LEWIS LEVY

PORT ANGELES AND COUNTY

Tells of the Startling Contrast Between Eastern States and Puget Sound.

Volumes have been written, and many more volumes might be written, of the superior climatic conditions of the Puget Sound country and not wear the subject threadbare. In a first brief letter upon the subject one can do no more than present a few of the more prominent facts, general to the whole Sound, deferring the particular advantages possessed by this immediate section until a later time.

The startling contrast between the East and Middle West and Western Washington was never more graphically set forth than by Von Schierbrand in a recent number of the Pacific Monthly. The Doctor, who has been an extensive traveler throughout the world, came to this coast to make a protracted study of the relations of this section to the Orient. He left New York in February, "forty-one inches of snow on the ground and twelve degrees below freezing— eighteen below in Chicago, twenty-four below in St. Paul, thirty-two below in Montana," and not so very cold for those states, at that.

He arrived on the Sound early in the month and found no snow; in fact, we had had absolutely none all winter. He was amazed to find "the most delightful spring weather imaginable. No need of furs, not even a light spring overcoat. A balmy air fanning the cheek, an air moistened by the mellow breath of the deep." He might well have added that in this country, supposedly one of incessent winter rains, there had not been a day—not one—when the sun did not shine for a part of the time at least, and that during most of the time mid-day was too warm for comfort; that sprinklers were needed on the streets, where the little urchins played marbles in the dust; that not only were overcoats not needed, but workingmen had no use for coats of any kind, as a general thing. He might have written that fall lasted up to the fifteenth of January and that spring began the first of February; that there were but three days when a boy, and a small one at that, could have skated on ice in shallow places, protected from the sun. He might have stated that flowers were in bloom and vegetables growing all winter long; all this and much more, and yet have been well within bounds of a typical Puget Sound winter.

Instead, he truthfully described that which he personally witnesses, and to one who for a lifetime has been accustomed to severe winters, not knowing there was a country whose winters are not winters, save only those whose terriffic summer heat overshadows all else, his story reads like a vision of the promised land. He says:

"Underfoot, velvety lawn of that deep saturated emerald hue which in the entire East is the unattainable ideal of the gardener, even in June. All about, the flowers in bloom — crocuses, tulips, daffodils, daisies, narcissus, primroses, snowdrops, violets, pansies. The soil in the farmlands yonder ready for plowing and sowing. In the orchards cherry and peach trees shedding the sweet fragrance of their blossoms, and in the gardens boughs were heavy-laden with buds and bourgeons, tender young shoots peeping out between the wealth of purple and pink and gold.

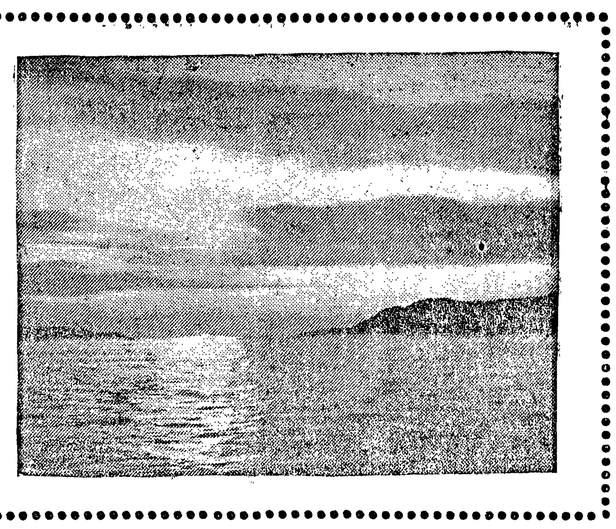
"There is only one garden spot of earth that can compare with the Pacific Coast in point of climate and scenic seduction, and that is the Riviera, that world-famed narrow strip between the Mediterranean Sea and the Maritime Alps, sheltered from every rude wind, and of which Nice, Monte Carlo, and Cannes are the gems. In climate and scenery, yes; but in fertility of soil and in wealth of natural resources this Pacific country far, far outvies the Riviera.

"Everywhere it is climate, soil, intelligent and progressive population, rivers, creeks, lakes, snow-capped mountains with never-failing sources of pure, limpid water, which distinguish this vast region — so little known as yet east of the Rockies and yet so manifestly designed by providence to play a hugh part in the political, social, and, above all, the economic future of these United States.

"Among the leading points telling in favor of the coming supremacy of the Pacific Northwest is the character of its population. The people are peculiarly and aggressively American, if by American is meant not only race, but racial characteristics — manliness, sturdy independence, energy, enterprise, frankness in word and deed, progressiveness, adaptability to novel conditions and surroundings. In short, a people representing the living embodiment of the 'American idea.'

