Legal Controversy at Clallam.

Sheriff S. G. Morse was summoned to Clallam last Friday by Deputy Sheriff Ulin and Al. Fairservice, the latter having gotten into difficulties over some goods he (Fairservice) held on a writ of attachment, which Ulin attempted to seize under a writ of replevin.

The goods, loggers' tools, etc., were the property of Gus Hultgren, against whom Fairservice had, a short time before, received a judgment for some $36 in Justice Marlette's court, and had a writ of attachment sworn out and levied upon these goods. Hultgren gave a replevin bond, and when the deputy sheriff attempted to recover the goods Fairservice and his men resisted his authority, and an altercation followed which came very nearly proving fatal.

Sheriff Morse dispatched Deputy Burnside, who put forth his best efforts to influence an amicable settlement between the contestants, but without avail as the case has been transferred to the justice court at Beaver. The only result will, doubtless, be the affirmation of the former judgment with added costs. Fairservice agreed to pay the costs of the attachment if Hultgren would pay the costs of judgment, a settlement which Deputy Burnside considered equitable and just.

A Fine String of Trout.

Last Saturday afternoon Mr. E. E. Fisher returned from a visit to the lakes having succeeded in catching a fine string of trout, which were on exhibition in the pharmacy, and were quite a feature of attraction to passers-by, many pronouncing them the finest collection of lake trout they had ever seen.

Mr. Fisher is a very successful piscatorist, and it is always safe, when he starts out on a fishing expedition, to venture the prediction that he will return with a large string of the ever delicious trout. Mr. Fisher says, however, that fishing is unusually good at the lakes at this season of the year.

Luncheon on Decoration Day.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Congregational church will give a luncheon on Decoration Day, at the rooms recently occupied by C. E. Mallette's office, on Front Street. Lunch 15 cents; ice cream and cake 15 cents; both 25 cents.

A revivifying of nature's latent forces occurs every spring. At this time, better than at any other, the blood may be cleansed from the humors which infest it. The best and most popular remedy to use for this purpose is Ayer's Compound Extract of Sarsaparilla.

DO YOU COMB YOUR HAIR?

If so don't fail to get one of those nice nickle back combs at Keller's Pharmacy. Only 10 cents each.

Come in and see them and you will surely say you never have seen so good a comb for so little money in your life.

CONCOURSE OF FRIENDS

Pay Their Final Respects at the Grave of Smith Troy.

ONE OF THE LARGEST FUNERALS

Ever Held in the County—The Funeral Sermon by Rev. Jonas Bushell—Services at the Grave Under the Auspices of the A. F. & A. M. of Port Angeles—Resolutions of Respect by the Minerva Society.

Last Monday at 2 o'clock all that was of earth of the late Hon. Smith Troy was laid to rest in the beautiful Dungeness cemetery. The last sad rites were performed by the Masonic lodge, of which order the deceased was an honored member. The people of Clallam county, who have so often honored this good citizen, turned out en masse to pay their last respects. Several hundreds attended the funeral from Port Angeles, and as many more were unable to attend on account of the lack of conveyances. Nearly every citizen in the East end of the county was present. The schools of Dungeness and neighboring districts were all closed, and teachers and pupils attended the funeral of the man who was for fourteen years superintendent of their county schools.

The funeral services occurred at the family residence on the old homestead, that has been the happy home of this pioneer family for near a quarter century, and were conducted by Rev. Jonas Bushell, of the Congregational church of this city. After a beautiful and appropriate sermon, those assembled viewed for the last time that face that had become so familiar throughout Clallam county and the Northwest.

The silver mounted casket, bearing the simple inscription, "Rest in Peace," and the masonic square and compass on either end, was then borne by brother Masons to the hearse, which was followed in solemn procession to the cemetery, where the beautiful and solemnly impressive Masonic service was conducted by Master Stephen Land.

If there is an abiding place beyond the bounds of time from which the spirit of man can contemplate understandingly the occurrences of earth the feelings of this honored and honorable citizen, in witnessing the sad, solemn grief, and the genuine respect of his fellows, can be better imagined by those who knew him than described. Many, many times during life has he been moved beyond utterance when speaking to kindred or kind and dear friends of the honors the people of Clallam county have conferred upon him. For more than twenty years this people have kept Smith Troy in positions of public trust, and it was only through the plea of declining health and increasing age, that he was permitted to retire within the last two years. The people whose trust and confidence he possessed were repaid by his best service, and behind him he left an injunction to his family to always treat with kindness and serve with patience and fidelity the wants and desires of these friends.

Resolutions of Respect.

The Minerva Literary Society adjourned last Monday, in respect of the late Hon. Smith Troy. A committee was appointed to draft resolutions of respect and submit them for adoption by the society at the meeting next Monday evening. The committee appointed were Messrs. Horace White, A. N. Taylor and L. R. Cole.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.

The Cottage of Mrs. I. R. Herrick Totally Destroyed—Defective Flue the Cause.

The neat little cottage home of Mrs. I. R. Herrick, on Sixth, between Oak and Laurel streets, was completely destroyed by fire last Sunday morning.

A fire had been lighted in the kitchen by Mr. T. T. Aldwell, a brother of Mrs. Herrick, after which he returned to bed, and fell asleep. Later on himself and Mrs. Herrick were awakened with the alarm of fire, and discovered to their sorrow that their house was enveloped in flames. They made a hasty exit, barely having time to escape. The house and nearly all the contents were destroyed. Very unfortunately, indeed, there was no insurance on the dwelling or its contents.

The fire, doubtless, originated from a defective flue. The loss amounting to fully $1,500, falls heavily upon the owner, who has the sympathy of the community in her misfortune.

A Cargo of Seal Skins.

Last Saturday Messrs. J. I. Kirschberg & Co., purchased a cargo comprising 329 seal skins from Neah Bay Indians. The price paid was $9 per skin.

The entire cargo was then sold to Messrs. Boscowtz & Co., a prominent commission firm of Victoria, at a considerable marginal profit.

This little transaction distributed considerable money in the community, the Indians disbursing with a profligate hand a considerable portion of the snug sum, both for necessaries and luxuries.

FIRST CLASS TO GRADUATE

From the Public Schools of This City—Exercises in the Opera House.

The "First Annual Commencement of the Port Angeles High Schools," will be held in in the opera house next Tuesday evening.

The graduating class is comprised of five young men, Ray McClinton, Frank Cram, Roy McClinton, Edgar McCormick and George E. Meagher.

The exercises will, no doubt, prove interesting and instructive. The opera house should be crowed to overflowing with an audience appreciative of the public school system. The fact is apparent that parents are altogether too indifferent to educational interests. Few visit the schools, while the great majority never honor them with their presence, and are therefore totally ignorant as to the profficiency of the teacher or the progress of the scholar. This is inexcusable negligence. It is certainly a duty they owe to their children as well as to themselves to take a more active interest in school affairs.

The program:

Music.
Invocation, ... Rev. Bushell.
Salutatory "Literature," ..... Ray McLaughlin
Essay, "Education as a factor in the promotion of Political Freedom," ..... Frank Cram Strawberry Festival.

It should be almost unnecessary to remind the person in charge of a strawberry festival that the eye of the public, quiet as much as its palate, must be appealed to, writes Frances C. Lanigan in an article on "Some Festival Dainties," in the May Ladies' Home Journal. The colors of the strawberry, its vivid red and pink, should be the prevailing tints of the decorations of the room in which the refreshments are served and the entertainment is given. Dashes of straw color and glimpses of green, if judiciously used, add greatly to the effect of decorations. The scheme of color should be continued in the food served; the attempt to serve only articles which suggest in their coloring the proverbial and actual "strawberries and cream," may at least be made.

Strawberry and vanilla ice cream, angels' food, sponge cake, small blocks of cake iced in pink and white, are all suitable dainties for strawberry festivals. The strawberries themselves may be served either hulled or unhulled. If served unhulled only the most carefully selected berries should be used. They look most inviting arranged upon shallow glass plates, in the centre of which is placed an after-dinner coffee-cup of powdered sugar. At a strawberry festival it would be an excellent plan to have plates of berries arranged in this way ready to hand to any purchaser.

The promptness and certainty of its cure have made Chamberlain's Cough Remedy famous. It is intended especially for coughs, colds croup and whooping cough, and is the most effectual remedy known for these diseases. Mr. C. B. The City Threatened With the Enjoinment of

THE PAYMENT OF CERTAIN MONEYS

Due on the Williams Contract—Mr. Gay Addresses the Council—The City Assessment of 1894 Will Amount to Over $1,000,000—Williams Paid $2,000 On His Contract.

