voyage.

She will register about 100 tons, is of a very pleasing model, and will doubtless develop into an average sailer.

Capt. McAlmond feels confident the venture will prove profitable, as the cod of the far-away north is of better quality, firmer and more abundant than in these waters. The point of destination is about 1,600 miles from Cape Flattery, and under favorable circumstances the cruise will require about three months.

The Terrible Climate of the East—Longs for Home.

WEST SIBERION, IND., May 3, '94.

EDITOR DEMOCRAT-LEADER:—

In order that our home people may be able, in some degree, to draw a comparison between this part of the world and the favored spot in which they live, I will tell you something about Indiana. Last Saturday, April 27, I went visiting in a neighborhood where my parents used to live and where we have many relatives. The day was hot, hotter than any day I have seen for 30 years—it is just 30 years in July coming, since I left this state for the glorious Pacific coast. All the evening I sat between the doors and caught all the breeze there was to be caught, when I retired I insisted that the feather bed should be removed, I had a very comfortable straw bed on springs, but I was not comfortable. About ten o'clock, a fire from the artillery of heaven burst upon my startled ears, flashes and sheets of lighting lit up the room, and the whole surrounding country shook with claps of thunder, which seemed to me enough in themselves to knock the old brickhouse into brickbats, roaring booming, rattling, murmuring, clashing, banging, never ceasing continuous thundering. One flash of lighting after another, enough to frighten the dead from their graves, it seemed to me, and lasting for about two hours, and with a rainfall which precipitated as much water as would fall in a week of our spring rains. it was frightful, but it had the effect of cooling the atmosphere, and "after the ball was over" one could sleep. In the morning my friends said they were frightened as well as I. I said that since it was safely over, I was glad it happened for the air was quite refreshing. Before night we heard of some of the casualities of the storm. A barn about two miles south of us was struck by lightning and burned to the ground, there were three horses and one mule burned to death, and another mule severely scorched. About the same distance to the northward a stack of hay or straw was set on fire.

This storm was not an uncommon occurrence.

In order to introduce myself, I gave out the announcement that I would delever a lecture on "Woman Enfranchisement." I had a fair and very attentive audience. After I was through I told them if they wished me to speak to them about the climate and resources of the state of Washington, I would do so on the following Tuesday. They wished me to come and talk with them, I did, and they listened with wonder and astonishment, and I am inclined to think that I shall garner some of the seed sown in that locality, and as I found some very bright, intelligent relatives over there, I hope they may conclude to join me in my enterprise. At my meeting on Sunday night a gentleman cousin of my father's came to me and said, "I want to hear that lecture again, will you come to my town and give it? I will make the announcement and will send a carriage for you, etc." I went, and at about 5 o'clock that day (Monday), the air was stifling, fairly wilting to me, and the folks here feel it severely, too, they make as much fuss as I do about the heat. That night we had another sample of the voice of 'Jove,' dunder and blitzen. During the lecture, the wind arose and every window had to be closed tight, and to say the least of it, I did not like it. After the lecture I again introduced the subject of the state of Washington, and I hope with some good results. Want of money is going to retard me in my work, both on account of myself and on account of persons who would be glad to invest with me. I came back to Seberion on Thursday and gave my suffrage lecture to what the boys and some of the girls in Port Angeles would call a "measle audience," that is to say in the point of numbers, I was greatly disappointed, but then this is a very busy season, planting and house-cleaning being the order of the day.

This morning (Thursday) I am cold enough to sit by a fire, and last night slept comfortable on a feather bed. I would not live in Indiana upon any consideration, and must make haste to get home.

W. C. T. U. ITEMS

BY MRS. C. B. MAXFIELD.

The regular meetings of this Union will be held on the first and third Fridays of each month at 2 p. m., and on the second and fourth Friday evenings at 8 o'clock. The gentlemen members are requested to attend the evening meetings. All are cordially invited to all meetings of the union.

The W. C. T. U. pledge: "I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquors, including wine, beer and cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic of the same."

Rev. J. Bushell will preach a temperance sermon in the Congregational church on Sunday evening, May 13, at 8 o'clock. Everybody come and bring your friends.

There will be a regular meeting of this union at the home of Mrs. L. T. Haynes at 1:30 sharp, May 18. The members will please be punctual.

At the last afternoon meeting of the union the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. Lizzie Haynes; First Vice-President, Mrs. Bushell; Second Vice-President, Mrs. C. B. Maxfield; Third Vice-President, Mrs. Alice Raymond; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Brewster; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Jessie Haynes; Treasurer, Mrs. Mary Chapin. Mrs. Alice Raymond was appointed Superintendent of Woman's Suffrage, Mrs. Brewster on Social Purity and Mrs. C. B. Maxfield on local press work. Other departments of the work will be taken up as soon as practicable.

The regular dues of this Union is One Dollar per year; but on account of the scarcity of money at the present time, the Union of Port Angeles carried a motion to admit single ladies at 50 cents a year, hoping to get the young ladies enlisted in the great army of white ribbons.

Girls it is your influence and work that is needed in this movement more than money. Don't think because your father and brother does not drink that you have nothing to do; but remember the thousands of fathers and brothers that are filling drunkards graves and lend a helping hand to this great work.

The Colorado Women are jubilant over the situation in that state: "Hope is written all over their banner. Put in your prayers, your words and your dollars. Blessed white ribbon hoist the world over, for now is our salvation nearer than we believed."—M. J. Tilford in Union Signal.

