Appraisement Will be Immediately Approved.

JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS

Intercedes in Behalf of the Squatters—The Report of the Appraisers is all Right and There Will be no Unnecessary Delay in its Final Approval.

It will, indeed, be a source of gratification to the squatters on the townsite reservation and to citizens generally, that the report of the appraisers will be accepted and approved without unnecessary delay.

Ever since the report of the appraisers was forwarded to Washington, those most deeply interested have felt not a little concern as to its ultimate fate.

Not infrequently in the past similar documents have undergone a most tempestuous career, resulting in long, tedious and vexatious delay, and consequent suffering, hardship and loss to the unfortunate settler, in which his entire fortune rested. Judging from the past, no doubt, many entertained grave apprehensions as to the speedy approval of the report, realizing, in the light of the experience of the past, that only a slight error meant a delay of at least six months and possibly an indefinite period.

When the fact was known that James Hamilton Lewis, of Seattle, that steadfast friend and unswerving champion of the people's cause, was in Washington City, it was thought an excellent idea to request that he intercede in behalf of the squatters, with his life-long friend and schoolmate, the Hon. Hoke Smith, Secretary of the Interior, impressing upon the later gentleman, the grave importance of immediate action in that matter.

With characteristic consideration, regard and appreciation, Mr. Lewis at once made an earnest appeal to the Secretary, doubtless, in his matchless way, impressing upon the honorable gentleman the vital importance to the squatters of securing a deed to his lots at the earliest moment possible.

Be this as it may, the following telegraphic correspondence very explicitly reviews the prompt and efficient services rendered the squatters on the part of Mr. Lewis:

PORT ANGELES, May 30, 1893.

To HON. JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS,
Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C.

Your Angeles friends request that you urge Secretary Smith to immediately approve townsite reservation appraisement. Three thousand squatters injured by delay. Wire result.

JOHN W. TROY.

Not receiving an immediate answer, the following was sent:

PORT ANGELES, June 5, 1893.

To HON. JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS,
Willards Hotel, Washington, D. C.

We are anxious to know about the appraisement of townsite reservation. Please insist on the approval by Secretary Smith.

JOHN W. TROY.

The following is Mr. Lewis' pointed reply:

WASHINGTON, D. C. June 6, 1893.

To HON. JOHN W. TROY,
Port Angeles, Wash.

Secretary will approve immediately. He tells me everything is all right.

JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS.

Reserve Lots and Public Lands.

Proofs and filings taken and received by the County Clerk on all Townsite Reserve lots and all United States Homestead and Pre-emption claims at his office in the court house of Clallam county.

The clerk is prepared to meet any and all rates and prices in fees for taking and receiving such proofs and filings, and the work will be done by him as cheaply as anywhere else.

As the fees swell the treasury of Clallam county if paid to the county clerk why not file at his office.

As a complete record of all procedure in such cases is kept and will be preserved in the public vaults of this county why not file in his office.

Squatters on the reserve will lighten the burden of taxation in this city and county, not only upon their neighbors shoulders, but upon the homes they are striving to own on the reserve, by filing at his office.

The fee book of the county clerk will always be open to the inspection of the public, and in it you may see that the fees you pay go into the county treasury.

To sell and deal in the articles and products manufactured by the said company in said state, and generally to do all acts which may be deemed necessary for the promotion of the aforesaid objects of said company and the development of the resources of the state of Washington. The company has a capital stock of $100,000. The stockholders being W. W. Gray, Thos. Malony, Frank Chambers, D. W. Morse, C. E. Mallette, E. B. Mastick, C. P. Brown, H. K. Bickford, Lewis Levy, Julius Kirchberg and E. Ewald. Messrs. W. W. Gray, Thos. Malony, C. E. Mallette, H. K. Bickford and E. Ewald were elected directors. At a meeting of the directors C. E. Mallette was elected president and general manager, W. W. Gray vice-president and H. K. Bickford secretary-treasurer. Mr. Ferdinand Kerstein was appointed superintendent.

Thoughtful Consideration—Contract Let for Raising Calawah Bridge—County Clerk Richardson Makes a Proposition for Taking Final Proofs Which is Accepted.

The board met pursuant to call of the chairman, Tuesday, June 6, 1893.

Commissioners John Knapman, Anthony O'Brien and George Lamb and Jno. W. Troy, auditor were present.

The report of the viewers of the Otto Sinders and F. S. Mackintosh roads was read and laid over.

The matter of the petition of T. H. Carter and others for a change in the county road between the Elwha and Lake Southerland was taken up and laid over for the time being.

The board ordered that $1,000 of the contract price of the Beaver bridge be paid to W. H. Lambert, the contractor, with the consent of his bondsmen.

The board was apprised of the dangerous condition of the Calawah bridge at high water, and that the grade would be much improved by raising the bridge ten feet. It was ordered that W. H. Lambert be allowed $900 for raising the same, the work to be done in a workmanlike and substantial manner.

Ralph Chambers, supervisor of district No. 18, was directed to remove obstructions from the road known as the Mount Angeles road, the cost therefor not to exeed $200.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 7.

Petition of L. H. Cays et al for the daming of the Hurd's or Myer's creek for the purpose of turning the water course thereof into the main channel of the Dungeness river, from whence the petitions represent that it was formerly diverted, as it is a menace to land owners and that the taxable value, of property affected would be materially increased by such improvement; was laid over for further consideration.

A communication from O. Lingham was filed withdrawing the petition to change the road from Elwha to Lake Southerland.

A. A. Richardson, County Clerk presented to the board a proposition as to taking final proofs, the provisions being that the necessary expense for books, blanks and clerk's fees be paid from the gross proceeds of the said work and that the net proceeds be divided equally between the county of Clallam and himself. The matter was laid over.

Harry Martin was refunded $58.21 for taxes illegally assessed and the auditor instructed to draw warrants to cover that amount.

The board ordered that the boundaries of road district No. 11 be changed so that said district contain the following territory commencing at the mouth of the Dungeness river, thence south along said river to the west line of the Groveland farm, thence south to the northwest corner of the F. A. Rowe donation claim, thence east to the township line dividing townships 3 and 4, thence south to the north line of road district No. 14, thence east to the straits.

The boundaries of road district No. 2 was changed as follows, said district to contain all of district No. 2 as bounded before changed by the county commissioners December last, excepting that it contained in the above description of district No. 11.

The plat of Mallette's second addition to the city of Port Angeles was submitted to the board and approved.

Commissioner Lamb moved that the petition of T. H. Carter et al for a change in the Lake Southerland road between the Elwha river and Lake Southerland be rejected, for the reason that it is impracticable to build a bridge at the proposed site. The motion was adopted.

THURSDAY, JUNE 8.

The board allowed $1120.22 for county assessor and deputies for assessing the county.

Sidney J. Wood, of Sequim, was refunded taxes which had been assessed in error.

The report of the surveyor and viewers on the Otto Sinders road was approved.

The claim of Geo. W. Watts for $75, damages on account of said road was rejected for the reason said Watts was one of the petitioners for said road.

The board ordered that the proposition of A. A. Richardson to take filings on government lands and final proofs be accepted on the following basis: That the expenses for clerk hire, books and blanks be paid from the proceeds of such work and that the said clerk receive 50 per cent of the net proceeds and the county the remaining 50 per cent.

The report of the viewers and the surveyors on the petition of Frank S. Mackintosh and others for a change in the Burlingame county road, near Gettysburgh, was read the third time and granted, and the county auditor was directed to have plat and report recorded and the auditor is directed to notify the road supervisor of district No. 10 of said action.

COUNTY NEWS.

Interesting Paragraphs From the County Press.

East Clallam Record.]

Mr. and Mrs. P. Bucholz have been making preparations to remove to their ranch near town where a new house has been fitted up in good style.

Jewel Miles had his hands and face severely burned by an accident last Friday. While playing around a brush fire he fell into it and was badly burned before being rescued.

Work was commenced this week on a dwelling house for James Donahue and family on Frontier street. It will be 22x28 feet and two stories. A lot of Mr. Donahue's furniture came on Wednesday.

Mrs. C. Snyder moved down to the ranch of the late Joseph Kerr near Sale river, on Wednesday, going in a sloop. Some time ago she was given a bill of sale of the improvements on the place by Kerr.

A new fog whistle is now being constructed on Tatoosh Island, being placed there in readiness to take the place of the new one now in use in case of accident. The new signal is a big improvement over the old style. It is built on the caliope plan and no doubt will be warbling "Wait'il the clouds roll by," to the fog-bound vessels off the cape.

Port Crescent Leader.]

Clallam county's immense area furnishes many obstacles to the building of rouds, which could not be appreciated by the pioneers of the prairie states or even of the timbered states on the Atlantic coast. The dense forests and the rich black soil are equally difficult for the road builder. Yet in spite of all the obstecles nature presents the work is constantly progressing. Every part of the county is accessible. Roads are being widened and improved. All this work is being done by the settlers under local supervisiors. In adopting this method of spending the public money the county commissioners are generally commended. Every dollar goes into the hands of actual settlers, the deserving pioneers of civilization.

There is plenty of gravel in Clallam county and the next generation at least will see as good roads in Clallam county as there are in the Atlantic states. Just now the use of either plank or puncheon is appearantly the best means of improveing the roads. Mr. J. H. Marlette advocates the buying by the county of a portable saw mill to be loaned to the local road districts to move along the roads and cut the planks for their improvement in the most economical manner.

TO TIDE LAND CLAIMANTS.

Parties who have applied to purchase tide lands are requested to call at the office of THE DEMOCRAT-LEADER and get proofs of publication so as to forward them to the state land commissioner at the earliest date possible. Without ceritfied proofs the application will be of no avail. This office will not forward them until fee for publication is paid.

WORTHY OF A CLEVELAND.

The task confronting Collector Saunders is a difficult one. Every day he is beseiged with those ambitious to serve under him in the government service and by those who want his endorsement for something else in the government service, as everybody seem to regard the new collector as one having a peculiar influence with the president. These, with the great problem of the customs service itself, make Mr. Saunders' position one that is not all roses by any means.