A the regular meeting of the city council meeting last Wednesday evening the mayor and all of the councilmen excepting Crockett were present.

In a communication from City engineer FitzHenry, the fact was disclosed that Eighth street as now surveyed by the United states government is not parallel to streets running east and west in the original townsite, also that Tumwater gulch at Eighth streets is 245 feet wider than at Ninth street, and that the foundation for a bridge at Ninth street, across Valley street gulch, can be made more substantial than at Eighth street.

The following motion prevailed, that, the city engineer is hereby authorized to establish the intersection of all streets on Eighth street according to the official plat of the United States engineers; and that the matter of constructing bridges on Eighth street, be and is hereby referred to the city engineer, city attorney and the street committee, who are requested to report thereon at the next regular meeting.

The secretary of the fire department officially notified the council of the annual election of the following officers of the Port Angeles Fire Department, on the 30th day of May, 1894: Chief, C. F. Merritt; assistant, Frank Dustman; secretary, C. W. Sinnott; treasurer, W. J. Dyke.

W. C. Williams, manager, notified the council that he had been compelled to cease work on the lower pipe line, an account of trouble over the right-of-way, and urged upon the council the need of immediate action to remove obstructions.

The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the city attorney be and he is hereby instructed to proceed to condemn all property through which the pipe line passes, and that the city engineer be requested to furnish the city attorney with a description of all property through which the pipe line passes.

The council was notified that it would be enjoined in the payment of any and all sums allowed W. C. Williams, (in satisfaction of a certain contract) by the vote or the auditing of the same by Councilman McLaughlin.

A motion was lost to the effect that such communication be returned to the foregoing mentioned taxpayers, and a motion to lay on the table was also lost, so the communication is peacefully resting in a state of innocuous desuetude.] W. R. Gay addressed the council concerning various city matters, referrring incidentally to the assessment of city property for the year 1894, and the contract heretofore entered into between the city of Port Angeles and W. C. Williams, manager, and requested that the finance committee of the city council meet with him at the office of the city attorney, at the hour of 7 o'clock p. m., and talk over matters of interest to the city. That it was not his intention to ask any employment at the hands of the city, as an attorney in the matter, or did he expect any compensation whatsoever for any services he might be called upon to render the city as a legal adviser or otherwise.

The finance committee agreed to favor Mr. Gay with such meeting.

Ordinance No 213, providing for the regulation of the sale of vinous liquors, and the juices manufactured from the grape, was passed to its first reading, and referred back to the committee under the rules.

The city attorney was instructed to prepare an ordinance providing for the meeting of the council.

The street commissioner was authorized to drain the water off that portion of the county road leading to the Elwha river, within the city limits.

The street commissioner was instructed to cause that evidence of mossbackism of by-gone days, grass, to be removed from the district bounded by Lincoln and Oak streets.

A committee was appointed to see the county assessor and the ex-officio city assessor in relation to the assessment of city property for the year 1894, reported verbally in the matter, that such officers informed the committee that such assessments would amount to a fraction over the sum of $1,000,000.

The city marshal was authorized to purchase five lengths of stove-pipe and one elbow for the comfort and the conveinence of those in durance vile.

The estimate of work performed by W. C. Williams, manager, up to date in the sum of $2,246 was allowed by the council less 10 per cent., payment being authorized by two electric lighting bonds of $1,000 each. The council adjourned.

Interesting Paragraphs Gathered From the County Press.

East Clallam Record.]

The schooner Challenger left San Francisco on Monday last for this place for a lumber cargo. She has on board about 50 tons of merchandise of this port.

Rev. J. McKeen left here Tuesday on a visit to Quillayute, where he will remain for a week or two. He expects to make his home at East Clallam and will endeavor to get a church built here.

A large vessel which has been loading at Ballard is expected here to take an order of 25,000 feet of clear, seasoned spruce for San Francisco. The lumber is now piled on the wharf here awaiting shipment.

Major H. H. Hobson, special agent of the general land office, finished his investigations here last Monday and returned to Seattle. He has taken considerable testimony in regard to alleged acts of trespass and unlawful timber cutting on settlers' claims hereabouts. The statements of the settlers upon whose lands the alleged acts were committed were taken under oath as well as a mass of other testimony.

Beaver Leader.

The completion of the Port Angeles-Quillayute road is a subject of more general interest in this valley than anything else just at the present time. We, all of us, want to see the remaining portion of that road opened and opened quick. Unless prompt action is taken the summer and the good weather will fly past and the road will not be available for use till the rain and mud make it bad traveling for another season. Every inch of that road should be opened up by July 1st, so that it can be used this summer.

The valley up the river as far as the Wineton postoffice is thickly settled, and most of the choice farming and timber land is taken up; yet, some good homesteads can be found. This region is populated, too, by an energetic class of settlers, who lay aside all petty jealousies and work for the good of their community. A neighborhood settled by such people cannot help but thrive and should one take a trip through that country, say three years hence, he will doubtless be surprised at the great changes which will have taken place.

Let us again ask the resident pastors of the churches of Port Angeles to give a temperance discourse in their respective churches once a month, or at least occasionally. The W. C. T. U. of this place asked this some time ago but, so far as we can learn, but one pastor has responded, Rev. J. Bushell preached on "The War Ship of Moloch" last Sunday evening in his church to a crowded house. The discourse was interesting from first to last. We have the promise of more from the same source and we anticipate another rare treat.

The regular dues of this Union is One Dollar per year; but on account of the scarcity of money at the present time, the Union of Port Angeles carried a motion to admit single ladies at 50 cents a year, hoping to get the young ladies enlisted in the great army of white ribbons.

Girls it is your influence and work that is needed in this movement more than money. Don't think because your father and brother does not drink that you have nothing to do; but remember the thousands of fathers and brothers that are filling drunkards graves and lend a helping hand to this great work.

The saloon men of Minneapolis have joined the ranks of the most radical supporters of Sabbath observance. Because they are compelled to close their own places of business on Sunday, they declare that theatres and other places of amusement shall do likewise. They would even stop the street cars if that were possible. On the principal of "set a thief to catch a thief," it is possible they may have better success than the reformers they are trying to retaliate upon. Let the good work go on.—Union Signal.

Pointer for Travelers.

While Mr. T. J. Richey, of Altona, Mo., was traveling in Kansas, he was taken violently ill with cholera morbus. He called at a drug store to get some medicine and the druggist recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy so highly he concluded to try it. The result was immediate relief, and a few doses cured him completely. It is made for bowel complaint and nothing else. It never fails. For sale by J. C. Hansen, The Fisher Pharmacy.

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

And how you replied:

"Mr. Watkins' compliments to Mrs. Homan, and tell her that he has not read it himself yet."

Well, it was the same dictionary and a great deal of trouble I had to get it out of Mrs. Homan's clutches.

I turned to the letter w and ran my eye down all the words beginning with that letter in quest of those which ended with the same. Willow would suit; so would window. There were others such as wallow, etc., but I rejected them. I rang for my orderly and had him make inquiries among the people and learn whether there was any place in this neighborhood called by a name in which willow or window occurred. Now, I had not the least reason for supposing that even if my assumption were correct the word which began and ended with a w was the name of a place. It might be a verb. It might be anything, but nevertheless I at once jumped to the conclusion that it was the name of the place where I was to find the brothers.

I had hardly uttered my directions when both my nephews cried out at once:

"Why, Uncle Sam, there's Curry's Window." And Harry, who takes more liberties with me than the other, gave me to understand that we were all duffers not to have searched Curry's Window before.

As I had not the least notion of what Curry's Window was, they proceeded to enlighten me. Curry's Window, they said, was a little black square hole high up in the face of the smooth sheer cliff which extended from Dhu-Corrig to my coos. In short, Curry's Window was the hole out of which the piast in Crohoor-beg's story had appeared when she devoured the two fishermen.

This was a curious coincidence, and indeed, as Harry suggested, it was a singular thing that we should have explored the caves in distant islands, yet not have explored this cavity which was near Dhu-Corrig. But then how could the boys have got thither, for there is no climbing on that cliff, which starts sheer out of the sea and is accessible neither by land nor water? I brooded over this all the night, and the more I thought about it the more absurd did it seem that the brothers should be immured there. It was just possible of course that the brothers, having fallen into the sea, might have been sucked under by a current and whirled into some cavern of which Curry's Window was another aperture. The theory was just imaginable, but no more. However, as we had tried to work out so many absurd theories, I thought I might as well work out this absurd theory, too, as do nothing.