White Ribbons, with the experience of twenty years behind them, know full well that prayer for the overthrow of the liquor traffic is not in any sense an effort to overthrow God's reluctance, but that it is a taking hold of his willingness. They know that they ask according to His will, for their petition is in harmony with the purpose for which Christ came into the world —the salvation of the human race. Christ came "to destroy the works of the devil," of which in these days it may be truly said the liquor traffic is the chief.

The same spirit which inspired the Crusaders is manifest to-day in the persistence with which the W. C. T. U. wages war against the rum power. It is God working in the Christain motherhood of our land and other lands, "to will and to do of this our good pleasure."

We are impelled forward by a power not of ourselves, yet a power that operates in every heart touched by the needs of humanity. Before Christ can reign as King, before God's purposes in man and for man can be fulfilled, this monster iniquity must be driven from the face of the earth, the world must be freed from the subtle bondage of a legalized evil.—Union Signal.

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

When I was sufficiently convalescent to be able to move about again, I organized a search party of my own. I believe we visited every cave and nook along the coast for 15 miles on either side of Dhu-Corrig. We searched also the islands and isolated rocks out in the sea, though they had already been searched by the coast guards. That Jack was or had been in some cavern I knew. These slate colored pigeons, blue rocks as they are called, roost in caves. Indeed we never called them anything but cave pigeons. But where was the cave? It now occurred to me that Jack, having got fast to some unusually large fish—the sunfish, for example, could do it—had been drawn into and under the sea. I knew that under such circumstances he would not let go his rod, and that while under the water I suspected that he had been sucked through a submarine tunnel into some unknown and otherwise inapproachable interior cavern and had been unable to rediscover or retrace the passage by which he had entered. This cavern, I thought, might communicate with the open air or with one of the many ordinary caves or fissures along the coast by some narrow outlet through which his carrier pigeons might have escaped. Improbable as was this theory, it was the most probable that I could frame and was in fact rather near the truth. All the theories and surmises of the police contained one or more incredible assumptions. I procured the services of the same diver who had been formerly employed by Mr. Watkins. For more than three weeks under my superintendence he made submarine searchings of the kind indicated on either side of Dhu-Corrig and to a considerable distance each way. All was, however, in vain. The diver gave up first. He said it was a sin to waste any more of my father's money and his own time. With my father's sanction I now wrote to the board of works in Dublin asking them to send me another. Mr. Harris, the man whom I employed, obstinately refused to go on with the search. This diver was actually on his way down from Dublin, when—[when in fact Edward Freeman himself disappeared just as suddenly and unaccountably as his brother had done].

CHAPTER VII.

CROHOOR-BEG — SAMUEL WATKINS TO HENRY VIGORS.

You will no doubt have already read the official report in which I have informed the authorities of the disappearance of Rev. Mr. Freeman's second son under circumstances somewhat similar to those which attended the disappearance of the eldest, Mr. John Freeman. This extraordinary event has caused a degree of consternation and alarm over the whole countryside which it would be impossible to describe. On the morning of Friday last about 10 o'clock Edward Freeman, whose exertions for the discovery of his brother's place of concealment, voluntary or enforced, have been so indefatigable, was seen walking in the direction of Dhu-Corrig and no doubt on his way to that fatal and ill omened rock. Two children coming along the main road saw him turn aside and step briskly down the little lane or boreen leading to Dhu-Corrig. He had a fishing rod on his shoulder and a box of bait in his hand. He has not been seen since. The mystery is infinitely more than doubled by this second disappearance, for with it our hypothesis regarding the first—viz, that Melody murdered him—vanishes too. I declare I begin to think there is something supernatural and uncanny in the whole of this Freeman affair. All other theories having failed, I can assure you, though I may earn nothing but your contempt by the avowal, that I find my thoughts straying perpetually in the direction of supernaturalism as that which may supply us with the key to this astounding mystery. A singular superstition of old standing, but which was believed to have died out, has been revived among the people to account for the disappearance of the brothers. It is said that the coast is haunted by what the English speaking fishermen call "a worm," and the Irish speaking a piast. Even before the disappearance of Edward Freeman I overheard talk of this piast in connection with John Freeman's disappearance, but when I laughingly desired more definite information on the subject I was refused. As you are aware, when I was first stationed in this district I determined, for professional reasons, to learn the language in which the people express their most intimate thoughts—that is to say, the old Gaelic tongue. It has been very useful to me. I have always found that the people are much more communicative and confiding with a person who can speak to them in this ancient language. Concerning the piast, however, on the occasion referred to, I found the men whom I had overheard speaking sullenly and obstinately uncommunicative. I am certain, however, that the notion of a supernatural and man devouring monster now haunting these shores is universal among the island and coast population. Since John Freeman was lost not a man has been seen fishing upon any of the rocks along the coast, and since Edward disappeared in the same equally amazing manner no fishing boat has ever remained out after dark from our little basin. For myself I must say that, although of course I do not believe in any such nonsense, yet for some days I have found my imagination most disagreeably haunted by the thought of this reptile prowling round the shore and seeking whom he may devour. I have dreamed of the brute and that he had plucked me, too, not from off a rock, but out of my flower garden as I was watering my flowers. The beast seemed to be a monstrous serpent with wings and a hairy mane. He reared himself out of the sea, and looking all around with his basilisk eyes suddenly swooped down upon me and seized me. I screamed so loud that the whole household came running to my room. You can imagine what a fool I seemed to myself and others.