"There is no race suicide here. Families are large, thrifty, strong in mind and body. The equable climate, the possibility of leading an open-air life all the year thru, make the average health wonderfully robust, the mortality singularly low, a remark which applies with special force to the women. There is no nervous debility here; roses bloom in the cheeks of maiden and matron, as roses also perennially bloom in their front gardens. There is an opulence of health and vigor about these North Pacific women which speaks well for the future of their offspring. The people, withal, are of an astonishingly high level of culture, sociable, hospitable, courteous, of the 'live-and-let-live' type. The Pacific Coast possesses in fact all the conditions required to build up the grandest race of men and women known in history.

"This vast section of the United States, producing as it does with its sparse population a great portion of the mineral, timber, agricultural and horticultural wealth of the nation, stands but at the threshold of its immeasurable future. The Pacific Coast within the first half of the new century will become so overshadowingly great that the mind staggers in forecasting events and conditions.



SUNSET ON THE STRAITS

Great on Labor Saving.

Robert G. Doyle of Fresh Water adds another chapter to our Clallam county potato story. The samples sent this office weighed three pounds each. Out of a crop of 161 sacks, 30 sacks were filled with potatoes fully as large as the samples shown, with not a potato in the bunch weighing less than two pounds! But this is not all. The potatoes were grown on a side hill, so all they had to do was to dig them and hold the mouth of the sacks open at the foot of the hill and the spuds were ready for market; of course a slight variation of the mouth of the sacks caught all the big ones, and this accounts for the thirty sacks of large potatoes!

George M. McCollum of Third and Albert is the prize winner for large apples, so far as reported, this season. The one he exhibited in this office Monday of the pippin variety, measured fourteen inches in circumferance and weighed three and one-half lbs.

Jewels of Vast Antiquity.

Remarkable discoveries have been made in the ruins of the temples at Susa, the ancient capital of Persia, where marvels of jewelry have been brought to light, the earliest examples known to that country.

The jewels of gold and silver are the first of those countries and those ages which have come down to the present day. In this they present a great interest. Unfortunately, it is not possible to assign a precise date to each of them. As the cylinders and the seals which form a part of the finds belong to all periods from the fortieth or fiftieth century B. C. down to the date of foundation, so it is with the jewels. There are some of every age. The rings of filigree work and the scepter with the lion's head seem to be more recent than the statuettes of gold and silver, which have a frankly archaic appearance, but one can not be sure of this appreciation. Have the discoverers not been surprised by finding rings which, if their origin had not been certain, would be attributed by the most acute connoisseurs to the Greek or Etruscan epochs?

Before the discoveries at Dashur nothing was known of the Egyptian jewelry. The opening of the tombs of the princes of the twelfth dynasty was a revelation. It is the same now as regards Elam.

Mothers will find Mrs. Winslows's Soothing Syrup the best remedy to use for their children during the teething period.

SORES THAT DO NOT HEAL

Whenever a sore or ulcer does not heal, no matter on what part of the body it may be, it is because of a poisoned condition of the blood. This poison may be the remains of some constitutional trouble; the effect of a long spell of sickness, which has left this vital stream polluted and weak, or because the natural refuse matter of the body, which should pass off through the channels of nature, has been left in the system and absorbed into the circulation. It does not matter how the poison became intrenched in the blood, the fact that the sore is there and does not heal is evidence of a deep, underlying cause. There is nothing that causes more discomfort, worry and anxiety than a festering, discharging old sore that resists treatment. The very sight of it is abhorrent and suggests pollution and disease; besides the time and attention required to keep it clean and free from other infection. As it lingers, slowly eating deeper into the surrounding flesh, the sufferer grows morbidly anxious, fearing it may be cancerous. Some of those afflicted with an old sore or ulcer know how useless it is to expect a cure from salves, powders, lotions and other external treatment. Through the use of these they have seen the place begin to heal and scab over, and were congratulating themselves that they would soon be rid of the detestable thing, when a fresh supply of poison from the blood would cause the inflammation and old discharge to return and the sore would be as bad or worse than before. Sores that do not heal are not due to outside causes; if they were, external treatment would cure them. They are kept open because the blood is steeped in poison, which finds an outlet through these places. While young people, and even children, sometimes suffer with non-healing sores, those most usually afflicted are persons past middle life. Often, with them, a wart or mole on the face inflames and begins to ulcerate from a little rough handling; or a deep, offensive ulcer develops from a slight cut or bruise. Their vital energies and powers of resistance have grown less, and circulation weaker, and perhaps some taint in the blood, which was held in check by their stronger constitutions of early life, shows itself. It is well to be suspicious of any sore that does not heal readily, because the same germ that produces Cancer is back of every old sore and only needs to be left in the circulation to produce this fatal disease. There is only one way to cure these old sores and ulcers, and that is to get every particle of the poison out of the blood. For this purpose nothing equals S. S. S. It goes down to the very bottom of the trouble, cleanses the blood and makes a permanent cure. S. S. S. enriches and freshens the circulation so that it carries new, strong blood to the diseased parts and allows the place to heal naturally. When this is done the discharge ceases, the sore scabs over and fills in with healthy flesh, and the skin regains its natural color. Book on Sores and ulcers and any medical advice desired will be furnished without charge.