However, Mr. Saunders is a man equal to the occasion. Those who were skeptical once are so no longer. He has thus for borne himself in a manner that has inspired the utmost confidence, and everyone will admit that he will do the best he can, using all the light at his command, which is not a little.

Mr, Saunders will, in making his appointments and adjusting the affairs of his office, consider efficiency first, with view to giving the government the best service possible. The rewarding for political services and the strengthening of his party, though it will receive the consideration due it from a man who loves his party as he does his religion, must, at best, take second place.

THE DEMOCRAT-LEADER has from the beginning had the utmost confidence in the integrity and efficiency of the new collector, and time serves but to increase the intensity of this confidence. The appointment was one worthy of a Grover Cleveland.

THE DEMOCRAT-LEADER has thus far refrained from saying anything in relation to the city clerkship. It has remained silent because it has believed and still believes the majority of the city council will not treat any man unfairly. Mr. C. K. Humphries has proven his efficiency in office. He is capable and has given the city good service. The charges against him, if sustained, are not to the point and are entirely insufficient to warrant a removal from office. The city council should, and doubtless will, investigate the charges, as for as they go, in justice to themselves and Mr. Humphries. There is no doubt but that the city clerk can fully acquit himself of any charge that may be brought against him regarding his official conduct, and no other should be considered.

OUR distinguished and able contemporary, the Chehalis Nugget, takes this paper to account for suggesting that the president only followed a time honored custom in appointing Hon. John B. Allen's friend, Mr. Fallon, postmaster at Walla Walla. Its point is that there is a question about Mr. Allen's being a United States senator. There is something in the suggestion, too; but Mr. Allen is, at least, until otherwise decided, a senator de facto, if not a senator de jure. He is entitled to that consideration.

THE Tribune has correctly accounted for $2.90 of the cost of the Washington dispatch. Now, will it please account for the other $7.60? For the benefit of the Tribune, which always needs a diagram or map of anything to understand, THE DEMOCRAT-LEADER will state the "good Democrat" referred to last week was Mr. F. O. Lamoreux, whose services this paper gratefully acknowledged.

A Generous Quillayuter.

[Port Crescent Leader.]

Yes, I was up to church the other night and they took up a collection," said Mr. R. L. Sabastian as he ran his index finger into the bowl of his pipe to see whether it would pay to light up again. "They took up a collection and chipped in with the rest but I always take care what I put into the basket."

"What is that?" somebody asked, for there is no better story teller in Western Clallam anywhere than Mr. Sabastian, who is a bright, wide awake young man, who spent his earlier life in Washington, D. C., and has had a varied experience in the government service at Tatoosh and Neah Bay. He talks Chinook as gibly as any Siwash and knows pioneer life from top to bottom. Besides he is a Democratic hustler of the tireless kind and if he is not remembered in the Cleveland potlach it will be because the men who do the party work are forgotten. But to return to the story.

"Oh, I went to church last winter with Grimes and they passed the hat and I dropped in what I thought was a four-bit piece, as it was a good sermon and I felt rather liberal. All at once it occurred to me that I had made a mistake. I had a twenty dollar gold piece, only one in my pocket. I felt for it and it was gone. I said to Grimes: 'Did I put a twenty in the basket?' Co'se,' he said as though that was the proper coin for me to donate. Now we Quillayuters are not that flush and I didn't want to walk all the way home. Mr. Fenn was taking up the collection and I jumped up and made after him on a 2:40 gait down the aisle. I grabed him by the coat and said: 'Didn't I put a twenty dollar gold piece in that d——d basket?' He said I had and he intended to speak to me afterwards. But I compromised right there by giving him a dollar and getting back my twenty. When they pass the hat nowadays I look at the coin before I drop it."

SCHOOL ELECTION.

An Exciting Contest for Director and Clerk.

Last Monday occurred an interesting, hotly contested and an exciting election for a director and clerk of this school district.

There were 474 votes cast, quite a number of women availing themselves of the opportuntty to vote.

The candidates in the field were: For director, Messrs. Hatfield and Lee. For clerk—Messrs. Babcock and Nichols, the latter gentlemen being populist candidates.

The polling place was held in the public school building.

The respective candidates and their friends were quite active and solicitious of each others interests throughout the day. Carriages and other means of conveyance were provided for the accommodation of voters, and not a little effec-electioneering was done on both sides. It was generally believed that the vote would be very close and the winning ticket elected by only a very small majority. This did not, however, prove to be the case, with the canvass of the vote.

For director Hatfield received 301 and Lee 172 votes; and for clerk Babcock 270 and Nichols 204 votes. This gives Hatfield 125 majority for director, and Babcock 64 majority for clerk.

VISIT THE LAKES.

Representatives of Ranier Club, Seattle, on a Pleasure Trip.

Last Wednesday afternoon Mr. J. M. Dodge and Mr. Elly, of Seattle, prominent members of the Ranier Club, Capt. Hatch of the steamer Monticello, Col. Coolican and Mayor N. R. Smith of this city, left for a trip to the lakes.

The object of the trip was incidentally recreation, and directly to critically inspect the opportunities, advantages and inducements afforded for hunting, fishing and boating, and presumably, if satisfactory, purchase suitable grounds for a summer resort for the Ranier Club, which is one of the wealthiest and most influential associations in Seattle.

The natural beauty of these lakes and the grandeur of the surrounding mountain country, is becoming widely known, and establishing for them a reputation for being the most attractive pleasure resort in the state.

DOLAN'S WHARF LEASED.

The Steamers Willapa and Garland Will Dock There.

Dolan's wharf at the foot of Valley street, has been leased to Mr. D. E. Campbell.

Arrangements have been perfected with the Hastings' Steamboat Company whereby the Willapa and Garland will hereafter moor at that wharf.

This structure was built several years ago, and is one of the largest and most substantial in the city. It is quite centerally located from a commercial point of view, and as the business of the city expands will, no doubt, become desirable and valuable property.

Mr. Campbell, the leasee, is an energetic, enterprising and reliable young business man, who will doubtless succeed in this venture.

The steamers Monticello, Isabel and the City of Puebla, will continue to dock at Morse's wharf.

Card Party.

Dr. Lewis entertained a number of his friends at his reservation home last Tuesday evening with cards and music.

The following were the guests of the evening: Messrs. Douglay Young, Knowlton, J. Harvey Young, Chas. E. Gay, Wm. Ritchie, F. H. Dingle and R. L. Sabastian.

Angeles Silver League.

The Port Angeles Silver League will hold its next meeting at the council chamber Saturday evening. This is an organization recently formed to further the cause of free coinage of silver. This is a non-partisan organization, the only restrictions being that its members shall be in favor of the free coinage of silver at the rate of 16 to 1.

Judge Lamoreux Entertains.

Judge and Mrs. M. V. B. Lamoreux, of Beaver, entertained their Quillayute friends at the Alice house last Wednesday evening.

The guests of the evening were: Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Tyler, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Pullen, Mr. and Mrs. F. O. Lamoreux, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Fenn, Mr. and Mrs. B. Franklin, Mrs. Carpenter, and Messrs. F. T. Balch, Ely Peterson, R. V. Porter and R. L. Sebastian.

Lamoreux-Maxfield Marriage.

Last Saturday evening in the presence of a few personal friends and relatives Mr. Fred O. Lamoreux, of this city, and Miss Lillian Maxfield, of Quillayute, were united in marriage at the Alice House.

Mr. Lamoreux is an able young attorney, who has a bright future in his chosen profession.

Miss Maxfield is an estimable young woman, possessing graces of character which have won her the esteem and admiration of a large circle of friends.

THE DEMOCRAT-LEADER with the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Lamoreux wish them a long life of continued happiness and prosperity.

Work on the Plummer Railroad to Begin at Once.

E. F. Plummer, the promoter of the Port Angenes-Everett railroad, writes from New York that he has finally raised all the money needed to make the enterprise a success. The task was a Herculean one, owing to the stringency in the money market, but indomitable energy triumphed in the face of adverse circumstances. ### NO QUORUM.

Some of the Councilmen Loiter by the Wayside.

There was no meeting of the common council last Wednesday evening, as a quorum was not present.

An ordinance which provides rules and regulations governing the council, specifically prescribes that if a quorum is not present at 8 o'clock, the council stands adjourned until the next regular meeting.

As a number of councilmen were discussing momentous questions, and perplexing problems likely to come before them for solution, they were apparently dead to the world and utterly unconscious of the swiftly fleeting moments, and in consequence not a little chagrined when awakened from their deliberations, with the startling announcement that the council stood adjourned.

There being no alternative or appeal from the law they had in their wisdom provided for their government, they had but to silently obey the imperative mandate.

The meeting had promised many interesting features and specialties, in anticipation of which, a large crowd of spectators had gathered, only to be doomed to disappointment.

The schooner Amateur, Capt. Schuyler Colfax, is at anchor in the harbor outward bound for Neah Bay. She has just returned from Seattle where Capt. Colfax disposed of a cargo consisting of 210 seal skins which were sold at $10 each or a total of $2,100.

THE CITY

Temporarily Restrained From Establishing Certain Streets.

Wednesday afternoon the attention of the court was given to an application for a restraining order by Allen Weir.

The nature of the order is to restrain the city from establishing streets across the tide flats at Lincoln street and that part of Railroad avenue that intersects Lincoln street. Allen Weir appeared for F. P. Fisher and Geo. Fend, who claim such tide land. This is only a temporary measure. Plaintiffs claim that if the city passes an ordinance creating said street across the tide land it would prejudice their application now pending, causing them severe loss in litigation.

The court granted the order, but the council not having a quorum Wednesday evening, it was not served.

Judge McClinton will, in the near future, fix time of hearing the plea for writ of injunction.

Last Monday John Gibson, who had been arrested on a warrant sworn out by A. A. Richardson, for disturbing the peace and being drunk and disorderly, was brought before Judge Carusi for trial. The evidence being sufficient defendant was fined $15 and costs in default of the payment of which was committed to the city jail.