On Friday in the afternoon, I say, the second young Freeman was lost. Of what we have done and attempted in the meantime you will find enough in the official report. The following is for your private eye, for I know you take an interest in these queer superstitions which still linger among the peasantry and fisher people, and which are, I suppose, a remnant of paganism:

On Sunday afternoon I saw a four oared boat endeavoring to gain the long island where you and I made such a bag of rabbits last summer and which the people call Lau-woper. Curious to see whether the rowers could accomplish their purpose against the head wind which blew strongly from the west, I kept watching them. The boat had started early that morning from the little fishing village of Coos-beg, which lies to the east of our own village, Dun-Beacon, and some 10 miles distant from my place. Suddenly the boat's head was turned toward land, a sail hoisted, and the boat came driving straight toward my own private little harbor, Coos-an-dorcha, which of course you remember. She seemed to me as if fleeing from the pursuit of an enemy, so furiously she came plunging along, with the water leaping and boiling at her bows. I went down to the strand to meet the crew. When they were landed and had drawn up their boat, I had the men step up to my house and have some refreshments before going to the village. They intended to sleep there that night and go on next morning to Lau-wohr should the wind come down or change its direction. They were in all six Lau-wohr men, very wild and rough in appearance, but, like all the remote islanders along this coast, by no means so wild as they looked. Indeed these islanders are almost invariably a simple minded, peaceable and hospitable and kindly people, decidedly better than the shore folk, who are somewhat contaminated, as you might say, by civilization.

I gave them a comforting draft of undiluted whisky as they sat and dried themselves around a big fire in my kitchen, and afterward regaled them with plenty of homemade cake and butter and big bowls of steaming hot tea. They were much exhausted from rowing, and the poor fellows looked so happy and pleased as they ate and drank that it was a delight only to see the look of satisfaction in their simple countenances. Then at my suggestion they took out their pipes and smoked, I, too, smoking with them, and asking many questions in Gaelic. They were at first very friendly and communicative. I spoke of the disappearance of Mr. Freeman's sons, of the resultlessness of all our searchings, and observed with as serious and awestruck a face and manner as I could assume that they might have been snatched from Dhu-Corrig by "a worm." A sudden silence thereupon fell on the Lau-wohr men. One of them made some answer which I forget, but the subject was not pursued. I felt at once that the Lau-wohr men knew a great deal more about the piast than they thought good to communicate to me, who, though I could speak their tongue, was yet a gentleman, a Sassenagh, and, in short, not one of themselves. As you are aware, those people consider it unlucky to talk more than is necessary about the supernatural things and personages in whom they believe and will never speak about them with those who are not quite in accord and sympathy with themselves upon such subjects. The peasantry who are communicative on such subjects will be found almost invariably to be persons who have to some extent become emancipated from these forms of superstition.

I now led Crohoor into my office.

When the men rose to leave for the village, which, with a certain instinctive politeness that I have often noticed in the islanders, they offered to do not too soon and also not too long after they had partaken of my hospitality, I had the oldest of them, a gigantic old fisherman called Crohoor-beg, stay with me for the night, for that I could spare him a bed. He consented and remained when the rest took their leave. He was called Crohoor-beg, or Crohoor the Little, no doubt ironically on account of his great size. I had noticed that when I alluded to the piast Crohoor's face became unusually rigid and impassive and that he closed his mouth as if resolved not to speak again that evening.

I now led Crohoor into my office, stirred up the fire, made a good blaze, and after some allusion to the hardship which he had endured that day brewed for him a stiff tumbler of punch. Though in my own private room and surrounded by books, pictures and many strange things savoring of "quality life," Crohoor's behavior was almost gentlemanlike; at least it was characterized by ease, simplicity and dignity. Later on I spoke again of the disappearance of Mr. Freeman's sons, of the great affliction of the family, and of the exertions of myself and my men to solve the mystery. Eventually Crohoor-beg broke through his resolve and before he lay down that night told me all he knew or believed about the piast.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE PIAST.

Crohoor-beg commenced by informing me somewhat in the manner of a professional story teller or historian about to deliver a lecture that Ireland was at one time filled with monstrous reptiles, ugly and horrible, which preyed upon the people. So much I knew and also that St. Patrick had banished them, all but a few which lingered on after his time in remote mountain lakes, but Crohoor said that though this might be true of other parts of the country it was not St. Patrick who had banished the great piast of this region, but a man called Cuhoolin. The name of the piast he said was Eooree, and that after a terrible battle Cuhoolin had conquered her, driven her into the sea, and put her under spells to remain there till the day of judgment, when, according to Crohoor, she will be cast forever into hell and the door shut; also Cuhoolin put spells upon her that she should not have power to eat men only once and again and between times. Crohoor went on to inform me that when his father was a little boy some men had been lost while fishing off this coast, and it was believed they had been eaten by the piast. A panic took possession of the whole country, so that fishing ceased. There was at the time in this country a very good and holy priest who had unusual influence over the minds of the people. He held a sea service and celebrated mass upon the water in the midst of a great flotilla of boats for the banishment of the monster. After that he forbade the people even to speak of the piast, not even to mention her as a thing of the past, an old time plague upon this coast, and such was his influence, according to Crohoor, that for two generations only the vaguest ideas circulated among the people concerning the reptile. Since the taking away of Mr. John Freeman from Dhu-Corrig "the old people had been talking," and "why shouldn't they," he added, "when 'tis plain that the piast is alive and strong and at her old bloody work again?"