Accordingly I laid my plans that night, and next day had one of my men lowered from the top of the cliff by a rope. In order to signal to those who held the rope I went out in a boat rowed by the coast guards, who have been extremely helpful to me in all this business. Lieutenant Crumps indeed, that steadiest of churchgoers, who never once to my knowledge has missed even the Wednesday evening service, has taken the matter very coolly. Whenever I refer to the disappearance of the boys or the affliction of the Freeman family, he says in a formal manner, as if he were answering the responses, "It is indeed a thousand pities." I blazed out on him on the last occasion, which had the effect of waking him up a little. However, I need not complain, for, though not actively helpful, he lets me direct the movements of his people, who are extremely sympathetic and active in the matter.

From the water then I signaled to the men, who on the edge of the cliff lowered the explorer to Curry's Window, motioning them to the right or to the left, so as to drop their man exactly to the correct point. He was the most active and intelligent of my subconstables and went down provided with the means of striking a light and exploring the cavity. We saw him stand in the aperture and signal to us that he should be again lowered. This we did, and he descended into the interior, where he remained for more than an hour. However, to make a long story short, my subconstable reported to me in the evening that Curry's Window was the small opening of an enormous underground hollow with three huge galleries branching off from a vast central space, where was a pool. He explored the whole place, shouting as he went and brandishing his torch. His description of the vast cavern was so interesting that my nephews were very anxious to make the descent themselves, and I promised that next summer when you are with me we should make a party and go down with torches, but said that I was in no mood at present for agreeable explorations.

I am now again alone in my office, writing this while all the world is wrapped in slumber. Here nightly I sit cogitating and reflecting like some stupid old owl in his barn perch, thinking and thinking till my mind becomes a perfect blank. I would consider myself a sheer fool but for the fact that we had a very sharp Dublin detective down here for a fortnight, who, after having sent us on several wild goose chases, went away at last declaring that we were all mad. What report he sent in to the office I don't know, but he and my men had words before parting, and they gave him plainly to understand that they regarded him as no better than a pretentious ass or "bosthoon."

I fancy his report is that John Freeman certainly ran away. That no one who lives here believes.

CHAPTER X.

CONTINUATION OF MR. WATKINS' NARRATIVE.

So you will see that we suffered a very sore disappointment. We seemed on the verge of solution of this mystery, and now we were as far away from it as ever. This I may observe was the sixty-fourth pigeon shot. For two days the boys had shot none. The pigeons were virtually exterminated or banished, and I had deprived the brothers Freeman of what was apparently their sole means of communicating with the world out of their mysterious prison, and that was not a pleasant reflection to me—that is to say, I and my nephews, for in the meantime Joseph had come in, empty handed, as usual of late, and sat there dumb and stupid for a long time. At last Harry said: "It is no use, uncle, going after these pigeons for a good while now. We must give them time to come back. Lend us your rifle; I'd like to have a shot at a seal. There are three or four of them always moving about between your cove and Dhu-Corrig. I used to see an odd one there last summer, but there seems to be quite a colony of them there now."

"All right, lads," I said. "Take the rifle. You will find the boat in the coos. She's small, remember, and easily capsized, so take care of yourselves."

I was anxious now to be by myself in order to meditate and recover from the state of excitement into which I had been thrown by the events of the day. The fact was that my mind, now for so many months absorbed by and concentrated upon this extraordinary, increasing and expanding mystery, was beginning to be somewhat unhinged. I thought of the lost lads all day and dreamed of them perhaps all night, for certainly I never awoke without being conscious that I had been dreaming about them. I am haunted, too, by poor Mrs. Freeman's wan, sorrow stricken face. Mr. Freeman, when last I saw him, was bowed in the shoulders, he who used to be as straight as a drilled soldier, and his look was that of an aged man. I, as head of the police of this district, have of course been blamed for not doing more, though I confess no word of censure has reached my ears. But, to resume, I now come to something that will startle and amaze even your philosophical soul.

The boys returned that evening in the dusk. They had seen several seals and had got a shot at one, but without doing any execution. I was rather surprised at the number of seals seen by the boys, for, though seals are not uncommon on this coast, such a number as my nephews had seen in the same place was something quite unusual. As we sat at the tea table, while the boys were talking in an animated manner about the events of the afternoon, and while I could hardly for a single instant keep my thoughts off the lost brothers, I heard Harry say to my wife, "And there was one seal, Aunt Mary, and every time he came up there was a ball bobbing in the water behind him, and when he went down it disappeared." Instantaneously the thought sprang into my mind, "Could it be that John Freeman, or John and Edward, were signaling to us by means of that seal?" The supposition was of course absurd and farfetched. How could they catch a seal in the first instance? Nevertheless the appearance of a seal swimming about with something attached to it was in itself startling enough.

"I will go out with you in the morning," I said. "That seal we must shoot."

Early next day, though the wind had risen and the sea was rough, my nephews and I took the boat together at the shady coos and rowed out. Between the coos and Dhu-Corrig we saw some half dozen seals. Several times I had a good opportunity of shooting one of them, but did not shoot. The seal I wanted was not visible. We came home for early dinner and went out again immediately after. The boys, who now knew what I wanted and who were not short-sighted like myself, kept a sharp look-out for the seal of which I was in quest. As we rowed slowly along Joseph said:

"There is a seal lying on the Corrig-a-skame rock. That may be it, for I remember it was a small one. Do you see anything behind him, Harry?"

"No," said Harry, "but it is hard to see anything in the place where he is lying. When he begins to move, we can see the ball better, for it will hop and jump somewhere behind him."

"Row on very slowly, lads," said I.

We were coming from the east, and the seal was lying on the rock with his head to the west. The wind, too, was blowing from that direction. Corrig-a-skame was a long black rock covered, literally all over, with little mussels growing as thick as grass. It was invisible at high water, but at low tide stood out pretty well and resembled the back of a small whale. The name means the Rock of the Leap. Some active wight in old times had sprung from the corrig to the cliff or from the cliff to the corrig. It is a common name for such rocks on the west coast. Almost every league of the coast exhibits somewhere a corrig-a-skame or a rock called after somebody's leap—Lem-con or Lem-cathal, etc.

I had the boys wrap their handkerchiefs round the leather of the oars to deaden the sound of the rowing and went to the bow with my rifle. The boys, sitting sternward of their oars so as to keep their eyes on the seal, rowed gently forward.

"I am sure it is the same," whispered Harry, who was just behind me, "and I think I see the ball too. Yes, it is," he added, "and I see the ball. Fire at him now, uncle."

While I was trying to get a steady aim, which was difficult, owing to the rocking of the boat, the creature suddenly turned its head, saw us and commenced bounding and flopping forward along the length of the rock, while behind it as it moved swiftly along a round ball jumped too. I fired and missed. The creature sent forth a loud mewing sort of cry and splashed into the water on the farther side.

"It has left the ball behind," cried the two boys both together, in great excitement.

This was true, the ball having been caught in some cleft so that the string which connected it with the animal had broken. None of us saw exactly how it happened, but the creature was gone, and the ball remained behind. I could not see it now myself, as it was no longer in motion, but the boys did. We rowed up to the rock, but the surf all around it was so great that we could not land. The wind was steadily rising and the sea beginning to run unpleasantly high. My boat, too, was small and light, not intended to stand rough weather. The tide, however, was flowing, and in a short time I knew that some wave would sweep the ball off the rock. We kept the boat's head to the wind for about three-quarters of an hour, and at last had the pleasure of seeing one large wave carry the ball clear back off the rock. A little later the ball had disengaged itself from the surf. You can imagine with what a thrill of delight I took this waif into my hands. Though there was little rational ground for such a belief, I felt an assurance amounting to conviction that I had in my hands the explanation of the mysterious tragedy. The ball was a small bladder, apparently a sheep's bladder, and was very tightly fastened at the mouth with whipcord or strong fishing line. When the boys looked to see me open it, I did nothing of the kind. I had the boys row, went myself to the tiller and turned the boat's head home. I had staid in the vicinity of Corrig-a-skame too long, and I knew it. I knew that good steering and good luck, too, were now required in order to enable us to make my coos. I did not open the bladder, partly because I did not desire to remain in this jeopardy a moment longer than was necessary, and partly because I wished, in the event of an accident befalling us, that the unopened bladder with its contents should still be left swimming. The situation indeed was momentarily becoming more serious. The wind increased to a gale, and the huge waves lifted the little boat and propelled her forward like a chip. I feared to bring her broadside to the wind and waves. Yet that was necessary in order to get into the shady coos. So I steered past it and let her drive forward to the Basin, a mile farther on, the entrance to which was wide and did not offer such a sharp angle to be turned as did my own little cove. However, not to be tedious when I have so many infinitely more important things to relate, we made the Basin in safety and drew up our boat on the coast guards' slip. Bidding the boys say nothing to any one about our waif, we three started for home. The bladder was in my top coat pocket, and I kept my hand upon it during the walk. I was in a fever of excitement and expectation.