R. L. Stevenson's Yacht to Be a Sealer.

The old schooner yacht Casco, formerly the property of the late Dr. Samuel Merritt, and noted as the boat in which Robert Louis Stevenson, the novelist, made a trip to the south seas, has again changed hands. The new owner is Captain George Collins, of Victoria, who has the managing interest in the famous sealing schooner Sea Lion. The Casco is at Sausalito, ready to sail north. On her arrival at Victoria the stars and stripes will give way to the British colors. It is designed to refit the Casco as a sealer and to send her on a cruise the coming season.—San Francisco Chronicle.

An Interesting Wager.

One of the queerest election bets was made between a young gentleman and his best girl. He bet on Harrison, and she took the field; consequently he will have to pay the forfeit. The bet was in this fashion: The loser was to take the other to Widemann's any night the winner would choose, buy the oysters for one, and then stand on a chair in the other end of the hall and watch the eating. The girl of course has decided to choose the night when the hall will be crowded, and thus put the fellow in as ridiculous a position as possible.—Lawrence World.

Copyrights of Songs.

A number of musical copyrights have recently been sold in London. The more important items were as follows: Gabriel's "Cleansing Fires," £330; Leslie's "Four Jolly Smiths," £261; Hullah's "Three Fishers," £240; Bodington's "After," £216; Blumenthal's "Requital," £185; Hullah's "Storm," £108; Pentland's "John Peel," £92; Pontet's "Nea," £88.

A YELLOW LEAF.

Yellow leaf, glimmering
Against the blue sky,
Fluttering, fluttering,
All ready to fly!
Warm is the sunny air,
And soft the wind's sigh;
Loose on the bough thy hold
Now that thy green is gold!
Yellow leaf, is it not easy to die?
Now, ere the winter's frown,
Now, ere thy gold is brown,
Floating down, floating down,
Safe on the sod that has nursed thee to lie!
We who are watching thee wistfully sigh,
"Yellow leaf, yellow leaf,
Ours is a life as brief;
Would we might part with as sweet a 'goodby!' "

—Marian Douglas in Harper's Bazar.

THE BURGLAR.

Ezra Timmins was a steady man of forty, who had been fifteen years bookkeeper for the prosperous grocery house of Ham, Bacon, Lard & Co. To guard against burglars, he cultivated an acquaintance with the policemen who alternated on the beat and dropped mysterious hints of munificent rewards in case they caught a burglar in the act. He had a burglar alarm in his bedroom and a shotgun, from which Mrs. Timmins was in the habit of withdrawing cartridges for fear he should shoot himself.

Many a sleepless night he spent in prowling about the house in the dark in quest of some intruder whose footstep he thought he heard. He read every article in the newspapers about burglaries, and surprised his wife and niece by the extent and accuracy of his information touching the methods of the fraternity. He plunged them into depths of despair by declaring that he knew it was his destiny to wake up some morning and find the house robbed and Constance's throat cut.

Constance was a lovely girl, the daughter of an elder brother of Timmins who had gone south after the war, bought a plantation, taken the yellow fever and died, leaving an estate of which the value was unknown. She was a coquette, and had a host of admirers who seldom commanded the approval of her uncle or aunt. If they were young Uncle Ezra said they were snips and ought to be in the nursery. If they were old, he said they should be in some old people's home. Constance laughed at his invectives, and when her uncle forbade this or that man the house she met him elsewhere, if he had taken her fancy.

Among the admirers who could not fairly be condemned to the nursery was Colonel Pitblado. He had met Constance at a small party and had been struck by her beauty and vivacity. With his usual circumspection he had instituted inquiries regarding her prospective fortune. From the assiduity with which he pursued her afterward it may be inferred that the result of the investigation had been satisfactory.

Much to his annoyance Constance not only did not ask him to the house, but begged as a favor that he would not come; at any rate for the present.

"You see, Colonel Pitblado," said she, "I have rather taken a fancy to you and I don't want to lose you. Now, my uncle, who is the best man in the world, invariably takes a dislike to people who pay me attention. I have a presentiment that if you came to the house he would quarrel with you, and that would be the end of our acquaintance."

The colonel argued, but it was of no avail. The only concession which Constance would make was that now and then, say once a week, she would leave the door open after her uncle had gone to bed, and the colonel might slip in and spend a few minutes with her in the dark in the hall or in the drawing room.

"I know," she said, "that you are too much of a gentleman to make me regret my good nature; anyway I think I can take care of myself."

The colonel's behavior was beautiful. His speech was eloquent on the subject of his love, but he rarely ventured even to press the fingers of his charmer as they sat side by side on the sofa.

There they sat one night, and Constance, in a subdued voice, was explaining her uncle's extraordinary terror of burglars.

"Has he ever been robbed?" asked the colonel.

"I believe that when he was a child burglars broke into the house where he was living and killed one of the inmates. He was wakened out of bed by the sound of the shot, and he has never got over the shock."

"I can quite understand it," replied the colonel. "There is something peculiarly terrifying in a midnight encounter with a man whom you cannot see, and who has everything to gain and little to lose by taking your life."

"Oh!" cried Constance, "the thought fills me at times with such horror that I am as afraid of burglars as my uncle. I think that if I saw one in my room, I would die of fright."

"I hope," said the colonel laughing, "that I would not show the white feather. But I must say I do not hanker to meet a burglar in the flesh."

At that moment a slight noise was heard outside the drawing room door. It was the faintest possible creak of a weak flooring plank under a tread. Both the tenants of the sofa looked up and held their breath, with ears on the full strain. Another board creaked and presently, after a wait which seemed to last for ages, the acute ears of the colonel detected a muffled tread on the carpet of the room in which they sat. There was a third party in the room. He was shod with wool and was moving noiselessly and occasionally stopping as if to listen whether he was detected. The long expected burglar had come.

Constance fainted silently on the sofa. The colonel, in whom the presence of danger had awakened his fighting instinct, rose from his seat and groped his way noiselessly toward the intruder, whom he could not see. He could by this time hear the scoundrel's breath coming and going, and instinct prompted him to hold his own. He would have given worlds for a weapon, but his cane was out of reach. He must give battle with his bare hands against one who probably had both pistol and knife. As he reflected the intruder's foot came into contact with a stool. The colonel hesitated no longer; with a sudden spring he was upon the invader. He had thrown his weight into the spring and felled the burglar to the ground face downward. Then, swiftly seizing his wrists, he held them in a grip of iron, twisted the arms upward and sat down on his back.

The burglar straggled, evidently striving to free one hand to use his knife, but the colonel was now fighting for his life. His clutch of the wrists did not relax. When the struggle grew weaker and Pitblado had got back his breath he hissed:

"You villain! If you don't keep your hands still, I'll drive my knife through your vitals. One motion and you are a dead man."

The burglar made no reply. He panted, and sounds came from him which to Riblado's ear sounded strangely like a sob. The colonel derived a qualified satisfaction from his stillness. If he had dared to loose his clutch of the fellow's wrists he would have tried to throttle him, but the danger of a stab in the side if he moved his hands to the burglar's throat was too obvious.

He thought of shouting for help. But that would have betrayed his presence in Constance's drawing room after the lights were out and when her uncle was in bed. He would rather risk the knife than compromise her. He supposed that she had fled upstairs, whereas in fact she was in a dead faint on the sofa.

What was he to do? Was he to stay sitting on that burglar all night?

While he ransacked his brain for an expedient, a deep groan came from the man under him. The burglar gasped and at last muttered:

"If you'll let me up I'll show you"——

"Yes, I dare say," said Pitblado; "you'll show us lots of things. That cock won't fight. It's I that am going to show you the door of the other world."

The colonel could feel a quiver go through the frame on which he sat. The burglar went on:

"I'll show you"——

"Haven't I told you that I am going to do all the showing in this menagerie?"

"If you'll only lift your weight off my lungs so I can breathe," said the burglar.

"You'd make use of your breath to drive a knife into me, wouldn't you? Not much. I'm just thinking how I shall kill you so as not to ruin the carpet"——

"Oh! oh! oh!" came from the prostrate body.

"What an unreasonable fellow you are!" said the colonel; "here I've let you live for ever so many minutes while I have been studying how to put you to death."

"Spare my life," gurgled the burglar.

"Why should I?"

"I'll—I'll show you where the silver is."

"You'll show me," repeated the colonel, puzzled.

"I will. I give you my honor I will."

"Oh, I see," said Pitblado: "you want to divide. It won't do."

"What more do you want?"

"I don't intend," said the colonel, "that you shall have a single spoon."

"Take them all; take them all. Only let me keep Connie's christening cup."

"By George," muttered Pitblado, "you're a romantic sort of a chap to be a burglar."

It had by this time become manifest to the colonel that the situation could not be prolonged forever. He could not sit on that burglar's back till morning—the tension of the muscles of his arms was weakening. He must somehow get him to the nearest police station. If he only had a ray of light!

At that moment a faint groan came from the sofa.

"By the Lord," muttered the colonel, "he's got an accomplice."

Another sound from the sofa and Pitblado saw that time was up. The new comer might at any moment rush to the rescue of his accomplice. Pitblado had noticed a poker and shovel in front of the drawing room grate. With a sudden spring he regained his feet, let the burglar go, leaped to the grate and seized the poker.

A wild shriek came from the sofa and simultaneously the colonel struck a match. By its flare he saw to his amazement Connie sitting upon the sofa and the burglar lying motionless on the floor. Had he killed the scoundrel?

Another match lit the gas and Connie sprang to the burglar, took his head in her arms and screamed to Pitblado:

"You have killed my uncle!"

"Your uncle? Why, that's the burglar."

"It's my uncle, and you have choked him to death. He's insensible. Oh, help me to bring him to."

The prostrate man revived, and, seeing Connie, muttered:

"Let him take all the silver, Connie, except your christening cup. If he will spare our lives, we'll not prosecute."

It did not take long to get Mr. Timmins upon the sofa, and, as he was not hurt, a glass of rum, administered by the tender hands of Connie, restored him to his senses. His mind was still confused. He murmured:

"I have had a narrow escape, my poor Constance. I seemed to hear a noise in this room and stepped in, when a man of gigantic strength leaped on me, and was about to kill me when you must have appeared and frightened him away."