"What is the appearance of the piast," I asked, "and where does she live?"

"I'll tell you about that, sir," he said. He proceeded then to relate the following story, with regard to which I may add that I am very conscious that my English does not adequately express the power and picturesqueness of Crohoor's Gaelic:

"These things happened before my father's time and before my grandfather's, but they are as true as that you are sitting in that chair. Two men and a gossoon went in a boat from Lau-beg, which lies a little westward from Lau-wohr—but your honor knows the island—to buy flour in Dun-Beacon, for little is the grain grown there in Lau-beg by reason of the stony floor of the island. The wind was from the south'ard, so they hoisted sail, and it wasn't long before they made the basin and grounded their boat there. When they bought the flour and put the bags in the boat, it was the judgment of one of the men that they should run down the boat, hoist sail and return to Lau-beg immediately, so that the daylight might be with them in their returning.

"'None of your nonsense,' says the other. 'It isn't once in six months I come to the city, and I won't leave it till I warm myself well with water of life.'

"'Water of death,' says the other. "'Tis unlucky to be passing the square hole after dark any time and in especial on this night.'

"The night, your honor, was All Hallow's eve, and 'tis a night when all the d——d things in the world from the devil down have great power, be the reason what it may.

"'The piast be d——d!' says the other. 'I hold by no such foolishness.'

"The man who said this word was called Teigue Rue. He had red hair and was the biggest and strongest man in the little island and a terror to the peaceably inclined. By the same token, too, he had gone away to be a sailor when he was a slip, and he went to many outlandish parts before he came home and settled himself down with his kin for good and all in Lau-beg. And though he used to pretend to laugh at the old stories of the people he himself had a custom of talking of cave sea devil or piast that he called Davy and sometimes Davy with another name that the old people did not remember. And so now all that his comrade could say was no use, but back he would go to the public house, taking his comrade with him, who was a weak man, and then they were diverting themselves to the going down of the sun. The comrade's name was Shaun. He was an O'Flaherty by nation. Well, Teigue Rue, though he laughed at the notion of the piast, had too much sense to get drunk and he about to go out on the salt water, in a sailboat, or to allow Shaun O'Flaherty to get drunk either, though the people there said afterward that Shaun, in spite of his desire for an early return, was then all for more drink and another song.

"They pushed down the boat after that and stepped the mast and hoisted the sail, with the night upon them, and the moon rising, three-quarter, over the Ballyhowrahan hills there in the east. Teigue Rue took the bailing can and dipped it in the tide and poured the salt water on his head to cool himself after the liquor and make his intellects more steady and considerate, and he made Shaun do the same. The gossoon also was warm and pleasant in himself; he was with them all through. The stars came out, but though the night was bright and firm the wind blew strong still from the south'ard.

"Well, sir, the boat was just opposite your own coos—called Coos-an-dorcha by reason of the high black rocks around it and the shadow that is there always—when the wind scanted of a sudden in an unreasonable manner and the sail began to flap.

"'It would be better to go back,' says Shaun.

"'It would be better to do no such thing,' says Teigue Rue. 'Handle your oar, man, and let the gossoon take the helm, and we won't be long in making Lau-beg, for the sea is like a goose pond. The tide is against us here, but it won't be against us a mile farther on, and we can get home from that without inconvenience.'

The peasantry who are communicative on such subjects will be found almost invariably to be persons who have to some extent become emancipated from these forms of superstition.

I now led Crohoor into my office.

When the men rose to leave for the village, which, with a certain instinctive politeness that I have often noticed in the islanders, they offered to do not too soon and also not too long after they had partaken of my hospitality, I had the oldest of them, a gigantic old fisherman called Crohoor-beg, stay with me for the night, for that I could spare him a bed. He consented and remained when the rest took their leave. He was called Crohoor-beg, or Crohoor the Little, no doubt ironically on account of his great size. I had noticed that when I alluded to the piast Crohoor's face became unusually rigid and impassive and that he closed his mouth as if resolved not to speak again that evening.

I now led Crohoor into my office, stirred up the fire, made a good blaze, and after some allusion to the hardship which he had endured that day brewed for him a stiff tumbler of punch. Though in my own private room and surrounded by books, pictures and many strange things savoring of "quality life," Crohoor's behavior was almost gentlemanlike; at least it was characterized by ease, simplicity and dignity. Later on I spoke again of the disappearance of Mr. Freeman's sons, of the great affliction of the family, and of the exertions of myself and my men to solve the mystery. Eventually Crohoor-beg broke through his resolve and before he lay down that night told me all he knew or believed about the piast.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE PIAST.

Crohoor-beg commenced by informing me somewhat in the manner of a professional story teller or historian about to deliver a lecture that Ireland was at one time filled with monstrous reptiles, ugly and horrible, which preyed upon the people. So much I knew and also that St. Patrick had banished them, all but a few which lingered on after his time in remote mountain lakes, but Crohoor said that though this might be true of other parts of the country it was not St. Patrick who had banished the great piast of this region, but a man called Cuhoolin. The name of the piast he said was Eooree, and that after a terrible battle Cuhoolin had conquered her, driven her into the sea, and put her under spells to remain there till the day of judgment, when, according to Crohoor, she will be cast forever into hell and the door shut; also Cuhoolin put spells upon her that she should not have power to eat men only once and again and between times. Crohoor went on to inform me that when his father was a little boy some men had been lost while fishing off this coast, and it was believed they had been eaten by the piast. A panic took possession of the whole country, so that fishing ceased. There was at the time in this country a very good and holy priest who had unusual influence over the minds of the people. He held a sea service and celebrated mass upon the water in the midst of a great flotilla of boats for the banishment of the monster. After that he forbade the people even to speak of the piast, not even to mention her as a thing of the past, an old time plague upon this coast, and such was his influence, according to Crohoor, that for two generations only the vaguest ideas circulated among the people concerning the reptile. Since the taking away of Mr. John Freeman from Dhu-Corrig "the old people had been talking," and "why shouldn't they," he added, "when 'tis plain that the piast is alive and strong and at her old bloody work again?"