I have had a crippled foot all my life, which compelled me to use a brace. By some unaccountable means this brace caused a bad Ulcer on my leg, about six years ago. I had good medical attention, but the Ulcer got worse. I was induced to try S. S. S., and am glad to say it cured me entirely, and I am convinced that it saved my leg for me. I have, therefore, great faith in S. S. S. and gladly recommend it to all needing a reliable blood medicine.

Picket Fence Device.

A simple effective plan for building a picket and wire fence without a machine is suggested by G. C. Schneider, of Ava, Mo. He says:

A device which will answer the purpose of a fence machine is made as follows: Take pieces of 2x4 a foot or so long, bore two small holes near the end of each, put the wires through these holes and fasten to post where you wish to begin. Then stretch your wire and staple to post some distance ahead, leaving the staples loose enough so the wire will slip when it is drawn tight. Let eight or ten feet of wire extend beyond the post and to those fasten heavy weights to keep the wire tight. Put a picket between the wires and turn the blocks over as often as you wish to twist the wire between each picket; then put in another picket and twist the other way, etc. To preserve posts, mix pulverized charcoal in boiled linseed oil to the consistency of paint and apply with a brush.

Cost of Silage.

We have from time to time laid before our readers the cost of putting corn in the silo, says Farmers' Tribune. Some men are able to grow the corn at a cost of about 50 cents per ton of green matter. They are able to put it in the silo for another 50 cents, making the total cost of the silage in the silo approximately $1 per ton. Sometimes the cost goes as high as $1.50, sometimes even higher.

Sam Schilling, who is manager of Joel Pheatwole's heard at Northfield, Minn., kept an accurate record of the cost of putting sixteen acres of corn in his silo last year and these figures were given before the Minnesota Butter Makers' Association this spring by Mr. Schilling. They are as follows:

16 acres corn at $8	$128 00
Cost of cutting, $1 per acre	16 00
Two men loading five days	15 00
Two men in silo	15 00
Four teams hauling five days	60 00
Engine five days and man	25 00
Fuel for engine	16 00
One man to feed machine	10 00
Cost of 200 tons silage	$285 00
Cost per ton of silage	1 42½

The average yield per acre in this instance was 12.5 tons of green corn. The cost of the ensilage, including the raising, which was estimated at $8 per acre, was a little high. Consulting the table, however, it will be seen that it required four teams hauling for five days top draw the corn to the silo per day. This means that the silage had to be drawn from some distance or more could have been hauled, but even at $1.50 per ton silage is a very cheap food.

Loading Corn Fodder.

Loading corn fodder may not be very hard work to the small farmer, but when one has the product of many acres to load it becomes a formidable operation. The work can be much more easily done if the following device is used: Make a loader by using a two-inch plank ten feet long with cleats of inch stuff nailed on one side at short intervals. At one end nail a cleat on the under side, which will be three inches wider than the board on each side. Tie small ropes to this cleat and with them fasten the rack to the back part of the wagon rack, the lower end of the plank-rack resting on the ground.

This makes a stepladder up which it is easy to walk and if strongly made a man can readily carry up it all he can get his arm around. With this plan one man can do the work of loading a wagon easily without spending the time necessary to bind the bundles. The illustration shows how easily the ladder can be made.—Indianapolis News.

Crops Without Irrigation.

The most widespread movement in the history of the country for the development of unirrigated lands in the West is in progress this spring. Hundreds of thousands of acres are being brought under cultivation as the result of government and other irrigation projects, but aside from this a plan far greater in its scope has been started for the successful use of farm lands without water.

Good Outside Paint.