"That is not quite exact, dear uncle. While you were struggling in the most heroic way with a burglar Colonel Pitblado happened to pass, entered the house by the front door, which the burglar had left open, drove the fellow away and rescued you. Allow me to introduce you—Mr. Timmins, Colonel Pitblado."—John Bonner in Argonaut.

Insurance for Workingmen.

A scheme for the insurance of workmen against accidents has been drawn up by the Russian ministry of finance. The pensions will amount to half the annual salary of the workmen at the time of their death. The children of the latter will also receive until they maintain their majority an allowance of 15 to 20 per cent. of the salary paid to their fathers.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A WITCH STORY.

The story I am about to tell you is curious as having been told by an old colored woman of Virginia, a slave "before the war," and one who can neither read nor write.

Years ago there lived in Virginia a gentleman named McKin, who was greatly respected by all who knew him. He was rich; he was kindly; he had the good wishes of all his neighbors; he was an excellent master and a good friend.

He owned a great deal of real estate, and among it was the finest mill property in the county. It was known as McKin's grist mill, and was very valuable. He always kept a miller there, and of course the miller had his men, and a thriving business was carried on for years. Meanwhile Mr. McKin remained a bachelor and lived in the old family mansion with his mother and sisters until the former died and the latter married, and people began to say that now no doubt McKin himself would marry.

However, neither maid nor widow of the place could flatter herself that the bachelor's attentions were "particular." He lived alone with his large retinue of servants for a year, and at last astonished his friends by marrying a lady who was an utter stranger to every one, a very beautiful young woman who had golden hair, great black eyes, a skin like cream and a brown mole on her left cheek.

He gave a great supper to introduce her, and she was admired by all. Her dress was exquisite. She sparkled with jewelry, and a magnificent cluster ring which she wore on the middle finger of the right hand attracted much attention. It was, like all the rest, a gift from Mr. McKin.

The host did his best. The supper was delightful; there was a band of music from Richmond; there were roses everywhere. Mr. McKin had tried to make to make the affair a splendid one, but when it was over the guests began to acknowledge to one another that they were disappointed. Why they could not say. Perhaps Mrs. McKin was cold in her manner. Some people could not help being that. But they had not been happy, and in old times every one had enjoyed themselves so much at the McKins'.

Then some one hinted that the house servants did not like their new lady, and liked still less her foreign maid, little and dark and withered as an old monkey.

"No," old Phœbe, the cook, had said to some one, "we all don't like madame's maid—we all don't like her. We got no right to talk about de madame nohow. But madame's maid, she jes' a nigger, same as de rest, and we all reckon she mighty cur'us—mighty cur'us."

The day after the party was Saturday. Mrs. McKin professed herself weary and remained in bed until supper time. Sunday morning, however, she rose. As she was eating breakfast her husband spoke of the hour.

"We shall have to make some haste, my dear," he said, "in order to be at church in season."

It was some time before his wife answered him; then she said:

"I will not go to church today."

"I am very anxious that you should, my dear," Mr. McKin said. "It will be expected of us."

"You can go alone," she answered coldly.

"Alone, the first Sabbath after my marriage!" he cried. "Oh, my dear, impossible! See what I have bought for you for the occasion." And he took from a table a small parcel, unfolded it and handed to Mrs. McKin a beautiful little prayer book bound in blue velvet, with silver clasps, and her name on the corner in silver letters. As he placed it before her she uttered a low cry and fainted away. The maid rushed to her and they carried her to her room, where thenceforward she remained. From that moment Mr. McKin's beautiful young wife seemed to be bedridden. She never left her pillow. Mr. McKin consulted the most celebrated physicians. None of them could discover what ailed her. Her maid nursed her continually. Mr. McKin was not encouraged to enter the room; he always made his wife's head ache when he spoke to her. Finally he contented himself with a brief call of inquiry every morning. He was a very unhappy man, more unhappy than in his bachelor days.

Old Phœbe began to tell strange stories to her friend, the housekeeper at the hotel.

"Marsy Jack mighty nigh done broke his heart," she would say. "I'ze mighty sorry for Jack, kaze we all jes' despises de madam. She sick in bed all day, but in de night I reckon she mighty well—yes'm, she mighty well den, and she get up and dress sheself and eat a big supper and go out ob de do'. Yes'm, she do. And dat little chipmunk of a maid she go along wid her, and dey done come back jes' befo' sun up. Yes'm, we all knows dat de libin truff,"

"Why don't you tell your Marse Jack?" the housekeeper asked.

"Dere ain't nobody dast tell dat yar to Marse Jack McKin," said Phœbe; "nobody."

And nobody did dare. But soon it was whispered everywhere that Mrs. McKin had a lover whom she went to meet in the pine woods at midnight.

But there was something else that Mr. Jack McKin was to hear shortly. There was trouble at his mill, and the trouble was of a supernatural sort—the miller and his men had seen a ghost.

One by one the men had been frightened away, and the miller was alone at his post. At last he came up to the McKin mansion one day and resigned his millership. He was reluctant to give his reasons, but finally did so. The ghosts—there were two of them—manifested themselves every night. They were not to be frightened away, and did mischief to the grain and set fire to the mill in various places, though he had always found the flames in time to put them out. Now they threatened to kill him if he was not out in three days.

"I am amazed to hear such a story from a white man of intelligence," was Jack McKin's comment on the tale. "Some one is evidently trying to frighten you away. Remain, and on the night they threaten to take your life the sheriff and his men shall be with you."

Finally the miller returned to the mill and at dusk on the third day was seen alive and well by people who came with grist. When the sheriff and his men came stealthily through the woods an hour later the mill was perfectly dark. They lighted their lanterns and went through it, calling the miller by name, but receiving no answer, until they found him in his own room lying on his face, a pistol in his hand, an overturned lamp beside him, dead. He had been shot through the heart. There was no living human being in the old mill, and for a long while nobody went near it. At last people began to say that the miller had shot himself by accident and that the negroes had frightened him. Another miller applied for the place and remained three days. In fact, to cut a long story short, the only other miller who dared to brave the warning that the ghost gave them all was found dead, as the first one had been.

The mill was soon spoken of as haunted by every one. No one would work there, and finally Mr. McKin closed it, and it was left to itself and to the ghost.

All this while Mme. McKin remained an alleged invalid, shut in her room all day, watched by her maid and talked of in whispers by her servants.

No one believed McKin's mill would ever run again, but one day a tall, strong, broad shouldered young fellow walked up the steps of the McKin mansion, asked to see the master, and begged to be allowed to take charge of the grist mill.

"I've heard the story," he said, as Mr. McKin began to explain. "I don't believe in ghosts, and they can't scare me anyway. I'm in hard luck, and I'm a good miller. Trust me and your mill shall work better than ever. You'll do me a service, and I'll do you one."

In vain Mr. McKin set before him the fact that two millers had been already killed there in the haunted mill. The young giant declared that he should not be, and finally the gentleman engaged him.

The mill was opened and the miller set to work. He took with him into the mill a Bible, a revolver and a large, sharp ax.

For the first two nights he saw nothing, but heard noises like the falling of heavy millstones upon the floor above and feet upon the stairs. He had expected something like this and remained in his room reading his Bible by the light of a shaded lamp.

On the third night, having heard the same noises and quietly disregarded them, his door was dashed open and a hideous form entered. It was something between a woman and a great bird of prey. It wore fluttering white robes, and had instead of hands great black claws. It floated toward him through the air, and behind it came another like unto it, but smaller.

The first creature swooped downward and made a clutch at the lamp. As it did so he snatched his revolver from his belt and fired, emptying all the chambers. The strange beings vanished with a wild shriek, but in a moment they entered again. This time the largest one made a furious clutch at the lamp. As she did so he lifted his ax above his head, and with one blow severed the hideous black claw from what looked like a shriveled human arm; then he hurled his Bible at the head of the smaller fiend. Instantly screams, oaths and horrible curses filled the air. The strange beings vanished and silence reigned.

The black claw dropped to the table. It was such a hideous sight that the miller covered it with a cloth, that he might not see it. He kept watch all the night, and early in the morning Mr. McKin, who had been told that firing had been heard in the mill, came to make inquiries. The miller told his tale, and Mr. McKin complimented him on his bravery. Of course he was desirous of seeing the amputated claw, and the miller proudly drew away the cloth. Behold! there lay upon the table, not a claw, but a woman's beautiful hand—a right hand, on the middle finger of which gleamed a splendid cluster diamond ring. At the sight of this horror seized the miller, and Mr. McKin seemed about to die. He knew the hand; he knew the ring. Then, without a word, he walked out of the mill and homeward and into his wife's chamber. She was in her bed, as usual. The maid, pale, and with a great bruise upon her forehead, interposed to prevent his approach.

"Madame is very ill," she said.

"Out of my way, woman!" he cried and pushed her aside.

Then, bending over his wife's bed, but without his usual show of tenderness, he said sternly:

"Show me your hand."

She thrust forth her left one.

"The other," he said.

She uttered a scream and turned down the counterpane, but there was none to show—only a bandaged stump, from which the hand had been severed.

The next morning the whole village was in wild excitement, for Jack McKin, whom they all knew and loved so well, had gone to the graveyard and there shot himself through the heart beside his mother's grave. And the servants had told their tale and the miller his, and there was the lady's hand, with the ring upon it, to be seen by all.

"Burn the wretches," a man cried, and a band of men, both black and white, bore down upon the McKin mansion. They entered the door and marched up the stairs and into madame's room, but there was no one there. Nobody had seen the two women depart, but they were gone and were never seen again, and since that time no fool has ever entered the old mill and it has slowly fallen into decay.

The lady's hand, however, is still preserved in spirits in the town hall, and the old negro who acts the part of watchman declares that at midnight it always changes to a hideous black claw. However, no one else ever witnessed this transformation.—Mary Kyle Dallas in Fireside Companion.

RANK INGRATITUEDE.

Will the Tribune state how much its (?) reliable news about the reservation matter cost? Hardly, as the telegram does not belong to it at all, but came in response to inquiries from a good Port Angeles democrat.

If there is anything about the Tribune that equals its stupidity and looseness with which it handles facts, it is its consummate meanness The Tribune has no gratitude in its soul, if, indeed, it has a soul which would seem improbable at times.