"What is the appearance of the piast," I asked, "and where does she live?"

"I'll tell you about that, sir," he said. He proceeded then to relate the following story, with regard to which I may add that I am very conscious that my English does not adequately express the power and picturesqueness of Crohoor's Gaelic:

"These things happened before my father's time and before my grandfather's, but they are as true as that you are sitting in that chair. Two men and a gossoon went in a boat from Lau-beg, which lies a little westward from Lau-wohr—but your honor knows the island—to buy flour in Dun-Beacon, for little is the grain grown there in Lau-beg by reason of the stony floor of the island. The wind was from the south'ard, so they hoisted sail, and it wasn't long before they made the basin and grounded their boat there. When they bought the flour and put the bags in the boat, it was the judgment of one of the men that they should run down the boat, hoist sail and return to Lau-beg immediately, so that the daylight might be with them in their returning.

"'None of your nonsense,' says the other. 'It isn't once in six months I come to the city, and I won't leave it till I warm myself well with water of life.'

"'Water of death,' says the other. 'Tis unlucky to be passing the square hole after dark any time and in especial on this night.'

"The night, your honor, was All Hallow's eve, and 'tis a night when all the d——d things in the world from the devil down have great power, be the reason what it may.

"The man who said this word was called Teigue Rue. He had red hair and was the biggest and strongest man in the little island and a terror to the peaceably inclined. By the same token, too, he had gone away to be a sailor when he was a slip, and he went to many outlandish parts before he came home and settled himself down with his kin for good and all in Lau-beg. And though he used to pretend to laugh at the old stories of the people he himself had a custom of talking of cave sea devil or piast that he called Davy and sometimes Davy with another name that the old people did not remember. And so now all that his comrade could say was no use, but back he would go to the public house, taking his comrade with him, who was a weak man, and then they were diverting themselves to the going down of the sun. The comrade's name was Shaun. He was an O'Flaherty by nation. Well, Teigue Rue, though he laughed at the notion of the piast, had too much sense to get drunk and he about to go out on the salt water, in a sailboat, or to allow Shaun O'Flaherty to get drunk either, though the people there said afterward that Shaun, in spite of his desire for an early return, was then all for more drink and another song.

"They pushed down the boat after that and stepped the mast and hoisted the sail, with the night upon them, and the moon rising, three-quarter, over the Ballyhowraban hills there in the east. Teigue Rue took the baling can and dipped it in the tide and poured the salt water on his head to cool himself after the liquor and make his intellects more steady and considerate, and he made Shaun do the same. The gossoon also was warm and pleasant in himself; he was with them all through. The stars came out, but though the night was bright and firm the wind blew strong still from the south'ard.

"Well, sir, the boat was just opposite your own coos—called Coos-an-dorcha by reason of the high black rocks around it and the shadow that is there always—when the wind scanted of a sudden in an unreasonable manner and the sail began to flap.

"'It would be better to go back,' says Shaun.

"'It would be better to do no such thing,' says Teigue Rue. 'Handle your oar, man, and let the gossoon take the helm, and we won't be long in making Lau-beg, for the sea is like a goose pond. The tide is against us here, but it won't be against us a mile farther on, and we can get home from that without inconvenience.'

A Sad Death.

Drowned at Sequim, Charles W. Fernie aged 16 months, child of Samuel and Mary Fernie.

This sad accident occurred in the yard of Mr. Fernie, the little one falling on his face into a pool of water not more than eight inches deep. We carried the little one to God's acre and the words, 'earth to earth' and 'ashes to ashes' were spoken. Duty bade us leave the hallowed spot. We placed over the grave expressions of love, and prayed.

Father, thy will, not mine, be done,
So prayed, on earth, thy suffering son,
So, in his name, I pray.

If ever prayer for resignation seemed necessary, it is when a parent bends over the grave of a child. We know that only the dust lies sleeping there, but it is dust that is dear. It is the dust that once had form and comeliness. It is the only dust that represents what was mortal of our babe, he is not there. His image we bear about with us. A large number of friends gathered to witness the burial, and show sympathy.

We append a poetic expression:

We had a son, a darling boy,
His age we cannot tell;
For they reckon not by months or years
Where he has gone to dwell.
I cannot tell what form is his,
What looks he weareth now;
Nor guess how bright a glory crowns,
His shining Seraph brow.
But I know, for God had told me this,
That he is now at rest,
With other blessed infants;
Upon their Saviour's breast.

The funeral was conducted by W. M. Ludwick.

Garlick's Red Rose Potatoes.

Almost two years ago Mr. Garlick of Lost Mountain precinct, planted a few hills of the potato known as the California Red Rose, with the view of introducing it into this county if it proved to be a prolific bearer. His success was astonishing. He did not know but the "year" had something to do with it, so he tried it again last year. The result was even better than the first year. From his start of a few hills the year before he harvested about two tons last year, and had no trouble in disposing of nearly all he had to his neighbors at five cents per pound. He has placed a few sacks for sale with the Farmers' Mercantile Co., of Dungeness.