A substitute for white oil paint may be made as follows: Four quarts of skim milk, 1 pound of fresh slacked lime, 12 ounces of linseed oil, 4 ounces of white Bergundy pitch, 6 pounds of Spanish white, to be mixed as follows: The lime to be slacked in an iron vessel in the open air by pouring water upon it a little at a time until it is dissolved into a fine dry powder. Put the lime into a wooden bucket or keg and mix it in about one-quarter of the milk; the oil in which the pitch must be previously dissolved over a slow fire and cooled, to be added a little at a time, then the rest of the milk, and afterwards the Spanish white. Mix thoroughly and strain through a common wire milk strainer and it will be ready for use. This quantity is sufficient for more than fifty square yards, two coats. By adding a very small quantity of lampblack first dissolved in milk and thoroughly mixed a very handsome lead color can be obtained. If stone color is desired, after mixing in the lampblack add a small quantity of yellow ochre and Venetian red separately, first dissolved in milk. While using, stir frequently to keep it in solution.

Fall Mulching of Trees.

If it is thought necessary to apply mulch around the base of trees or shrubs as a winter protection care must be used not to do the work too soon, particularly if anything in the nature of a fertilizer is used, such as coarse stable manure, for there is always danger of inciting renewed growth in the tree, just as it is beginning to go to sleep for the winter, and this growth, being extremely tender, will be killed by the first cold weather, probably with much injury to the tree. A better plan is not to apply the mulch until the ground freezes, applying more, if necessary, later on.

By far the best plan of all is to use earth with which to protect the roots of the tree or shrub during the first cold days; put it on several inches thick for three feet around the tree. Later, if it gets too cold, a little coarse manure may be put on over the soil. By this plan the tree or shrub will have full protection without danger of inciting a late growth.

A Good Grindstone.

A grindstone to turn with bicycle gear can be made after this cut, writes W. D. Watkins, of Athens, Ohio. Take sprocket wheels and chain off an old binder or dropper. Gear so that stone will turn two revolutions to one of crank. You can grind anything on it with great speed.

Grinding Corn for Swine.

We believe in feeding swine so that they will have something to keep them busy as well as for the best results to be obtained from the grain, so we feed the corn whole and usually on the cob until it gets hard and flinty, when it is either shelled and soaked a little to soften it or soaked on the cob. All other grains are ground because it has been demonstrated that the smaller grains go through the animals and do them but little good. Carrying out the plan of keeping the swine busy, we always have something for them to chew on—cornstalks, squares of sod, apples, potatoes and other vegetables, and we do not see that they take on fat any slower because of this plan of feeding. Pure water is given them in clean troughs twice a day during the winter and we know they thrive better for having it.—Exchange.

Cottonseed as Fertilizer.

Cottonseed meal is used quite extensively in some sections of the country as a fertilizer. A good grade meal will carry about 6.8 per cent nitrogen, 2.9 per cent phosphoric acid and 1.8 per cent potash. Based upon the valuations that will be used by New England experiment stations in 1905 for computing the value of commercial fertilizers, a meal analyzing as above will be worth about $29 a ton as a fertilizer. Notwithstanding its high value when used directly in this way it will usually be found more economical to use it as a food for stock and to apply the resulting manure to the land. When used thus, from eighty to ninety-five per cent of the nitrogen and phosphoric acid and practically all the potash will be contained in the manure.

Corn and Oil Meal for Hogs.

Hogs fed on corn and linseed-oil meal at the Missouri station ate more feed, made greater increase in weight, with a smaller amount both of food and of digestible nutriment, and at less expense than with any other grain ration tested in the dry lot feeding experiments, the balanced ration of corn and oil meal being the most efficient and profitable of the rations tested. The quality of the pork produced was unsurpassed, and the tendency of these feeds to make real growth, as well as fat, was greater than that of any other ration tested. One pound of oil meal replaced from 3.85 to 7.1 pounds of corn, according as it was fed with five or twenty pounds of corn. Bone meal fed with whole corn effected a marked saving in the grain requirements per pound of gain.

The proposal to permit the use of spectacles to British soldiers is a reminder that from their prohibition came the monocle, according to the Buffalo Commercial. About a century ago an army order was issued forbidding officers to wear eyeglasses or spectacles. But a short-sighted officer belonging to a crack regiment had no mind to resign his commission or stumble blindly, and he invented the single eyeglass. When called to account by the authorities he claimed that the monocle, being of singular number, did not contravene the order against spectacles and glasses in the plural. Red tape accepted this literal rendering of the law, and, becoming popular in the British army, the monocle was adopted by civilian beaus.

No Poison in Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

From Napier New Zeland Herald: Two years ago the Pharmacy Board of New South Wales, Australia, had an analysis made of all the cough medicines that were sold in the market. Out of the entire list they found only one that they declared was entirely free from all poisions. This exception was Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, made by the Chamberlain Medicine Company, Des Moines, Iowa, U. S. A. The absence of all narcotics makes this remedy the safest and best that can be had; and it is with a feeling of security that any mother can give it to her little ones. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is especially recommended by its makers for coughs, colds, croup, and whooping cough. This remedy is for sale by W. J Mathewson.