Colonel Lewis was not asked for exact dates, and probably did not inquire about them. He did not say anything about the "acting" commissioner, its true, but he [illegible]all on Secretary Smith who [illegible]the final approval, and got [illegible] information from the [illegible]y to warrant the telegraph [illegible]o the editor of this paper. [illegible]e service that Colonel did for Port Angeles was to get the attention of the department directed to our needs and to get the information from the Secretary that everything is all right.

If the Tribune is too mean, selfish and narrow to acknowledge such service as this deserves, it is, as usual, at variance with the citizens of Port Angeles, and unworthy to speak for them, as it is unworthy of the progressive town that supports it.

THE PEOPLE'S FRIEND.

Hon. James Hamiltion Lewis has again proven his friendship for his fellows. The very fact that thousands of squatters are being injured by the delay in the approval of the reservation appraisement was sufficient to enlist gratuitous services of this brilliant champion of the people. At the time the attention of this distinguished lawyer was called to the needs of Port Angeles, he was in Washington City on a mission of love. Thousands of settlers on the lieu lands in the Palouse country are being persecuted by the Northern Pacific railroad. The title to their farms was in jeopardy. It was a question of bread and butter with these hardy pioneers. They could ill-afford counsel, while they were fighting a powerful corporation with money without limit for attorney's fees and costs. The farmers had, in many instances, all but dispared, when the Hon. James Hamilton Lewis came to their assistance, offering his services without price. He is now in Washington City fighting against two attorney's whose salaries amount to nearly $50,000 per annum, alone and without pay except the satisfaction of feeling that a good action is well done.

Knowing this good man's traits and of his desire to always assist those in need, he was asked by telegraph to urge the approval of the Port Angeles townsite reservation appraisement. The result was the immediate and effective action which has resulted in the speedy solution of the difficulty.

Port Angeles will remember her debt of gratitude to Hon. James Hamilton Lewis.

THE DEMOCRAT-LEADER for its reader and the people of Port Angeles acknowledges gratefully the services rendered the citizens of our city by Colonel James Hamilton Lewis, and Mr. F. O. Lamoreux in calling the attention of the interior department to the Port Angeles reservation matter.

THE Presbyterian church has suspended Dr. Briggs. The trial was marked with all the features of a hot political convention, rather than the dignified trial that would be expected. The result is apt to be far reaching. A division of the sect is not unlikely.

THE special edition of the San Francisco Examiner is what our friend Thackeray would call a "prodigious" paper. It is certainly marvel.

New Law Firm.

Messrs. Fred O. Lamoreux and Chas. E. Gay have formed a co-partnership for the practice of the law.

The new firm begin their business career under most favorable auspices. They are both young, ambitious and eminently qualified for the profession they have chosen for a life pursuit.

With application, strict attention to and a rigid observance of business rules there is no reason why they should not be successful from a professional as well as a financial point of view.

WANTS A FRANCHISE

For a Double Track Street Railway

ON RAILROAD AVENUE.

Petition for the Passage of an Ordinance Closing Places of Business on Sunday—Charges Preferred Against City Clerk Humphries—Committee Appointed to Investigate.

The council met in regular session Wednesday with the mayor in the chair and councilmen Kreuger, Reid, Rose, Beam, Ristine, Metcalf and Carver present.

A petition was read by the clerk, signed by about forty petitioners, requesting that an ordinance be passed by the council providing that all places of business, excepting restaurants, hotels, livery stables and saloons be closed on Sunday. The petition was referred to the ordinance committee.

A communication was received from Lewis Levy, which was in substance as follows:

To the Honorable Mayor and City Council:

GENTLEMEN—I hereby give notice to your honorable body that I will apply at the regular meeting of the city council, to be held June 14, 1893, for a franchise for the right-of-way for a double track standard gauge railroad over and along Railroad avenue, from the easterly to the westerly limits of the city along said avenue.

LEWIS LEVY.

Another communication was read by the clerk from Charles E. Lewis Cross, as follows:

To the Honorable Mayor and Council of Port Angeles:

GENTLEMEN—There was published in the official paper on June 2, Ordinance, No. 176, relating to licensing saloons. The wording of this ordinance is so vague and undefined that an amendment is necessary to keep such ordinance within legal limits.

There are many branches of business which do not come under the name of saloon, such as druggists, wholesale wine stores and stores where wine, etc., is only sold in bottles.

I beg to propose the following amendment:—Whereas. Ordinance, No. 176, does not define the class of houses to which said ordinance should apply, be it enacted that said ordinance 176 should read to apply to such places of business called saloons, where beer, wine, spirits and other intoxicating drinks are sold over the counter, and to no other business.

Most obediently,

CHARLES E. CROSS.

The foregoing was referred to the city attorney.

The amendment of Ordinance, No. 141, providing for the licensing of hacks, drays, etc., was brought up for discussion. The license under this ordinance was $10 and $12 respectively for double and single teams. A motion to instruct the attorney to amend the ordinance so as the license would be $7 and $5 for double and single teams, prevailed.

Thomas O'Neil requested the council to permit the transfer of a liquor license granted James Fitzgerald to himself. The request was granted, and the bond of said Thomas O'Neil was accepted and approved.

The report of Police Justice Carusi for the month of May showed that during that month three warrants were issued, three arrests made, three trials without jury, three convictions and $11 collected in fines.

Ordinances No. 182 and 184 were referred to the city attorney.

The bond of M. J. Clump as city tax collector was accepted and approved. The sureties are John M. Bell, Malcom McGill, Charles Agnew and Merrill Whittier.

A number of labor bills were allowed. Councilman Reed stated that men had been employed for a week last past in improving Race street from First to Fourth streets. He requested that the council instruct the the street commissioner to continue this improvement to Sixth street. The latter he deemed a very needful improvement, as it would render that street passable at all seasons of the year. Councilman Beam moved that the street commissioner be instructed to improve Race street from Fourth to Fifth street. The motion prevailed.

Councilman Reed requested, on behalf of C.M. Armbrust, that the city engineer be instructed to establish for the latter the corner to his property on Albert between Second and Third streets. The matter was laid over for one week.

Councilman Reed stated that he had charges to prefer against City Clerk Humphries. Has he had made the charges he desired that some one of the councilmen read them. He thereupon requested that Councilman Beam read them. The latter proposed that the city attorney perform that somewhat unpleasant and distasteful duty, which met with general acquiescence with the council. The document was then read by City Attorney Hatch.

It was somewhat voluminous and contained three indictments, slightly specific and strikingly general, in substance as follows:

First—Illegally issuing hack licenses.

Second—Using inflammatory, indecent and unbecoming language in refering to members of the city council.

Third—Frequently being absent from his office during business hours, thereby seriously interfering with and clogging the business of the city.

After the charges had been read Councilman Ristine arose and expressed a desire to have the matter brought to an immediate issue.

City Clerk Humphries pleaded for the opportunity to prove his innocence.

Councilman Ristine did not favor delaying the matter. He did not see why the clerk could not defend himself as well now as later on, and he wanted the trial to proceed forthwith.

Mayor Smith most emphatically denounced such high-handed proceedings as an infamous outrage, an act that would even put to shame the inhuman customs practiced by the people of barbaric countries.

If it really was a fact that the member was so wofully ignorant of the law, fo parliamentary usage and practice, had such a stunted conception of justice, of right and of equity, the people certainly had abiding faith in the integrity of the other members of the council, that they would see to it that such unfair proceedings were effectually squashed and the author severely rebuked.

The law required that the clerk be given a fair and an impartial trial. Accusations had never as yet been accepted in any court, no matter how prejudiced and unfair, as ample and sufficient ground for conviction.

The city attorney stated that the council would be obliged to proceed legally. They must give the clerk a fair and an impartial trial. They certainly could not remove an official without cause whenever the whim seized them. It must be just and well-founded.

When they elected the clerk it was for a period of one year, and he only could be removed for good and sufficient cause.

After some discussion Councilman Ristine evidently realized his mistake and moved that a committee of four be appointed to act in conjunction with the city attorney and investigate the charges preferred and report at the next regular meeting.

The mayor appointed Councilmen Ristine, Metcalfe, Reed and Beam to constitute such committee. The council then adjourned.

MYSTERIES OF THE SEA

Curious Exhibits in the Fisheries

AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Whale Skeletons, Sea Lions, Fish of all Kinds, Crabs, Oysters, Clams, and Many Other Features of Life in the Deep.

Mystery enshrouds so much of the life of the sea, that interest never flags in the captives as shown at great expositions. Captain J. W. Collins presided over a department at the Columbia Exposition that is a vertiable congress of all that could interest one in seal life. The department is so classified as to show anything pertaining to fish, including the fish themselves in endless varieties, the food of the fish, methods of catching them, animals and birds that prey upon them, boats, homes and schools of fishermen, implements and improved apparatus for catching them, and all the products of fish, as canned, smoked and pickled fish, glues and oils. One attractive section of this big building, not far from the magnificent aquaria of living fish, is the display made by Washington, the baby State of the Union, recently christened the "Evergreen State," in recognition of the magnificent forests of fir, cedar, hemlock, spruce, yew and others of the family of cone bearers. This display is always surrounded by a crowd of interested people. One of the principal reasons for this fact is that the exhibit is crowned by a huge specimen of a whale suspended from the roof. The whale is of the species known to science as the Megaptera versabilis and commonly known as the Pacific Humpback whale. This specimen was 47½ feet long and 48 feet in maximum girth. It was washed ashore in Pacific county, Washington, and was presented to the State by President Loomis, of the Ilwaco Railroad and Navigation Company. The tedious work of preparing the skeleton was done by Prof. J. Hudson, the taxidermist of the Washington World's Fair Commission, who has charge of installing both of the fisheries and taxidermy displays of the State of Washington.