Under and by virtue of a writ of execution issued out of the Superior court of Clallam County, State of Washington, dated the 15th day of March, 1894, upon a judgment rendered and entered in said court on the 17th day of February, 1894, wherein the said plaintiffs recovered of and from the said defendant the sum of $151.34, with interest thereon from the date of said judgment, at the rate of one and one-half per cent per month, and the further sum of $12.50 as attorney's fees, and costs of suit taxed at $18.30, I have duly levied upon all of the following described real estate situate in said Clallam County, as the community property of the said defendant, Herman Culver, and Clara Culver, his wife, to-wit:

Review of Seattle Market for the Past Week.

GRAIN AND FEED GOING HIGHER.

Barley, Oats and Wheat Higher—Onions Out of Market — Sugar Has Advauced—Clearing House Balances.

SEATTLE, May 4, 1894.

Exchanges at Seattle, Tacoma and Portland clearing houses to-day were:

	Clearances.	Balances.
Seattle	$161,935.49	$22,108.60
Tacoma	87,005.00	25,065.00
Portland	264,000.00	68,000.00

A still further advance has taken place during the past week in oats, barley, corn and millstuffs of from $1 to $2 per ton. The demand for these products has been greatly increased in Washington by reason of the poor crop prospects in California, and large orders have been placed here for Honolulu.

There has been a general decline of 2 cents per pound in all kinds of butter, except, perhaps, California creamery, which is still held up.

Eggs are higher by 1 cents per dozen than they were last week, while poultry remains unchanged.

In vegetables new California onions have taken the place of the old, which are obtainable only in small quantities, and sell for 6 to 7 cents per pound, while the new ones go at 2½ cents.

Lard has advanced ½ cent per pound, but other provisions remain unchanged.

Coffee, both green and roasted, has declined, and some canned meats have advanced.

In fruits, oranges, bananas and strawberries are somewhat cheaper.

HAVE YOU TRIED DRUGS AND FAILED TO FIND A CURE FOR RHEUMATISM, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA,
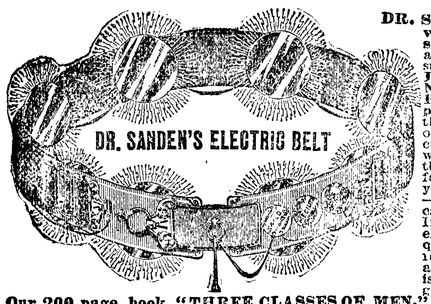
KIDNEY, LIVER and BLADDER
COMPLAINTS, DYSPEPSIA, LAME-BACK, &c.



DR. SANDEN'S ELECTRIC BELT with Electro Magnetic Suspensory will cure without medicine all of the above troubles. Those who suffer from Nervous Debility, Losses, Drains, Lost Manhood, Nervousness, Sleeplessness, Poor Memory, all Female Complaints, and general ill health, the effects of abuses, excesses, worry or exposure, will find relief and prompt cure in our marvelous invention, which requires but a trial to convince the most skeptical. In ignorance of effects you may have unduly drained your system of nerve force and vitality—which is electricity—and thus caused your weakness or lack of force. If you replace into your system the elements thus drained, which are required for vigorous strength, you will remove the cause and health, strength and vigor will follow at once. This is our plan and treatment, and we guarantee a cure or refund money.

Our 200 page book "THREE CLASSES OF MEN," should be read by every young, middle-aged and old man, sent sealed, free. Dr. Sanden's Electric Belt is no experiment as we have restored thousands to robust health and vigor, after all other treatments failed, as can be shown by hundreds of cases throughout this and other States, who would gladly testify, and from many of whom we have strong letters bearing testimony to their recovery after using our Belt.

WE HAVE CURED THESE—WE CAN CURE YOU!

GENERAL DEBILITY CURED.

San Francisco, Cal., August 14, 1892.
Dr. A. T. Sanden, Dear Sir:—Before I used your belt I was troubled with lost vigor, vital weakness, and almost a complete loss of power. I would get up with a very tired feeling, bones aching, etc.; since using your belt I have had a new lease of life. I now enjoy life better than I have for ten years past. I have the utmost confidence in your treatment. You can publish this statement, also have others write or call on me. Truly yours, H. A. BOWEN, 25 and 28 Turk St.

RHEUMATISM AND LAMENESS CURED.

Portland, Oregon, April 13 1892.
Dr. A. T. Sanden, Dear Sir:—I got one of your belts two weeks ago for rheumatism, from which I suffered for several years. For the past six months I had not been able to work. Your belt has placed me in almost perfect health in the two weeks I have used it. I can walk comfortably, and feel like a new man generally. M. E. HUGHES, Proprietor International Hotel.

NERVOUS DEBILITY—LOSS OF VIGOR.

Tacoma, Wash., October 23, 1892.
Dr. A. T. Sanden, Dear Sir:—I have been using your Electric belt for general nervous debility, and to-day feel better than I have for five years. I have gained in vigor daily, and am strong in every part.
Yours gratefully, CHAS. LUETKA.

LAME BACK AND RHEUMATISM.