CHAPTER XI.

MR. WATKINS' NARRATIVE CONTINUED.

When I got home, I went straight into my office by myself, locked the door, cut open the cord which bound the mouth of the bladder, ripped the skin up carefully, or as carefully as I could with my penknife, and from the interior took out half a sheet of note paper. On one side was writing in ink. It was the conclusion of a letter of no importance; indeed it was a tradesman's letter and signed John Costello, a musical instrument merchant in our country town. On the other side were characters in red, written with some blunt instrument like the pointed end of a match or bit of timber, and at the foot of the writing, in larger letters, were two names—viz, "John Freeman, Edward Freeman"—each name in different handwriting and representing the signatures of the lads, which I knew. The body of the red writing was Edward Freeman's. It was to the following effect:

We are here at the bottom of the "Devil's Parlor." There is a way right down to us. Most of Charley's loaves have come down to us. We came in by the square hole high up in the sea cliff. Both well. JOHN FREEMAN.
EDWARD FREEMAN.

By the "square hole!" The piast's hole! Who could have thought it? The little black spot far away up in the face of the sea cliff.

The murder was out; all was known. Thrusting the letter into my pocket, I rushed at the door like a madman, and forgetting that I had locked it myself thundered upon it with my fist, roaring:

"Saddle Gray Francy!"—it was the name of my fastest horse—"Saddle Gray Francy!" I kept shrieking.

The boys, who were all the time in the passage outside my door, clamored in reply. One of them seemed to run off into the yard shrieking out my message. My wife and the servants ran to the door of the office. In short, it seemed as if the whole household had gone suddenly mad. Of course what I describe here took only a few seconds to pass. I opened the door and rushed along the passage, not caring whom I threw down; through the kitchen, out into the yard and straight to the stable I ran. There already my orderly and Joseph, working as for life and death, were saddling and bridling Gray Francy. In another moment I was on his back, without my hat, and tearing down the avenue and then along the road which led to the rectory. I was aware of people standing here and there with scared faces, but little I cared for that. Since I was born I was never so mad as that day, nor if I live for a thousand years could I be so again. I took Francy at a leap over the avenue gate of the rectory and galloped up to the house, shouting as I did so:

"They are found!"

The avenue is a short one. My voice could have been heard from the gate in every room of the house, and was. No commander in the hottest moment of battle ever roared to his men as I did that day as I galloped up to Mr. Freeman's hall door. Every one there knew the significance of my wild shoutings. "They are found!" could refer only to the two lost ones. Mrs. Freeman rushed from the hall door before I reached it. She raised her hands to the sky as if in prayer; then sank on her knees and fell forward. The boy Charley came after and then the servants. After all came Mr. Freeman, his face as white as paper, but his manner calm and collected. Through the wood and shrubbery several men came rushing and tumbling and behind me up the avenue others who had followed me along the road. In a few words I told Mr. Freeman all.

"Have you the letter?" he said.

COXEYISM AND M'KINLEYISM.

Republicans should be the last to complain of "Coxeyism." It is of their own doing. It is the legitimate fruit of their own sowing. For a quarter of a century they have legislated for the special interests of classes. They have given the markets of the country to a few manufacturers, with the privilege of fixing the price of their wares themselves; they have levied the taxes of the nation on the consuming and producing masses; they have placed the extent of the circulating medium within the control of the national banks. They have thus ground down the masses that a few might roll in wealth. Is it not quite natural that those who have been so long imposed upon, in view of the special benefits that have been heretofore conferred upon more fortunate citizens, should now ask for specific aid? Is it not in keeping with the condition of affairs that they should now say "it is our turn?" Is it strange that these, too, should now strive to get at the public crib?

General Coxey is asking governmental aid for the toiling millions, and they need it, more's the pity. But greater the pity that the reason they are in need of it is tha just such aid has been granted those who have not needed it for a quarter of a century.

It is, indeed, time that the true philosophers, the true patriots and true lovers of good government get together and save our country from "Coxeyism," or "McKinleyism" as you may prefer to call it. They are exactly similar, except that "Coxeyism" has its excuse for existence and is dependent upon "McKinleyism."

THE Tribune still asserts that the county auditor purchased the type writers for the county officers about which so much has been written, and that the county commissioners were compelled to pay for them. Again we say this is not true. The county auditor was asked to purchase these machines by the officers wanting them, and, believing that the officers should have them, told the agents for the Barlock type writers that if they would send the machines, he would personally pay the express charges to and from Portland, should the county commissioners decide not to purchase them. The commissioners were made aware of this contract. That is all there is to the matter.

WHAT a princely conception the Tribune has of that sentiment, "sweet charity." It claims to have performed that mission for the county last year. Only think of it! TWENTY-EIGHT HUNDRED DOLLARS alone for the publication of the delinquent tax list. Who knows but what that is the reward of the angel of charity for the heroic sacrifice. It's a trite and true saying that charity never goes unrequited.

HERMAN H. KOHLSAAT has sold his controlling interest in the Chicago Inter-Ocean to William Penn Nixon, the editor. It is claimed that the paper will be run as a strong Harrison organ. Kohlsaat is a McKinley advocate, while Nixon has always approved his ideas. It is said Mr. Harrison's friends furnished the money for the purchase.

WE suggest that if Senator Hill is looking for a suitable chair on the other side of the aisle, that he occupy that recently vacated by Senator John B. Allen. It will not be needed by a Republican. Senator Allen's successor will be a free trader and a free silver man.

AT a recent meeting of the tariff reform club in New York City, the sentiment was strongly in favor of the income tax. James C. Carter, the great lawyer, referred to it as the choicest feature of the Wilson bill.

THE St. Louis Republic characterises John Sherman's contempt for "Coxeyism" as the contempt of a snob for a poor relation. Very well said.

COMMISSIONERS' NOTES.

Some Important Matters Passed Upon Before the Board Adjourned.

THURSDAY MAY 10TH.

The petition to vacate Grand avenue, which passes through the P. S. C. C. second addition, was granted.

The interest and penalty on the tax of 1891, assessed against lots 31 and 32, block 4, of Gay & Bickford's First addition to Port Angeles was rebated and the county treasurer was instructed to give receipt of same on receipt of the original amount of tax.

The treasurer was also instructed to remit taxes assessed against the property of the M. E. church, as such property is except from taxation by the laws of the state.

The matter of further assisstance being extended to the county needy by providing them with employment upon the public roads was taken under consideration, and it was ordered that all work be discontinued in the vicinity of Port Angeles after Saturday, May 12, 1894 Those in need of assistance, however, and quailfying as prescribed by a resolution heretofore adopted by the board, would be given work in the districts throughout the county where the same is needed.

The chairman of the board was authorized to insure the court house and contents for a term of three years, the same to be paid from the money refunded by the Imperial & Lyon Insurance Company, which cancelled insurance when it withdrew its business from this county.

The matter of reducing the salary of deputy county officers, will be considered at a special session of the board on the 22nd inst. County officers have been notified to appear before the board at that time for the consideration of the question.

The board adjourned to meet on May the 22nd.

UNRECORDED MORTGAGE.

Clouded Title to a Mill Plant at East Clallam in Controversy.

The superior court is occupied with a a law suit, involving over $3,000 and a nice little point of law.

The property involved is the sawmill plant of Earle & Donohue, situated at East Clallam.

The foundation of the suit dates back to May, 1891, at which time Messrs. Kratz & Frazier, purchased the plant in question from Russell & Co., of Seattle, executing for deferred payment a note and mortgage for $3,000, which was, however, either carelessly or ignorantly recorded in Seattle.

Kratz then sold his interest to B. F. Burgess, who in turn disposed of the same to Frazier, taking a note and mortgage in payment therefor. This together with a mortgage executed on the plant in favor of Gilpin for $700 was duly recorded with the county auditor of Clallam.