The fishery exhibits from this state includes mounted specimens of seven varieties of salmon, known to the trade as chinook or king salmon, steel head, silver salmon, nasel, blue-back, Alaska hump-back and Quinault; several species of sturgeon, halibut, rock cod or groupers, buffalo cod, tom cod, ling cod, sculpin and skate. They are all mounted by skillful taxdermists. There are also many of the smaller fish such as smelt, herring and trout, as well as shad, carp and squids preserved in alcoholic solutions. There is one beauty in a large glass jar. It is a Dolly Varden trout weighing 14 pounds. The fish are arranged in groups, garnished with clusters of star fish, shells, crabs and other custaceans. A large oil picture of the whale as it appears in life, a collection of fish eating birds and animals and a display of photographs showing the fishrman's homes, employment and methods of catching fish, showing the canneries and all surroundings and many other interesting features of the industry make the section attractive. Oysters, clams, mussels and other shell fish are shown in jars of alcohol. Some of the principal canneries, such as J. G. Megler, Piller Rock Company, S. Schmidt & Company and the Aberdeen Packing Company have attractive exhibits of canned fish and fish products.

One of the most striking figures in this section is a huge sea lion perched on a great rock and in the act of swallowing a captive salmon.

Besides this exhibit there are shown in the Washington State Building a similar collection of all kinds of fish and the interesting objects produced from the waters of Puget Sound, the Columbia river, their tributaries and the Pacific ocean. All are from Washington and go to show that the youngest state in the union will some day be known as one of the greatest fishing states in the nation.

The fishing industry of the state of Washington is practically undeveloped as yet, but there are huudreds of miles of fishing grounds and the output, according to the reports of state officials, is valued at $1,110,490. The same officers report 335 acres of oysters under cultivation. The reports go to show that some day this inviting field will be bristling with thriving industries employing many men and yielding millions of revenue.

NEWS NOTES.

A gentleman from Wisconsin called at the Washington Building today and said that he had been through the Wisconsin exhibit and had been advised by the executive commission of his own state to visit the exhibit of Washington and he would see how Wisconsin might have done and didn't. The idea now prevails among many of the state commissioners.

William T. Woodruff, president of the Seth Thomas Clock Company, of Thomaston, Connecticut, visited the Washington Building this week and was greatly interested in the forestry display. He says he is figuring on purchasing a great deal of materials in the state of Washinaton for use in the clock company's factories.

One of the gentlemen in charge of the French agricultural exhibit was heard to remark the other day: "We came here expecting to take a prize for grain exhibits but you should just go over to the 'leetle state of Washingtone.' Grain so high as my head, straws like yellow gold, big heads. It beats all the world."

A Scotchman, corresponding for one of the largest papers in Scotland, is examining the various exhibits carefully. His first letter will say that Washington excels the world on grain exhibits and he now thinks he will have to give the same state first place in fruits.

D. N. G. Blalock was greatly pleased over the demonstrations of a prominent German professor connected with that country's world's Fair exhibits. The professor begged some specimens of big potatoes and vegetables to take to Germany as curiosities from the new state Washington.

CLALLAM PUBLIC LANDS

VISITS CLALLAM COUNTY

To Examine Unsurveyed Public Lands and Ascertain Whether Or Not They Are Occupied by Bona Fide Settlers—Promptness and Efficiency Mark the Administration of the Interior Department.

Special Agent J. T. Olive, of the Interior department, arrived in this city last Tuesday, remaining until Thursday.

Mr. Olive is a Georgian, being a resident of Lexington, Ga. He received his commission last month, and was immediately dispatched to this state to inspect public lands.

The object and purpose of his visit to Clallam is to personally examine the unsurveyed public land in the county, and ascertain if it is occupied by actual bona fide settlers or speculators.

It will be the aim of Secretary Smith to expedite matters in his department as rapidly as is consistent with sound business methods, honesty and efficiency

Another matter also, it is believed, will be looked into. The bids for the survey of public lands in this county, which have been submitted to the department and are quite to the limit fixed for such work, a very slight difference existing in the compensation fixed in each bid for such survey. Suspicion of combination, doubtless, has actuated the department to make an investigation.

During his visit here Mr. Olive was taken over the reservation and expressed himself agreeably surprised over the evidences of thrift and industry manifest on all sides.

He fully realized the great need of an early approval of the report of the appraisers which is at present in the Interior department. To that end he said that he would write a personal letter to Secretary Smith urging that the report be approved at once, advancing therein good and sufficient reasons why immediate action should be taken.

Thursday morning Mr. Olive, in company with Mr. Louis Williams, examined township 29 N, range 6 W, WM with the view of recommending its survey, the greater portion of which is occupied by settlers.

A Mexican Bat in a Birdcage.

In a little out of the way alley not far from Stuyvesant square there is a small, dingy barroom. It is the favorite drinking place of a dozen or more old men, who are cronies and have met and played chess there for many years. The aged proprietor of the place has filled the room with curiosities—strange stuffed birds, autographs of old New Yorkers, theater tickets of a quarter of a century ago, a few old fashioned collars, etc. The old gentleman is facetious occasionally. He has been chuckling over his latest joke for a week or two.

Hanging from the ceiling directly over the bar is a bamboo birdcage. The four sides of the cage are covered with cloth curtains. On one of these curtains is printed this inscription, "A Mexican Bat." Of course every customer wants to see the animal, but on lifting the curtain one sees nothing but a brick suspended from the top of the cage by a string. The experiment generally costs the curious person at least the price of five flagons of ale.—New York Tribune.

It seems surprising to learn that twenty years ago 4,000,000 pounds of snuff per annum were consumed in this country. Much more astonishing is this circumstance that during the fiscal year ended July 1, 1892, 10,000,000 pounds of snuff were used in the United States. Yet how rarely is it that one sees a pinch of snuff taken! —Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

DEATH OF EDWIN BOOTH

America's Greatest Actor's Final Struggle.

A BRILLIANT CAREER.

Short Biographical Sketch Reviewing His Life's Work—His Great Genius Shown Most Radiently in the Impersonation of Hamlet—The Last of a Great Family of Actors.

Edwin Booth is dead.

He passed away in New York City last Wednesday, having never fully recovered from a paralytic stroke he received in 1890.

America's greatest tragedian, Edwin Booth, who has been hovering on the verge of shadowland so many days, passed away at 1:15 this morning in his apartments in the Players' Club. The decline in his physical condition has been perceptible for several days, and as long ago as Saturday night all hope of saving his life were given up. All day today his condition grew steadily worse and at 7 o'clock last evening Dr. St. Clair Smith was hastily summoned to the club. After a brief examination of the dying man, Dr. Smith prepared a bulletin, which was posted in the hallway, to the effect that it was doubtful if Mr. Booth survived the night.

At ten o'clock another serious change was noted, and Dr. Smith was again summoned. He did what he could to ease the dying moments of Mr. Booth, who, although unconscious, appeared to suffer greatly for lack of air, it being apparently extremely difficult for him to breath. From this time until he expired the great actor gradually grew weaker, and life finally passed away when his breath had died to almost an imperceptible flutter.

Edwin Booth was a son of the great actor Junius Brutus Booth, and a brother of John Wilkes Booth, who assassinated Abraham Lincoln. He was born at Be Air, near Baltimore, Md., November 13, 1833, the night of the historical shower of stars, when the heavens were filled with myriads of flying meteors, and superstitious people thought it was the forerunner of the day of judgment, and that the end of the world was at hand. He was named Edwin, after his fathers friend Edwin Forrest. When a boy he received instructions from different teachers in the immediate vicinity of his home; but this tuition was neither continuous or thorough. He was thoughtful and studious and made much of his limited opportunities. He was reticent and singular, profound and sensitive, and the eccentric genius of the elder Booth found in him an object of sympathy. The father and son were fondly attached to each other from the first, and while Edwin was yet very young his father made a companion of him in his professional journeys. It was in the course of one of the tours that Edwin Booth made his regular appearance upon the stage, in the Boston Museum, September 10, 1840. The play was Clibber's version of Shakespere's "Richard III., and the youth came forward in the little part of Tressil. At first the elder Booth opposed his son's choice of the stage, but ultimately he relinquished his opposition. The boy persevered, and presently, still acting in his father's train, he appeared at Providence, R. I., at Philadelpia and at oth[illegible] as Cassio in "Othello" and as [illegible] in "The Iron Chest"—the latter [illegible]onation being particularly good. Edwin Booth continued to act with his father for more than two years after his advent at the Boston Museum. His first appearance on the New York stage was on September 27, 1850, at the National theatre, Chatham street, as Wilford. At the same theatre, in 1851, his father being ill, he promptly took the place of the elder tragedian, and for the first time in his life enacted Richard III. [illegible]ort, remarkably successful for [illegible]ative novice, was hailed as the [illegible]n of great talent and the au[illegible] of a brilliant future. In the sum[illegible] 1852, he accompanied his father to San Francisco, where the elder [illegible], Junius Brutus Booth, jr., had already established himself as an actor and theatrical manager, and where the three now acted in company. Other cities were visited by them, and the elder Booth remained in California for about three months. One night, in Sacramento, seeing Edwin dressed for Jaffier, in "Venice Preserved," he said to him: "You look like Hamlet: why don't you play it?" a remark that the younger Booth afterwards had good reason to remember, for no other actor ever played Hamlet so often or over so wide a range of territory. Just as the name of Junius Brutus Booth in inseparable associated with Richard III. so the name of Edwin Booth is inseprably associated with Hamlet.

HAVE YOU TRIED DRUGS AND FAILED

TO FIND A CURE FOR RHEUMATISM, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, KIDNEY, LIVER and BLADDER COMPLAINTS, DYSPEPSIA, LAME-BACK, &c.

DR. SANDEN'S ELECTRIC BELT with Electro Magnetic Suspensory will cure without medicine all of the above troubles. Those who suffer from Nervous Debility, Losses, Drains, Lost Manhood, Nervousness, Sleeplessness, Poor Memory, all Female Complaints, and general Ill health, the effects of abuses, excesses, worry or exposure, will find relief and prompt cure in our marvelous invention, which requires but a trial to convince the most skeptical. In ignorance of effects you may have unduly drained your system of nerve force and vitality—which is electricity—and thus caused your weakness or lack of force. If you replace into your system the elements thus drained, which are required for vigorous strength, you will remove the cause and health, strength and vigor will follow at once. This is our plan and treatment, and we guarantee a cure or refund money.