Portland Oregon, September 25, 1892.
Dr. A. T. Sanden, Dear Sir:—Years of exposure and hard work, combined with the strain coming from the jar of an engine, gave me a severe case of lame back, from which I suffered for seven years. I was so bad that I could not bend my back. Was all doubled up with it. I bought one of your belts. It helped me in side of two days, and I continued to wear it for four months, being perfectly cured. That was two years ago, and I am as well to-day as I ever was in my life. I know your belt well, and I tell lots of people who have been cured by it. Many others need it, and if they would try it they would find it the same as I did—the best remedy in the world. I am located here permanently, and will be glad to talk with anyone who wants to inquire about it.
ROBERT GURRIE, Engineer Hotel Portland.

LOST VITALITY AND STRENGTH.

Everett, Wash., June 18, 1892.
Dr. A. T. Sanden, Dear Sir:—Since wearing your belt I have been greatly benefited. I feel my old energy fast returning, and after a month's use of the belt I find myself twice as vigorous as before. My memory is now nearly perfect, and each day shows for the better. I feel much stronger than before using the belt. Yours truly, FRANKLY SCHULTZ,

THE DR. SANDEN ELECTRIC BELT

Lost on Dhu-Corrig.

By STANDISH O'GRADY

[Copyright, 1894, by American Press Association.]

"Well, they rowed on in that manner till they came opposite the square hole in the big, straight cleft."

"What hole is that?" said I—Samuel Watkins, at your service.

"I'm surprised your honor hasn't noticed it," replied Crohoor, "but indeed unless it was pointed out to him a person might not see it.

"Your honor knows the big, smooth, straight cliff between your coos and Dhu-Corrig?"

"Certainly," I said. "But I'm a little shortsighted and never noticed that hole."

"Well, sir, up high in that cliff there is a square hole and big enough, too, though it looks small from the water. They were nearing this place when Shaun O'Flaherty stopped rowing and crossed himself and said:

"'Teigue Rue, I'm greatly afeard.'

"'Afeard of what?' says Teigue Rue.

"'Of the piasta-wohr,' he says. 'Sure, this is her favorite locality between Dhu-Corrig and the Coos-an-dorcha—that is to say, the Black rock and the Coos of Darkness—and sure they say that it is through Cooree's window she comes out and goes in again through the same and has her nest there.'

"Then Teigue Rue spoke words about the piast, and though I well remember them I won't say them in your honor's presence, and he fell to beating Shaun O'Flaherty to make him quit his nonsense and be rowing the same as formerly. Then the gossoon screamed with an awful and terrible cry that was heard by all the people of the valley that runs up back from Dhu-Corrig, and the men stopped their fighting and looked where the boy was looking, and that was up at the big gray cliff.

"Then, God and all his holy saints preserve us, they saw something that was enough to kill them all at once with the fright! From Cooree's window the piast was coming out, and first she raised her head up along the cliff side, stretching herself like a serpent or a huge black eel, and the head continued going up till it passed beyond the cliff top so that they could see the head of the piast against the sky and the stars, and her body all the time working slowly out of the cave. She was maned like a horse and had ears like a horse, and her eyes were like two red fires in her head. In that manner she raised her head up among the stars, and then making an arch with her neck turned her eyes downward, and at first she did not see them, but stretched her head along the cliff shore to Dhu-Corrig and then backward along the coast as far as Coos-an-dorcha and into the coos, winding her head and neck round the rock at the mouth of the coos. After that she raises her head again, but not so high as before, and in the bright water she sees the black boat, and without hurry comes down upon it, the two men sitting there without a word, as silent and as steady as stones, with faces like white paper. Then with her long tongue she reaps them into her mouth, they still without a word or a noise, and chews them very deliberately. The crackling of their bones in the mouth of the piast, that boy used to say afterward, was like the crackling of brush in a fire, and the shower of blood that fell from her jaws along the hairs of her mouth, every hair as long as an oar, was like the sound of hail upon water. And after that she raised up her head to swallow them more conveniently after the manner of birds when they drink."

"Then the boy escaped," I said.

"Yes, sir; the boy escaped. When she raised her head in that manner, God gave him courage so that he slipped over the gunwale of the boat upon the seaward side and sheltered himself so. It was not long before the piast came down again. The boy did not see her on account of the place where he was, but he heard her breathing and smelt the breath of her like seaweed, only very strong, and indeed it is astonishing how he contrived to keep himself afloat, considering the great fear that was upon him. She returned to the boat twice after that, for no doubt she smelt him, and he knew her coming on each occasion by reason of the breathing and of the very strong smell. In the end he heard a loud noise, and he said to himself that it was the noise of the hinder part; the piast falling into the water, and that now he would be safer in the boat than in the sea. Accordingly, though with very great difficulty, owing to the fear that was upon him, he climbed over the gunwale and gathered the sail around him and lay down in the bottom of the boat.

"The boat was picked up next morning by the Coos-beg men, for she was carried eastward by the tide, and when they unrolled the sail the boy was an idiot, and he continued in that state, and languishing besides, till the eve of St. John's day in the next year, when he died, saving only that for nine days before his death his understanding returned to him, and he told the story many times to different people."

"Is it your opinion, then," I said, "that the piast has taken the two young gentlemen, my neighbors?"

"God alone," said Crohoor, "knows that, with whom is the knowledge of all things. But if it be so and the piast has them, Almighty God and his only Son be our defense, for the power of man and the mind of man furnish no protection against the like of her."

"But, Crohoor, you said a short time ago that a man beat that reptile in battle and banished her into the rocks and the sea."

"So I said, sir, but it is thought that the man who did it was more than a man, and that though he lived before the coming of St. Patrick, yet the power of the Almighty was in him."