Earle then successfully negotiated the purchase of the property, buying Frazier's interest and taking up the two mortgages of record in the county.

Now comes Mendalhall, who succeeded to the business of Russel & Co., and demands the liquidation of the original $3,000 mortgage, of record in King county, the legitimate result of which is the pending suit. Mendalhall produces the deposition of Frazier, the latter alleges that he acquainted Earle of the existence of the $3,000 mortgage.

In defense, Earle alleges that he did not know of the existence of the $3,000 mortgage until fully eight months after the purchase of the plant from Frazier, and that Frazier did not acquaint him with the fact at the time of the transaction, he (Earle) as a matter of fact, understanding and believing that when he purchased Frazier's interest and liquidated the two mortgages of record, he was getting a clear, perfect, unclouded title to the property.

Messrs. Geo. Somerindyke and Geo. C. Hatch appear for the plaintiff, and Will R. Gay and Edward Brayden for the defense.

Will Meet Here If Expenses Are Payed

In a letter recently received from Hon. Allen Weir by the editor of THE DEMOCRAT-LEADER, the former authorizes the publication of the statement to the effect that if the local tide land litigants will pay the traveling and living expenses of the state board of tide land commissioners, they will hold a meeting in this city, for the trial of cases in litigation. The proposition will bear investigation, as it doubtless would be a stroke of economy on the part of litigants to accept the seemingly liberal offer. Otherwise litigants will have to pay their own as well as the expenses of witnesses to Olympia which would perhaps necessitate a greater outlay than the former.

Stockholder's Meeting.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Democrat Printing and Publishing Company, will be held on Friday, June 15, 1894, at two o'clock p. m., for the purpose of transacting such business as may come before it.

Will Port Angeles celebrate?

Last year citizens did not finally determine that they would celebrate until a few weeks before the Fourth, the result was anything but a creditable demonstration. If Angeles is going to observe the national holiday, it would be the better part of wisdom to begin preparations at once. This would insure a good miscellaneous program of games and sports, and justify an invitation to the surrounding towns to join in the festivities of the day.

Mr. C. Smith accompanied with Miss Smith, of Chillicothe, Ohio, are making a tour of the Sound. Mr. Smith is a wealthy Ohioan, largely interested in mining properties, and will doubtless closely examine the coal and iron resources while in this state.

Prof. Townsend and Mr. Alexander, fish experts of the Albatross, went to Neah Bay last Friday morning on the Willapa to make an examination at that locality regarding seals, fish, whales and other marine products, and may remain there several days.

Messrs. Morrissey and Evans of Dungeness, are in the city.

The social hop given last Friday in honor of the opening to the general public of the New Albany, was quite largely attended, and pronounced a very enjoyable affair.

Garlick's Red Rose Potatoes.

Almost two years ago Mr. Garlick of Lost Mountain precinct, planted a few hills of the potato known as the California Red Rose, with the view of introducing it into this county if it proved to be a prolific bearer. His success was astonishing. He did not know but the "year" had something to do with it, so he tried it again last year. The result was even better than the first year. From his start of a few hills the year before he harvested about two tons last year, and had no trouble in disposing of nearly all he had to his neighbors at five cents per pound. He has placed a few sacks for sale with the Farmers' Mercantile Co., of Dungeness.

Notice for Publication.

United States Land Office,
Seattle, Wash., Feb. 9th, 1894.

Notice is hereby given that in compliance with the provisions of the Act of Congress of June 3, 1878, entitled, "An Act for the sale of timber lands in the states of California, Oregon, Nevada and Washington territory."

GEORGE E. MICHELL, of Fairholm, county of Clallam, state of Washington has this day filed in this office his sworn statement No. 6425, for the purchase of the Lots 18, 23, 24, 25 and 26, of section No. 30, in township No. 30 n, range No. 9 west, and will offer proof to show that the land sought is more valuable for its timber or stone than for agricultural purposes and to establish his claim to said land before the Register and Receiver of this office at Seattle, washington, on Tuesday, the first day of May, 1894.

He names as witnesses: M. J. Carrigan, Iver Estensen and Horace White of Fairholm, wash., and William Dedman of Gettysburg, wash.

Any and all persons claiming adversely the above described lands are requested to file their claims in this office or or before said first day of May, 1894.

A NEW MESSIAH.

He Stirs Up Things In the State of Washington and Is Jailed.

News has reached here that Loon Lake, 60 miles from Spokane, on the Spokane and Northern railway, is in a fever of excitement. Six weeks ago William Lewis and wife came to the Lake and instituted a series of revival meetings. Lewis proved to be a fluent speaker and captured his audience. He was energetic and enthusiastic and inspired in his hearers a wonderful degree of confidence.

When he had his audience thoroughly aroused, among other things he stated one evening that he possessed supernatural power. He claimed to be a specially ordained apostle of God and had come into the community to work miracles and save souls. The meetings were conducted in the schoolhouse, and while he succeeded in securing many followers an element in the community, believing him an impostor, succeeded in getting the permission granted him of preaching in the schoolhouse revoked.

He was loud in denunciation of his persecutors and finally disturbed a religious meeting, which resulted in his arrest, trial and conviction. Being unable to pay the fine, he was committed to jail at Colville. He now lies ill at Loon Lake, and the authorities are unable to remove him.

He declared that he was empowered by God to heal the sick, cast out devils and raise the dead. He secured 15 or 20 converts, who went through a singular gymnastic performance in his soul cleansing process. They were required to die a spiritual death, lying upon their backs on the floor, closing their eyes and passing into a trance.

Before they entered the spirit land Lewis reminded the converts that it was easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven, whereupon he required them to surrender to him their pocketbooks, rings, watches, pins, jewelry and valuables of every description. At this juncture all who refused to accept the faith were excluded from the room.

The community is still considerably wrought up over the affair, and feeling is divided.—Spokane Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

Review of Seattle Market for the Past Week.

OATS, BARLEY AND CORN HIGHER

Dairy Products are Lower—Dried Fruits Higher—New Vegetables in Market—Clearing House Balances.

SEATTLE, May 18, 1894.

Exchanges at Seattle, Tacoma and Portland clearing houses to-day were:

	Clearances.	Balances.
Seattle	$ 87,723.63	$22,898.49
Tacoma	97,448.00	18.581.00
Portland	164,000.00	45,000.00

During the past week another advance has taken place in oats, barley and corn; butter and cheese have declined; vegetables have fluctuated somewhat and several new ones have been added to the list, while strawberries and cherries have declined.

Corn has been advanced $2 per ton and feed meal $3 per ton. Oats are $2 per ton higher, the demand being strong from San Francisco, and chicken feed wheat has been marked up $1 per ton. There is no change in the export wheat market, but good milling wheat sells at from 56 to 57 cents per bushel.

All grades of butter have declined 2 cents per pound, while California cheese is 1 cent lower.

In fruits and vegetables the changes are very slight. New onions have taken the place of old ones and are cheaper. New potatoes are more plentiful, while green peas and string beans are unchanged. No important changes have been made in the wholesale grocery market. Dried fruits have advanced slightly and all sugars are steady at the prices quoted last week.

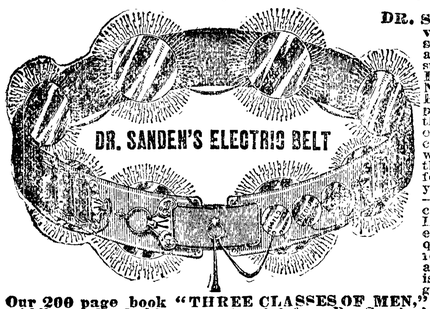
HAVE YOU TRIED DRUGS AND FAILED TO FIND A CURE FOR RHEUMATISM, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, KIDNEY, LIVER and BLADDER COMPLAINTS, DYSPEPSIA, LAME-BACK, &c.