Our 200 page book "THREE CLASSES OF MEN," should be read by every young, middle-aged and old man, sent sealed, free. Dr. Sanden's Electric Belt is no experiment as we have restored thousands to robust health and vigor, after all other treatments failed, as can be shown by hundreds of cases throughout this and other States, who would gladly testify, and from many of whom we have strong letters bearing testimony to their recovery after using our Belt.

WE HAVE CURED THESE—WE CAN CURE YOU!

GENERAL DEBILITY CURED.
San Francisco, Cal., August 14, 1892.
Dr. A. T. Sanden, Dear Sir:—Before I used your belt I was troubled with lost vigor, vital weakness, and almost a complete loss of power. I would get up with a very tired feeling, bones aching, etc.; since using your belt I have had a new lease of life. I now enjoy life better than I have for ten years past. I have the utmost confidence in your treatment. You can publish this statement, also have others write or call on me. Truly yours. H. A. BOWEN, 26 and 28 Turk St.

RHEUMATISM AND LAMENESS CURED.
Port Land, Oregon, April 18 1892.
Dr. A. T. Sanden, Dear Sir—I got one of your belts two weeks ago for rheumatism, from which I suffered for several years. For the past six months I had not been able to work. Your belt has placed me in almost perfect health in the two weeks I have used it. I can walk comfortably, and feel like a new man generally.
M. E. HUGHES, Proprietor International Hotel.

NERVOUS DEBILITY—LOSS OF VIGOR.
Tacoma Wash., October 24, 1892.
Dr. A. T. Sanden, Dear Sir:—I have been using your Electric belt for general nervous debility, and to-day feel better than I have for five years. I have gained in vigor daily, and am strong in every part.
Yours gratefully, CHAS. LUETKA.

LAME BACK AND RHEUMATISM.
Portland Oregon, September 26, 1892.
Dr. A. T. Sanden, Dear Sir:—Years of exposure and hard work, combined with the strain coming from the jar of an engine, gave me a severe case of lame back, from which I suffered for seven years. I was so bad that I could not bend my back. Was all doubled up with it. I bought one of your belts. It helped me inside of two days, and I continued to wear it for four months, being perfectly cured. That was two years ago, and I am as well to-day as I ever was in my life. I know your belt well, and I know lots of people who have been cured by it. Many others need it, and if they would try it they would find it the same as I did—the best remedy in the world. I am located here permanently, and will be glad to talk with anyone who wants to inquire about it.
ROBERT BURREL, Engineer Hotel Portland.

LOST VITALITY AND STRENGTH.
Everett, Wash, June 15, 1892.
Dr. A. T. Sanden, Dear Sir:—Since wearing your belt I have been greatly benefited. I feel my old energy fast returning; and after a month's use of the belt I find myself twice as vigorous as before. My memory is now nearly perfect, and each day shows for the better. I feel much stronger than before using the belt. Yours truly, HENRY SCHULTZ.

TWO MEN, ONE WOMAN

Henry Wilmerding's dwelling place was not in any wild and unsettled part of the world, where it might be supposed that personal safety could only be preserved by personal caution and personal daring or readiness, but in a large and well appointed apartment house, conveniently and centrally located on the most fashionable avenue in the city. His sitting room was richly and comfortably furnished; there were handsome rugs on the floor, and the rays from the shaded lamp fell upon a table covered with books and papers and the latest magazines. On the walls were many pictures, engravings, etchings and paintings, and on the top of the bookcase, which ran around the room, were a few pieces of well selected bric-a-brac and small statuary, while the books themselves, which filled all the cases, were further evidence of his taste and cultivation.

Surely his was a home where he might feel secure against any violence or attack of any sort. There were chairs about so comfortable as to invite any occasional occupant of them to repose and quiet and forgetfulness of trouble, but in one of the easiest of these, drawn near the table with the lamp, Henry Wilmerding sat cleaning a revolver—an occupation which seemed almost improper or at least incongruous in such surroundings. He had removed the cylinder of the pistol from its barrel and stock and was carefully rubbing it with a silk cloth, while upon the table at his hand were the cartridges he had taken from its chambers.

Suddenly the door, which he had carelessly left unlocked, was opened violently from without, and a man entered the room. Wilmerding rose quickly in astonishment and anger, but the newcomer said at once:

"Sit down!" And taking his hand from his overcoat pocket, where it had been concealed, he pointed a cocked pistol straight at Wilmerding's breast. Wilmerding was overcome by the suddenness of the intrusion and the action of the man, so terrible in its significance. His knees trembled and he sank back into his chair weak and for the moment unnerved, but presently, as he saw the man looking at him contemtuously, he rallied, and it was with apparently perfect composure that he said:

"Your command is peremptory and unpleasant, but you seem to have the power to enforce it. Well?"

The man walked to the other side of the table, where he stood silently for a moment, looking down at Wilmerding. Then his attention was attracted to the picture of a woman which stood upon the table in a sort of easel frame. He struck it violently with his left hand, knocking it to the floor.

"How dare you have that—her picture—there?" he asked.

"Oh, see here," Wilderming answered in proud carelessness, although he looked at the pistol still pointing directly toward him and then past it at the angry eyes of his visitor, "I can't change my arrangements to suit the whim of an uninvited and unwelcome guest. Pray why have you favored me with this visit, Mr. David Bradford?"

"You know well enough why I have come."

"Apparently you have come to quarrel with me. You could not have chosen a happier time—for you," Wilmerding returned as he glanced at his own now useless pistol.

"Pshaw!" Bradford replied as he noted the direction of Wilmerding's glance. "Now I can wait; I can kill you when I please; I can be sure that you will feel all that it means; I can know that you will appreciate your punishment. Had you been ready, I would have been compelled to be quicker—that is all."

"Indeed?" asked Wilmerding, "yet I dare say I would not have used my pistol any more than I now care for help. This matter can be settled in only one way. But if you hold that position long your hand, steady as it is, will shake. Sit down, you will be more comfortable."

Bradford sat down and folded his arms upon the table before him. He held the pistol, still cocked: but it was no longer pointed at Wilmerding. For a moment or so Bradford looked silently at Wilmerding, who, whatever fear he may have felt, showed no sign of it.

"You are cool," Bradford said at last.

"Yes."

"You are very cool."

"I can be very hot. At present I prefer to be cool."

"Do you think that because I give you time I may spare you? Do you think that any plea of yours will help you?"

"When I plead with you, you may respond," Wilmerding replied disdainfully, retaining his wonderful command of himself.

"And yet life should be very pleasant to you; one would think you would find it worth your while to save it."

"It would be mere bravado to say that I court death," Wilmerding replied as he shrugged his shoulders. "I will not stoop to that."

"Yet death is before you—imminent and certain."

"You are very cool too."

"I am. Yet man never had greater reason to lose his self control than I; no man ever had greater cause for passion or anger than I. My very coolness makes my purpose more certain. Passion will not blind me. I will not lose my way."

"Then why do we wait, Bradford?"

"You have grown tired of the situation? I do not wonder. I have something to ask, however."

"A favor to ask?"

"Yes. You owe me something for the havoc and ruin you have wrought in my life."

"I have wrought no havoc, no ruin, for whatever of ruin you have come to you are yourself responsible. It is you who should be called upon for payment, for reparation. But let that go. I did not mean, I do not choose to meet any accusation you may wish to bring against me."

"As you please; it will save time."

"Yes; but from your point of view do I owe you more than my life will pay?"

"More, Wilmerding? Far more. What good will your death do me? Do you think that I have failed to consider the cost of my step to me? It is punishment for you, not reward for me, that I propose to seek in this way."

As Bradford spoke he unfolded his arms and touched gently, with the fingers of his left hand, his pistol. Wilmerding did not show that he noted the action of Bradford. He laughed coolly.

"You must have arrived at your judgment and planned this—this execution of it deliberately," he said.

"Yes."

"Then it is as a judge, righteous and pure, that it pleases you to pose?"

"Pose?" Bradford repeated.

"I think that that is the word. It may be that you deceive yourself; but you cannot deceive me. I know you too well, Mr. Bradford—altogether too well. You were not happy in your selection of an audience. But come. This favor you want granted—what is it?"

"I want a statement; I want you to write and sign a statement of your relations with my wife."

Wilmerding expressed his astonishment that such a favor should be asked of him in a long, low whistle. He looked sharply and questioningly at Bradford, in whose determined face and unchanging attitude there was no indication that he meant either to relent in his purpose or relax his vigilance. Then Wilmerding moved closer to the table and drew paper before him.

"Nothing could be simpler or easier to do than that," he said, "but I am afraid my statement will not gratify you. To be complete it will have to tell you of your relations, too—of your foolish neglect, your inhuman cruelty, your falsity and your baseness."

"You may include what you please."

"And as for my relations, why should I not write of them? The whole world may know of them as well as not."

"That is not what I want. I do not care for only a statement of what the world knows or may know. That would not be worth the asking for."

"Then"— Wilmerding began, but Bradford interrupted him.

"I want a complete statement—a truthful statement, no matter who is harmed, no matter who is incriminated."

Wilmerding, as if his task were a hopeless one, pushed away the paper he had drawn before him. He leaned back in his chair.

"Ah, I knew," he said; "I thought so. You do not want the only statement I can write—that would not serve your purpose. You seek to justify yourself. You do not want the truth; it is not truth you want at all, but a lie. I will not write it. Yet I thank you."

"Yes; I have given you a chance."

"A chance?" Wilmerding repeated, as though he did not understand. "I thanked you because you had not tried to bargain with me; because you had not offered me my life in exchange for the lying statement you want. That great dishonor you have spared me and I thank you."

"But I will make a bargain with you; I will give you your life for the statement I want."

Wilmerding rose. He pushed his chair from him so that it fell noisily to the floor. For the first time in the interview he spoke angrily and without the control of himself he had maintained.