Such, my friend, is the explanation of the disappearances offered by Crohoor-beg. O'Brien "by nation," who stands 6 feet 3½ in his stockings and is of a size and bulk corresponding, a poor fisherman and cottier of the island called Lau-wohr, who can't speak English and never read a line in any printed book, but who, I verily believe, is not only a nobler and better but a wiser man, too, than most of the professional men with whom I am acquainted. And though his theory, being grounded on an incredible superstition, is to be rejected, it is not at all more irrational than several which I have heard soberly advanced by educated persons.

SAMUEL WATKINS.

CHAPTER IX.

MR. WATKINS' NARRATIVE CONTINUED.

MY DEAR HENRY—After the disappearance of Edward and after all our renewed searchings and explorations had come to nothing, I argued with myself in the following manner: Wherever the brothers are they are doubtless together and have been spirited away and concealed by the same person and in the same way. From his place of concealment John Freeman was able to send out messenger pigeons with tokens attached. These tokens, though they proved that he was alive, gave us no inkling as to his place of concealment or abode. He may have sent out others to which are attached definite written information. He could have written with blood characters on a strip torn from his handkerchief and by some device protected the characters from the weather. Now that the two brothers are together, the chances are doubled that they have sent out some pigeon so equipped. At once I wrote off to my two nephews, Harry and Joseph Battersby, whom you met here last summer, to come at once to me, bringing their guns with them. I had now determined to shoot every cave pigeon in this neighborhood, and I knew my nephews, being boys, and accustomed to stealing upon and shooting from behind hedges curlews, starlings, cave pigeons and such like, would do far more execution than I could. Having posted the letter, I went forth instanter and also distributed small shot to my four men at this barrack, bidding them be off and shoot as many cave pigeons as they could that day. I recalled their privileges the same evening, for they only succeeded in frightening the birds and making them very shy. They did not bring home a single pigeon, though they were firing about the country all day. I myself, though I kept stealing and dodging behind fences and furze brakes from 10 o'clock to dusk, only shot three. They bore no token of any kind. I knew that with the arrival of Harry and Joseph there would be a different tale to tell. So there was. Every day for a week they brought in from five to twelve pigeons, till pigeons began to be a very rara avis in our country, for those that were not killed were frightened away. The boys knew my purpose. One day about nine days after their arrival Harry came rushing into my office, shouting and exclaiming and holding a pigeon in his hand round whose leg something was tightly wrapped. I saw it was linen laced with cord very tight along the shank between the bird's claw and its knee. My hands so trembled with excitement that I cut myself, and badly, before I cut that cord. When I unwound the linen and laid it out upon the table, I found upon it various stains of red. This linen had certainly been written upon originally, but the rain had penetrated, and melting the red ink, blood no doubt, had converted the characters into mere blotches and stains. They were quite illegible. I sent the boys away and remained alone for a long time, studying the red daubs and splashes—you can imagine in what a state of mind. This rag of linen held the secret which I verily believe I would have given all my worldly goods to master. I turned it this way and that, for there was nothing to indicate which side should be held uppermost.

Then at last it seemed to me that in one place I saw a w, after which a mere blotch of red color representing apparently the rest of a word and at the end of it another w. I called my wife to my assistance. She was sure of the first w, but not of the second. Curiously enough, both the boys were sure of the second, but not of the first. I was sure of both myself. As you know, I am always sure of everything that jumps with my expectations and hopes. You are a phlegmatic fellow yourself, Harry, a man of sheer intellect, but I think that even you, if you had been through these Freeman experiences, lasting now for more than five months, with the eyes of the whole country upon you, you might have been perhaps as much excited as I was this evening. I ran to the shelf for my Webster's dictionary. Do you remember how, when we were sitting here together last summer after dinner smoking and thinking of nothing, a little girl appeared at the door and said:

"Mrs. Homan's compliments, sir, and would you lend her the loan of your dictionary, for she's writing a letter?"

The Most Successful Gas Engine

In the market is run without an electric spark battery. Theory is all very well, but the every day experience of constant practical use is the best test of merit. The man who runs a launch and finds himself drifting with the tide and wind because the "spark" fails to ignite the charge of gas in his engine; the man who prints a daily paper and fails to get it off on time because the "spark" again fails; the man who has fruit that is injured for lack of irrigation because "spark" fails in his engine that runs the pump not only such parties but others who have trouble from like causes should bear in mind that the Hercules gas and Gasoline engine is free from such difficulties. The ignition is simple and sure. Send for catalogue. If you want second-hand engines of other makes at cheap rates we can supply you. We have a number taken in trade and cannot take any more until these are realized on. PALMER & REY TYPE FOUNDRY, Front and Alder streets, Portland, Oregon.

Saved Her Life.

Mrs. C. J. WOOLDRIDGE, of Wortham, Texas, saved the life of her child by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

"One of my children had Croup. The case was attended by our physician, and was supposed to be well under control. One night I was startled by the child's hard breathing, and on going to it found it strangling. It had nearly ceased to breathe. Realizing that the child's alarming condition had become possible in spite of the medicines given, I reasoned that such remedies would be of no avail. Having part of a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the house, I gave the child large doses, at short intervals, and anxiously waited results. From the moment the Pectoral was given, the child's breathing grew easier, and, in a short time, she was sleeping quietly and breathing naturally. The child is alive and well to-day, and I do not hesitate to say that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved her life."