DR. SANDEN'S ELECTRIC BELT with Electro Magnetic Suspensory will cure without medicine all of the above troubles. Those who suffer from Nervous Debility, Losses, Drains, Lost Manhood, Nervousness, Sleeplessness, Poor Memory, all Female Complaints, and general Ill health, the effects of abuses, excesses, worry or exposure, will find relief and prompt cure in our marvelous invention, which requires but a trial to convince the most skeptical. In ignorance of effects you may have unduly drained your system of nerve force and vitality—which is electricity—and thus caused your weakness or lack of force. If you replace into your system the elements thus drained, which are required for vigorous strength, you will remove the cause and health, strength and vigor will follow at once. This is our plan and treatment, and we guarantee a cure or refund money. Our 200 page book "THREE CLASSES OF MEN," should be read by every young, middle-aged and old man, sent sealed, free. Dr. Sanden's Electric Belt is no experiment as we have restored thousands to robust health and vigor, after all other treatments failed, as can be shown by hundreds of cases throughout this and other States, who would gladly testify, and from many of whom we have strong letters bearing testimony to their recovery after using our Belt.

WE HAVE CURED THESE—WE CAN CURE YOU!

CENERAL DEBILITY CURED.

San Francisco, Cal., August 14, 1892.
Dr. A. T. Sanden, Dear Sir:—Before I used your belt I was troubled with lost vigor, vital weakness, and almost a complete loss of power. I would get up with a very tired feeling, bones aching, etc.; since using your belt I have had a new lease of life. I now enjoy life better than I have for ten years past. I have the utmost confidence in your treatment. You can publish this statement, also have others write or call on me. Truly yours, H. A. BOWEN, 26 and 28 Turk St.

RHEUMATISM AND LAMENESS CURED.

Portland, Oregon, April 18 1892.
Dr. A. T. Sanden. Dear Sir:—I got one of your belts two weeks ago for rheumatism, from which I suffered for several years. For the past six months I had not been able to work. Your belt has placed me in almost perfect health in the two weeks I have used it. I can walk comfortably, and feel like a new man generally.
M. E. HUGHES, Proprietor International Hotel.

NERVOUS DEBILITY—LOSS OF VIGOR.

Tacoma, Wash., October 24, 1892.
Dr. A. T. Sanden, Dear Sir:—I have been using your Electric belt for general nervous debility, and to-day feel better than I have for five years. I have gained in vigor daily, and am strong in every part.
Yours gratefully, CHAS. LUETKA.

LAME BACK AND RHEUMATISM.

Portland Oregon, September 26, 1892.
Dr. A. T. Sanden. Dear Sir:—Years of exposure and hard work, combined with the strain coming from the jar of an engine, gave me a severe case of lame back, from which I suffered for seven years. I was so bad that I could not bend my back. Was all doubled up with it. I bought one of your belts. It helped me in ide of two days, and I continued to wear it for four months, being perfectly cured. That was two years ago, and I am as well today as I ever was in my life. I know your belt well, and I know lots of people who have been cured by it. Many others need it, and if they would try it they would find it the same as I did—the best remedy in the world. I am located here permanently, and will be glad to talk with any one who wants to inquire about it.
ROBERT BURREL, Engineer Hotel Portland.

LOST VITALITY AND STRENGTH.

Everett, Wash, June 18, 1892.
Dr. A. T. Sanden, Dear Sir:—Since wearing your belt I have been greatly benefited. I feel my old energy fast returning; and after a months use of the belt I find myself twice as vigorous as before. My memory is now nearly perfect, and each day shows for the better. I feel much stronger than before using the belt. Yours truly, HENRY SCHULTZ.

THE DR. SANDEN ELECTRIC BELT is a complete galvanic battery, made into a belt so as to be easily worn during work or rest, and it gives soothing, prolonged currents which are instantly felt throughout all weak parts, or we forfeit $5,000. It has an Improved Electric Suspensory, the greatest boon ever given weak men, and we warrant it to cure any of the above weaknesses, and to enlarge shrunken limbs, or parts, or Money Refunded. They are graded in strength to meet all stages of weakness in young, middle-aged or old men, and will cure the worst cases in two or three months. Address for full information.

When I showed it to him, he looked down first at the signatures, then read the letter and handed it back to me without a word, but the look that was in his face, What pen could interpret? Certainly not mine. I did not wait an instant longer, but galloped back straight to my own house. I had recovered my self possession after this wild debauch of the reason. On the way I met the boys and the orderly and after that three of my men wearing their usual cast iron expression and striding quietly in the direction taken by their insane officer. Indeed I am much too excitable to command a force whose gravity would put the Spaniard to shame. As it was now drawing toward dusk and various preparations and arrangements had to be made, I postponed the descent till next morning. I procured ropes that night from the village. I sent for a man now a farm laborer in the neighborhood, but who I knew had formerly worked in mines in Cornwall, and consulted him about the best means of descent. He went from me to the forge of our village blacksmith, who, under his directions, made that night a sort of iron stirrup to be attached to the rope's end. I set the boys to make torches of splintered bogwood. Harry, however, who was ingenious, provided besides sods of turf soaked in paraffin oil. These, stuck on the ends of skewers, he assured me, would make a grand blaze. We tried one and found it excellent. The news flew like wildfire over the country, and those who held by the piast theory were put to shame. Crowds of people came about the house till the nuisance reached such dimensions that I ordered my men to clear them away, which they did with difficulty. The public houses in Dun-Beacon were full that night, and the publicans did a roaring trade. I nominated the men who were to proceed with me in the morning to the "Devil's Parlor" and ordered them to be in readiness an hour before dawn and strictly commanded them to tell no one.

I did not go to bed at all that night, though I may have dozed a little by the office fire. At 5 I woke up the boys. At 6 my party, and none but my party, being assembled, we started, well provided with strong ropes, candles, torches, paraffin steeped turnes, lucifer matches, etc. I had with me, too, a flask of brandy and sandwiches. I did not know in what exhausted condition I might find the lost. They said indeed "we are well," but nevertheless— One of the men in my party had formerly accompanied Edward Freeman when he made that abortive descent and had found nothing but Charley's loaves. It was quite plain now that from the entrance there were two ways leading down—one a blind alley ending in the small chamber, the other conducting into some great subterranean cavern to which there were two openings, one here on the hillside, the other the square opening in the sea cliff—viz, the hole out of which Crohoor-beg's imaginary piast had projected itself in that very remarkable and terrible manner when he devoured the Lau-beg men. Arrived at the spot, we finished our preparations and waited for the light, for it was still dark. It was not raining, but the weather was wild, and a strong gale blew from the west. I had the man who had been with Edward Freeman show me the place where he had made the descent. Avoiding this, I put my foot in the stirrup and bade them lower away. I had round my neck fastened by a strap a bag containing half a dozen of Joseph's peculiar torches, and in my hands, which clasped both it and the rope, a skewer to serve as a handle for those torches. For a short time I had to keep myself away from the rock with my second foot, that which was not in the stirrup. Presently I felt myself swinging in midair in black darkness and certainly in some vast hollow. In a few minutes more I would be clasping the hands of the poor lost lads. Then I shouted. Vast hollow echoes and reverberations traveling through what seemed interminable spaces and endless galleries responded to my shout—echoes and reverberations and nothing else. That surprised me—but did not much surprise me. The cavern was plainly enormous, and there were faraway winding corridors into which my voice might not travel. Moreover, the boys might be and probably were asleep. "We will soon find them and wake them up," I said. I continued at intervals to shout, "Jack!" "Ned!" and as loudly as I could roar. Still there came no response but the huge echoes which now sounded in my ears like the laughter and mockery of subterranean giants. Whether I was descending or not I could not tell. Above me it was as dark as below, and of course I had long since ceased to hear the voices of those at the cave's mouth and the running of the rope over the block of timber which my miner had laid on the edge of the precipice. No doubt I was descending, but for all I could feel and perceive I might be fixed and stationary in the darkness or even descending. The minutes now began to seem like hours. Would I ever reach the bottom of this awful abyss, and to think that those pleasant young friends of mine, so gay, bright and good natured, so full of life, vigor and activity, should be immured here, one of them for many months. Again and again I shouted, "Jack!" "Ned!" "Ned!" "Jack!" "Are you there?" "Halloa!" "Halloa!" and still no sound reached my ears but mocking laughter and supernatural echoes which seemed to grow greater as I descended and rolled like thunder round the cavern.

At last I heard a sharp click under my feet and experienced a soft shock. I was on the bottom. The click was the noise of my iron stirrup striking on a rock or stone. Still keeping my foot in the stirrup, I threw off my bag of turnes, opened it, stuck one on the point of my skewer, struck a match and ignited the torch. It sent out a good blaze, but revealed where I stood nothing but great bowlders and on one side the walls of the cavern rising sheer and black. I gave the preconcerted signal, two strong jerks at the rope, which was at once drawn up. The rope and stirrup looked very curious dangling there above my head as they disappeared into the thick and black darkness. I continued to shout at intervals, but eventually desisted until the coming of my assistants. Either the Freemans were sound asleep or were in some far gallery of the cavern beyond the reach of my voice, or they were now—terrible thought!—beyond the reach of human help, and we were too late, perhaps only a few hours too late.