"You scoundrel!" he said. Bradford rose from his seat, recoiled a step or two, raised his pistol, but then lowered it again as Wilmerding spoke on. "How dare you think of me so badly? How dare you think I would purchase even life at such a price as that? You want the truth, you say. I do love your wife. Is that the truth you want? I do love your wife more than I love life or fear death. I love her, I say, but no word of love from me has ever hurt her ears. No word of love for me has ever sullied her lips; yet I know she loves me. That is the most glorious truth I know. She loves me as she never did, never could have loved you."

Wilmerding, as though now he only wished that some end might be brought to the interview, any end to the suspense, leaned far over the table toward Bradford and pulled his waistcoat open impatiently. Bradford raised his pistol again, his finger on the trigger.

"Do not be impatient," he said. "You may even now change your decision and save your life."

Wilmerding straightened himself and pulled at his collar as though he found it hard to breathe. Then he raised his hand imploringly.

"Wait!" he said. "One minute."

"Ah!" Bradford said as he smiled scornfully. "You know the terms."

"And you can think I will accept them? Wait. There in that cabinet behind you"——

WINTER MONTHS.

Beloved one, did you sometimes think—
Sitting your cheerful hearth beside,
While boisterous winds through every chink
Of door and casement moaned and sighed—

That, after autumn's days are done,
Some foolish birds—poor reckless things!—
May strive through storms to reach the sun,
But spread too late their fragile wings?

Alas! how many, dear, must die,
Of those sad, shivering emigrants!
At thought of it tears cloud you eye;
Long shall we miss their joyous chants.

Tonight you love me; and you say
That their return with spring is sure.
But not those birds who flew today?
And you—ah! will your love endure?

A STRANGE TONGUE.

Professor Jonathan Dominic Adams was a very great scholar. As everybody knew who knew anything, he was considered the authority on the Greek poets and everything appertaining to the Greek language, both ancient and modern. Greek was his hobby, his pleasure, the dream of his life, the alpha and omega of his every day's existence, and to any one who would or could not converse on his favorite topic the professor was most decidedly a bore.

Dr. Adams was sufficiently a man of the world to know that he owed his being in a very great measure to a woman. He was aware also that besides the heroines who lived in his books there were women who moved in the outer world. But beyond this knowledge he knew nothing of the weaker sex, to whom Greek, in most cases, was but a word and nothing more. Therefore it was with the greatest consternation that one summer evening, as he was strolling homeward across the Green park, he caught himself thinking, not of his favorite and only topic, but of a woman, and that woman a very sweet and pretty creature of twenty-five.

Dr. Adams tried his hardest to bring his thoughts into their usual and to him proper channel, but to no avail. To his horror he found that he had even forgotten some lines of Homer, but that he could not forget a pair of bright blue eyes and the smile of rosy lips. To the credit of the profession it must be said that he gave up the struggle and for the remainder of the evening dreamed of Miss Julia Drewry, while Homer for the time being was dethroned.

Now while Professor Jonathan Adams was dreaming of Miss Julia Drewry, Miss Julia Drewry was dreaming of Professor Jonathan Adams, thinking of him and the study of Greek literature. For she also was a great scholar, having left Girton with all the honors that it was possible for the fair student to take away with her. But, although she knew everything that there was to be known about divinity, classics, mathematics, natural science, moral science, history, German, Anglo-Saxons etc., her favorite subject was Greek.

Somewhat to her father's dismay he perceived that his daughter ignored the natural pleasures of youth, while she pestered him from morning till night with dissertations on this dead language. Learned man as he was himself, and an old college friend of Dr. Adams, he would have preferred Julia to take more interest in her surroundings and mix freely with her fellow creatures, instead of spoiling her pretty eyes with continuous study. But no; Miss Julia turned up her little nose at the girls she met, and at the young men, too, for up to the present she had not found one with whom she could talk upon the subjects which engrossed her mind.

Her father had one slight consolation, and that was that the girl, with all her faults, took an interest in her personal appearance, dressing well, if in the Greek style. Whether she wore blue stockings he never inquired, and of course we cannot; besides, it has nothing whatever to do with the story.

It so happened that one day, while taking his morning constitutional, Mr. Drewry stumbled across Dr. Adams; or, to put it more correctly, Dr. Adams stumbled over Mr. Drewry. The worthy professor, instead of looking where he was going, was walking along with his eyes fixed on the ground in a brown study.

"Bless my heart!" exclaimed Drewry, "why, it's Adams. How are you—how are you? What an age it is since we have met!"

"It must be ten years—ten long years, and yet it seems only yesterday," replied Adams.

"Long enough for many changes. My poor wife has been dead these ten years; but, thank God, I have a daughter to look after me. You saw her when she was fifteen. And you, are you married?"

"No, indeed," said the professor; "I am but wedded to my work."

"Ah, yes; I have seen your name mentioned now and again in connection with your Greek studies. But don't let us stand here talking; come home with me. Julia has often expressed a wish to see you again. She has questions to ask you and some theories to propound, for she also is Greek—very much so."

The two friends walked home to Mr. Drewry's humble but neat little cottage in Fulham, and from that moment—and I tell it with sorrow—Mr. Drewry had, to put it vulgarly, to take a back seat. The professor found Julia charming, and Julia considered the professor delightful, while poor Mr. Drewry had to listen to endless arguments upon the eternal Greek. At first he endeavored to divert his guest and draw him out about old college days, but five minutes after Dr. Adams would turn to the daughter and take up the conversation at the point where he had been interrupted.

The next day the professor called again, and also on the next and so on and so on until he was regarded in the light of a tame cat. Mr. Drewry took to his newspapers and his books, leaving his guest for hours with his daughter.

And what were the consequences?

Why, that Professor Adams after six weeks found his eyes wandering to the fair Julia's face instead of keeping them upon the books the two were studying together. And Miss Drewry would think to herself as she waited for the professor's diurnal visit that she had at last met a man whom she could be happy to marry, despite the fact that he was on the wrong side of forty—had a very bald head.

Matters had come to this serious point on the day Dr. Adams walked across the Green park, and when the image of the girl totally obliterated the image of Homer. That night the professor, as has already been told, gave himself up to dreaming about Miss Julia, and the following afternoon he put two questions to her.

The first was whether she would be willing to help him with a work he proposed to bring out in twenty volumes—namely, the "Lives of the Greek Poets," with criticisms on their poems, the whole to be written in Greek. To this proposition Julia readily consented.

The second question was that as the undertaking would be a work of years, and they would have to be continually together, would she object to becoming his wife to facilitate the plan. To this Miss Drewry, after a proper amount of womanly indecision, also consented.

Mr. Drewry at first somewhat naturally objected to the marriage, but he was very soon overruled, and in two months the wedding took place. Although autumn was united to summer the combination turned out a bright and happy one. The professor came to live at the cottage in Fulham, Mr. Drewry remaining with his daughter, and a more peaceful and contented trio never existed.

The "Lives of the Greek Poets" went on flourishingly. The first volume appeared and was received with great favor by the critics. But when the second volume was but half written a sudden interruption took place. It was a very natural one and one to be wished for—a young Master Adams made his appearance upon the scene, of course to the overthrow of his mother's work.

"For the time being only, I trust," the professor would say to himself as he laid down his pen to act the part of errand boy, for he was continually being desired to run for either the baby's bottle, or limewater, or such like infantile requisites. Then he was asked to step up stairs and see his son smile for the first time, and now and again was even required to hold him.

But after a few weeks of this unaccustomed occupation Dr. Adams became impatient for his wife to return to the study and help him to carry on the work they had commenced together. So after hinting many times that he wished for her assistance, which hinting she seemed to ignore, he decided one morning to ask her point plank to give the baby in charge of the nurse and devote a few hours to the "Lives of the Greek Poets."

With this intention he went up stairs to his wife's room, and as the door was open he heard her addressing somebody or something in a very peculiar and to him entirely new language. He paused on the landing and listened. If he had had any hair on the top of his head it would have stood on end. Could this be his classical Julia speaking this extraordinary jargon? This is part of what he heard:

"Didums then love his icle barthy-warthy? The darding icle boysey-woysey! Agoo! Agoo! Didums try and bite the spongey-wongey? Naughty icle sing! Naughty icle sing to make his back as stiff as a poker."

Dr. Adams peeped through the opening of the door and beheld his wife washing the baby. He continued to listen.

"Agoo! Agoo! Didums want to cry den when he's taken out of de nicey warm water. There, then, does him want to kick, kicky-wicky, kicky-wicky—nurse, where is the powder? Ah! thank you—was him being basted, then, like a icle chicken? Oh, I could eat him up, my pretty petty-wetty! I lub him so! Ah, poor, poor icle wee t'ing! Didums have the hiccoughs? Naughty, naughty hiccoughs! Shall mummy beat the horrid, nasty hiccoughs then—nurse, pass me the sugar, please. Perhaps that will do the little darling good. No sugar up here! Just ask Dr. Adams to fetch the sugar basin from the dining room cupboard."

Professor Adams beat a precipitate retreat, and on gaining the hall seized his hat and went out for a long walk. With his hands thrust deep into his pockets, and his hat placed over his eyes he gave himself up to very deep thought. But he thought not of the Greek language, but of the new tongue he had just heard. At first his face was very stern, but it gradually and gradually relaxed until it beamed forth into a very pleasant and sweet smile.

"Ah, what a fool I have been!" he exclaimed. "What a pretty picture it was to see her bending over my baby boy, and speaking a language to him that he only could understand! Greek in future shall be for me. Baby in future shall be for Julia, with just a little bit of him for me also. Women can be and are very great, but what a little thing will upset their greatness and make them what they ought to be—sweeter and—and—well—why, women!"

The "Lives of the Greek Poets" came out, but at longer intervals than was at first intended, for Dr. Adams did all the work himself. His wife was always ready to listen to the MS. when he read it aloud to her, and the professor was glad to get any advice that she might be able and willing to give.

Mrs. Adams in future attended to the comforts of her husband, her baby and her father, and was also glad to get any advice they were willing and able to give.

Mr. Drewry was more happy than he had been for many a long day, for he could now get his daughter and son-law to talk on subjects other than Greek. But if he was ever at a loss for companionship, he could always resort to the new language, in which he was very proficient, and converse by the hour with his grandson to their mutual benefit and pleasure.—Edric Vredenburg in Wit and Wisdom.