The next to descend was my head constable; then in succession the two boys, Harry and Joseph, then my orderly and last a subconstable named Mulvaney. These and no more I had permitted to descend. I had the orderly remain with the rope and keep his torch burning there. All together now we raised our voices and shouted as loud as we could bawl and did so again and again. Save the echoes, now grown more vast and appalling, there was no response. I was becoming more and more alarmed. If the boys were alive, they must have heard that shout. The part of the cavern in which we found ourselves seemed to be a long and not very wide gallery. We explored this to the end, and as we had plenty of torches the whole floor of the gallery was brilliantly illuminated. Not a thing out of the common could escape our notice here. We came to the end of it, turned back, passed the orderly where he stood beside the rope with his torch burning in his hand, and after awhile found ourselves in a much vaster space, the roof of which even the combined light of our torches did not reveal at all. On one side of this space there was a pool of agitated water, to which the floor of the cavern sloped rapidly. In its vicinity and running somewhat in the same direction as that which we had already explored ran another great gallery, the roof of which we could see. This also we now explored yard by yard, scrutinizing the floor carefully as we went. Unlike the other, which ended in a mere wall of rock, this gallery ended in a great pool or pit of madly boiling water. We returned to that great central space from which these galleries branched and explored it foot by foot. Here we made the first discovery. It was my nephew, Harry, who made it—viz, traces of a fire. On a level rock not only were there all the signs of a hearth, but in its vicinity an enormous heap of ashes. It was plain that this fire had been burning many months. After the excitement which attended this discovery and the consultation which succeeded it we moved forward. In short, we explored step by step and foot by foot every portion of the cave up to the entrance in the sea cliff by which they had come in without finding the lost ones. We discovered many traces of them—bones of the sheep from which the bladder had been extracted, crumbs of bread near that hearth place and other signs and tokens; but, alive or dead, the Freemans were not there. We learned, too, how they had been trapped, how having got in they were not able to get out again, and also indications of their pathetic efforts to climb out of their trap. Many signs and tokens of the recent presence of the brothers and especially of the long continued residence there of poor John Freeman we found, but not what we wanted to find—not themselves. Again and again we searched the vast cavern through and through, expecting now only to find their bodies sunk in some cleft of the great bowlders with which the cavern seemed filled, but our search was vain. As our investigations became closer and more minute we discovered various other relics and signs of the presence of the brothers, but neither their bodies nor any opening into which they might have fallen. True, they might have died on the edge of that pool which evidently communicated with the sea by some passage, for the water there ebbed and flowed; they might have died in its verge and their bodies afterward floated away on the rising tide and been born through that passage. Again they might have committed suicide by throwing themselves into that boiling chasm in which the second of those galleries to which I have referred terminated, a chasm like a huge caldron of madly seething waters. Yet there was something quite absurd and incredible in both theories. When they wrote that letter and signed it, they were in good health and had plenty of food. That they had plenty of good food we knew as well from their letter as from its presence in the cavern, for we discovered their storehouse—a cranny between two bowlders in which were bread and pieces of salted mutton. It was easy to see, too, how that mutton had been procured. Hard by were the bones of a sheep from which the flesh had been stripped. The sheep had evidently been clifted, to use a local expression—that is to say, had fallen from above through the opening into the cavern. We did not disturb that little magazine. Indeed we added to it, leaving there the whole supply of sandwiches which I had brought with me for the use of my party. The flask of brandy I laid there too. The whole affair of the disappearance of the brothers was so extraordinary and surprising I believed it might eventuate in new and still more extraordinary developments. In presence of this mystery I could now believe in anything. I will not trouble you with an account of our consultations, theories and guesses. Enough to say that after having spent six or seven hours in that cavern we came up again into daylight, not wiser, but sadder men. By this time a huge crowd of people was assembled on the hillside, Mr. and Mrs. Freeman and the little boy Charley among them. I was the last to ascend. I hoped that they might have taken their departure before my arrival, but they had not, and I had the misery, and intense misery it was, of explaining to them the nature and extent of our explorations and our vain discoveries. I shall never forget the faces of the bereaved parents as I bade them adieu. As I was parting from them the little boy tugged me by the coat.

"What is it, Charley?" I said.

"I am glad you left those things in their storehouse," he answered. "Something told you they are there still and alive. Something tells me the same."

I started and looked at him, but turned again at once and walked away. Something had not told me they were there. Yet indeed, if I had not deposited the basket of sandwiches in that cranny to be eaten by the lost brothers and that flask of brandy to be drunk by them, why did I leave those things? The little boy was right before. He knew that his brother John was at the bottom of the "Devil's Parlor." Might he not be right now? I turned round once more. He was standing in the same place looking after me. His parents were now at some distance, Mrs. Freeman leaning heavily on the arm of her husband and apparently weeping.

"I shall try again, Charley," I called out.

He nodded approvingly and darted away after his parents with an animation and cheerfulness which surprised me.

"Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings," I murmured to myself as I walked home.

I spent all that night strictly by myself pondering over the extraordinary events of the day. It is now daylight. I have spent the last two hours in writing the official account and this private one. Farewell.

* * * * * *

I have just returned from a second exploration of this mysterious cavern as close and as minute as the first. The loaves which Charley Freeman threw down recently have not been touched, nor the articles which I placed in the cranny. Saw a seal in one of the pools. I am almost mad with excitement.

* * * * * *

Have explored the cave for the third time. The flask is gone, the sandwich basket opened. Some of the contents have been eaten or taken away. No sign of the brothers. I am confounded. I have left men in the cavern and shall keep them there in permanence. The suspense is terrible. I am returning to the cave myself. Send this after post car by orderly.

CHAPTER XII.

JOHN FREEMAN'S NARRATIVE.

I leave the account of the search for John and Edward Freeman and go back to the day when John Freeman was fishing at Dhu-Corrig. His narrative of what befell him on that day and the incidents of his subsequent life till found I give verbatim as he wrote it:

It was 3:30 when I reached Dhu-Corrig. I fished for a good while without even a bite. A boat which was locally known as the Old Rake rowed past me. The men in it were going to a noted "bream rough" some miles farther up the coast. I hailed them as they passed. I continued fishing for about half an hour after this without success. Then I wearied of the task and began to cast about for something to do till sunset, at which time the pollock would begin to take—a fish that gives good sport. I thought of exploring the cliffs which lay eastward from Dhu-Corrig. When last I had clambered along these cliffs, I was stopped by a gap across which I feared to spring lest I should not be able to return. That was two summers since. I wished to see whether it looked as formidable to me now as it did then. The only real object of interest in these cliffs was a small square aperture at a great height from the water. I had often noticed this aperture, which from below looked only a little square black spot. No one in the neighborhood knew anything about it. But once while out with an ancient fisherman from one of the adjoining islands I was told by him that it was the mouth of a haunted cave and that it was unlucky to have anything to do with it. Indeed it was difficult to see how a person could come at it at all, for it was quite unattainable from the sea or from any other side, so sheer and smooth seemed the cliff in which it was situated. This old fisherman called it Curry's Window and spoke of Curry as a great smuggler. Curry, he said, was so active that he would take a barrel of rum under one arm and a barrel under the other, and, though weighted so, spring from the deck of his schooner and fly clean through the aperture into the cave. When I made some chaffing remark about the old smuggler's extraordinary activity, he only said Curry was known to be "a clever man," and no more would he say. I asked about Curry on another occasion, but he not only refused to add anything, but rather angrily denied that he had spoken to me about Curry at all. All this naturally excited my curiosity. Knowing that I was much larger and stronger than when I last made the attempt, I resolved to try again. I easily reached the gap to which I refer. Here there was a split in the cliff reaching down to the sea. Far below in the darkness the sullen waters were murmuring. At the other side there was a good foothold, but it was decidedly lower than the point from which one would have to spring in order to reach it. Consequently the return leap would be far more difficult, and it was this as well as the horrible depths below and the gulping and gurgling of the dark waters which had daunted me before. I perceived now that it was really no such wonderful leap, after all, and surprised at my poltroonery on the former occasion I sprang over and then sprang back again with comparative ease. After this proof of my prowess I resolved to forego the rest of the exploration till next day, intending to bring my brother Ned with me. Though two years younger, he was a better leaper than myself, being slight and long legged, whereas I was made rather for strength than activity. My evil genius, however, led me on, as did the thought of the two hours yet wanting till sunset and the time when pollock would begin to rise. The exploration did not indeed promise much, for the cliff as seen from Dhu-Corrig as well as from the sea seemed one sheer unbroken wall of rock apparently offering no foothold to any creature less prehensile than a fly. Yet immediately before me there was a very narrow traversable ledge. In traversing this I saw it would be an advantage to have my rod with me in order to steady my footsteps. I returned for it to Dhu-Corrig and a third time cleared the chasm and presently encountered a piece of cliff, walking which could not possibly have been managed without such aid. There was a ledge indeed, but the cliff above it was so sheer, or rather inclined forward so much, that some slight support on the seaward side was necessary in order to get along here. The iron spike at the end of the rod supplied a good rest for me as I went. Passing this dangerous point, I was delighted to find that the cliff was still traversable, though with difficulty, and I had frequently to crawl. Yet I continued to get forward, forward, and also upward, ever upward. In this manner I progressed about a mile, not knowing whither that traversable ragged ledge led me, but hoping it might be to Curry's Window. As my progress was slow I would upon ordinary evenings have been perceived by some passing boat, but the people were at this time very busy about hay, and the Old Rake was the only one which on this unlucky evening had put forth from our little harbor, the Basin, as we used to call it. Eventually I found myself all of a sudden looking into a considerable cave in the cliff side, Curry's Window, as I plainly perceived. I was surprised to find it so large and also find that it was not square, but irregularly arched. I used to think that the famous smuggler would have found a difficulty in rolling even one barrel at a time through the aperture. The delusive appearance of perfect squareness had of course been caused by distance, for the aperture was very high up in the cliff. It, however, resembled a window in this respect, that the sill, so to speak, was perfectly smooth, flat and horizontal as if the work of man's hands. The rest of the aperture was very jagged and ragged. I also saw that the rock in the inside was smooth and sloped away from the sill at an angle of 45 degrees or thereabout. The sun had now to round the shoulder of the hill whose base was supplied by their cliffs; consequently I could see little or nothing of the interior of the cave, but thought that I could perceive the bottom at a short distance. I pushed the butt end of the fishing rod before me and found that this was so. There, about six feet below me, was the bottom of the incline and apparently the floor of the cave.

CHAPTER XIII.

TRAPPED.

I sat on the edge of the sill and slid down, expecting to land safely on the spot which I had poled and probed with the butt end of my rod, but it proved to be a false bottom or not the bottom at all. Whatever was the obstruction at this point, it gave way before my descending weight. It was, in fact, an accumulation of debris gathered around certain rotten branches that had stuck here in the entrance, lying transversely along the incline. I broke through all this with a loud crackling of broken timber and continued to slide or indeed rush down a still steeper incline descending into the darkness, and when I believed that I was being precipitated into eternity I fell into a soft mass of what seemed dry seaweed without sustaining any injury. "Facilis descensus!" I cried as I landed on this soft bed, all my alarm yielding suddenly to a sense of the ridiculous. Seeing the window at such a moderate distance above my head, I had not the least doubt that even if the slope should prove too sheer I could easily swarm or clamber up at the point where this slope met the walls of the cave. The moment I found my feet I was bent all on exploration. I struck a match and by its transient and faint light sought to inspect the fabulous smuggler's storehouse. I continued to light one match after another. Eventually gathering all the remainder in a little bundle, I ignited them in order that by their united blaze I might see as much as was possible under the circumstances. When they had burned out and I had thrown away the stumps, I had seen almost nothing. I bethought me of the return journey and that it would be better to make haste, for it would be ill work groping my way home in the dark along the face of that sheer cliff. I tried to swarm up the incline, but failed. I thought of a cockroach in a glass trap and laughed. I had often watched with some faint glimmerings of pity and compunction the futile efforts of these black gentry to climb the smooth sides of their prison. My own futile efforts to climb the slope suggested a ludicrous resemblance to the frustrated energies of those insects. Again and again I addressed myself to different parts of the smooth slope, but nowhere could secure a purchase for hands or knees. "At revocare gradum superasque evadere ad awras, Hic labor, hoc opus," I murmured. I was not yet alarmed; yet, as if far down in the depths of my nature, I was conscious of a dim formless emotion which I never experienced before.

A Bright Lad,

Ten years of age, but who declines to give his name to the public, makes this authorized, confidential statement to us:

"When I was one year old, my mamma died of consumption. The doctor said that I, too, would soon die, and all our neighbors thought that even if I did not die, I would never be able to walk, because I was so weak and puny. A gathering formed and broke under my arm. I hurt my finger and it gathered and threw out pieces of bone. If I hurt myself so as to break the skin, it was sure to become a running sore. I had to take lots of medicine, but nothing has done me so much good as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It has made me well and strong."—T. D. M., Noreatur, Kans.

They Want Names.

The Russell Art Publishing Co., of 928 Arch street, Philadelphia, desire the names and address of a few people in every town who are interested in works of art, and to secure them they offer to send free, "Cupid Guides the Boat," a superbly executed water color picture, size, 10x13 inches, suitable for framing, and sixteen other pictures about same size, in colors, to any one sending them at once the names and address of ten persons (admirers of fine pictures) together with six two-cent stamps to cover expense of mailing, etc. The regular price of these pictures is $1.00, but they all can be secured free by any person forwarding the names and stamps promptly.

NOTE—The editor of this paper has already received copies of above pictures and considers them really "Gems of Art."

THE HIGHEST AWARD.

Dr. Price's Baking Powder Receives It.

(CHICAGO TRIBUNE.)

For leavening power, keeping qualities purity and general excellence the World's Fair jury decided that Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder had no equal. On each of its claims it was awarded a first prize or a diploma. All the baking powders entered for prizes were subjected to a most exhaustive examination, and the jury was the best equipped to make the decision, of any ever got together. Their verdict was supported by the testimony of Dr. H. W. Wiley, chief chemist of the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington. Dr. Wiley is an expert on food products and the highest authority on such matters in America. This verdict settles a long debated question as which among the many baking powders is the best.

The Most Successful Gas Engine

In the market is run without an electric spark battery. Theory is all very well, but the every day experience of constant practical use is the best test of merit. The man who runs a launch and finds himself drifting with the tide and wind because the "spark" fails to ignite the charge of gas in his engine; the man who prints a daily paper and fails to get it off on time because the "spark" again fails; the man who has fruit that is injured for lack of irrigation because "spark" fails in his engine that runs the pump not only such parties but others who have trouble from like causes should bear in mind that the Hercules gas and Gasoline engine is free from such difficulties. The ignition is simple and sure. Send for catalogue. If you want second-hand engines of other makes at cheap rates we can supply you. We have a number taken in trade and cannot take any more until these are realized on. PALMER & REY TYPE FOUNDRY, Front and Alder streets, Portland, Oregon.

Order Directing Notice to Creditors.

In the Superior Court of the State of Washington, County of Clallam.

W. E. Van Allen, Plaintiff.
George Myers, Defendant.

This cause coming on regularly for hearing on this day on motion of E. E. Seevers, Receiver of the property of the above named W. E. Van Allen and George Myers, partners as Van Allen & Myers, and the court being fully advised in the premises, it is hereby ordered and adjudged that all creditors of said Van Allen & Myers, partners as aforesaid, are hereby required to present their claims and demands against said Van Allen & Myers, partners as aforesaid, to E. E. Seevers, the Receiver heretofore appointed in this cause, at the office of the City Treasurer of the city of Port Angeles, in said City of Port Angeles, in said Clallam County, Washington, on or before the 4th day of June, A. D., 1894, and that all claims not so presented be barred and shall not be paid out of the funds and assets in the hands of said receiver, and that on the 5th day of June, 1894, said receiver file in this court his report of all claims and demands so presented and filed, and also showing what claims so presented allowed and what claims are disallowed, and what claims so allowed, if any, are entitled to preference or priority in the order of payment.

It is further ordered that this order be published in five consecutive weekly issues of the DEMOCRAT-LEADER, a newspaper printed and published in Port Angeles in said Clallam county, prior to said 4th day of June, 1894, and that when so published the same shall constitute due notice to creditors of said W. E. Van Allen and George Myers, partners as Van Allen & Myers, of the entry of this order.

Done in open court this 4th day of May, A. D., 1894.
