Air Station Receives Special Speedboat

A new 28-foot crash or utility boat capable of making 44 miles an hour arrived here last week and was serviced and tested.

The crash boat is intended for use in case of mishap to a plane in the vicinity of the air station. It is to be equipped with a shallow diving outfit, medical kit and other special supplies.

Picnic Older Than Name; Term Known Back in 1802

Picnics are a form of diversion in which rich and poor may share alike and have been indulged in, though not always under the same name, for many centuries, writes a correspondent in the New York Times.

Down to mid-Victorian times the word picnic was hyphenated. Austin Dobson lauds the charms of a girl who was acknowledged "Queen at a picnic." The term is said to date from about the year 1802. Then, as now, it was the custom for guests to supply the food and drink. A list of requirements would be drawn up and passed around, each person picking out the item which he was willing to furnish. This item was then "nicked off" the list. Hence the term "pick-and-nick," which was gradually shortened into picnic.

The institution designated, however, is much older than the name. An account is extant of a picnic which took place in the early part of the Seventeenth century, upon the birthday of Charles, prince of Wales, afterward Charles I of England. In a letter to the earl of Arundel, dated November 22, 1618, Mainwaring says: "The prince his birthday has been solemnized here by the few marquises and lords which found themselves here; and (to supply the want of lords) knights and squires were admitted to a consultation, wherein it was resolved that such a number should meet at Gamiges, and bring every man his dish of meat." Picnic it was.

Red-Green Color-Blind Refuse to Be Convinced

One man out of 20 is decidedly color blind. As for women, less than one in a hundred is afflicted with defective color vision, investigators find, states a writer in the Washington Post.

Physiologists, psychologists and physicists, who have been seeking a solution for the problem of color blindness, are constantly amazed by two curious things about color-blind persons. First, color-blind persons don't generaly know they are color blind. Second, they resolutely refuse to be convinced that there is anything wrong with their color vision.

Tell a red-green blind person that this color is red and that is green, and he will laugh at you, thinking you're trying to play a practical joke on him. Not being able to distinguish between red and green, he is likely to stroll down the street wearing a red suit, thinking all the time he is dressed in sober gray, just like the famous English scientist Dalton did many years ago, to the shock of his Quaker friends.

Troubled Existence

"Did you ever have aphasia?"

"No," said Senator Sorghum. "In all my political life I've never believed I was somebody else. I have only wished I was."

One Hundred Men Be Placed On Jobs

Funds amounting to $47,040 providing for the employment of 183 men, have been granted to the City of Port Angeles and Clallam County by the WPA. The total man power alloted is 80 for the city and 103 for the county for periods of one to ten months.

Higher Court Rules On Utility Tax

The State Supreme court ruled this week that the state tax commission has no power to value and assess utility properties contained wholly within one county.

The power of the commission to assess utilities situated in two or more counties arises from necessity alone, the court held, adding there is no reason why a county assessor should not assess utilities wholly within his county.

The decision was handed down on a test brought by the Northwestern Improvement Company, owning and operating light and power property in Kittitas county.

Port Angele Naval Lodge 353 of Elks filed articles of incorporation with the Secretary of State this week.

Prosecutor Magnusion of King county has rounded up six policemen who will be charged with robbery.

According to dispatches it is claimed that the Italians lost two battles in Ethiopia this week.

The Column of July

The Column of July is a fluted column of bronze on the place de la Bastille in Paris, dedicated on July 28, 1840, to the "French citizens who fought for the defense of the public liberties on the memorable days of the 27th, 28th and 29th of July, 1830." The column rests on a round base of white marble. Four bands encircle it, bearing the names of the 615 who fell in the revolution and whose remains, together with those of the victims of the revolution of 1848, are contained in the vaults underneath.

Ship Funnels

The old—and mysterious—presence for a ship with three or even four funnels still lingers in the minds of many travelers. Probably it dates from the time when a ship big enough to have more than one smokestack was a novelty, and each additional funnel was held to indicate increased size, speed and safety. With this in mind, perhaps, designers have frequently given liners dummy funnels.

Silk Worms Leave Clear Trade-Mark on Threads

Silk worms leave marks of their individuality on the threads of silk they spin. This was discovered as a result of an inquiry into difficulties which silk weavers encountered in producing a material of a uniform color. Differences in shade appeared in pieces of goods that were proved not to be the fault of the dying process. The cause has been a mystery. Research work was started in the laboratories of the United States Testing company at Hoboken and as a result it was found that the fault is due to the personal idiosyncrasies of the silk worm, asserts a writer in the New York Herald Tribune.

Some of the silk worms eject a thread that is broad and flat and others a thread that is more nearly circular. The round threads vary in diameter. If a variety of the threads are put into the same dying vat they come out different colors. The broad flat threads take a darker shade than the circular threads and among the round threads, the ones of larger diameter become darker than the ones of small diameter.

A study of fibers from three different breeds of silk worms each raised in six sections in Japan from the northernmost to the southernmost latitudes, including spring and autumn crop, was made. It was found that the shape of the thread varied with the breed and within the same breed it varied with the latitude. The threads produced in the spring were larger.

Cape Breton Isle Dates Back to the 1500 Period

The island of Cape Briton in Nova Scotia was so named by Basque or Breton fishermen after a cape of the same name in their own country. On maps dating back as far as 1527, says a Sydney, Nova Scotia, writer, it was identified as C de Breton, and later, on other maps, as Terro de Breton and Cap au Bretons.

Cape Breton island is the oldest French name in American geography. Basque fishermen settled its shores first, but now, although there is a French settlement on the west coast, where the old tongue is still spoken, the island is predominantly a Highland Scotch district, thousands of Scotchmen having come there from the old country during the last two centuries.

In ancient times it was also known for a time as "Baccalos," Basque for codfish. The Mle Mac Indians knew it as "Conamaaglk," meaning "Home of the True Men," in the days when they ruled the island.

Intelligent, Smart

There is a world of difference between being smart and being intelligent. Not all intelligent persons are smart; that is, clever, capable, adept. Intelligence denotes merely the possesssion of an ability to exercise mentality, a readiness of comprehension, a capacity for thought. Smart denotes a dashing ability, by no means implied by intelligent, and now carries a suggestion of unscrupulousness, similar to that of sharp, which makes its use a doubtful compliment. A smart person may be intelligent, and an intelligent person may be smart. Possession of both qualities may lead to an extreme of shrewd unscrupulousness or to an extremely high mental capacity.—Literary Digest.

Armies That Crossed the Alps

The Alpine system covers nearly the whole of Switzerland, a great part of northern Italy, several departments of France and a large port of Austria. The historical passages of the Alps have been those by Alexander the Great, Julius Caesar, to attack the Helvetians; Hannibal, Napoleon, who crossed the Alps into Russia, only to find that the retreating Russians had left Moscow in ruins. The greater part of the French army died in recrossing the Alps into France.

Tung Oil Brought in Junks

Tung oil for paint, that is exported from China, must be brought down the Yangtze river in junks. These native boats must come through rocky gorges and shoot rapid after rapid. It is estimated that one out of every ten boats is lost on the trip to the mouth of the river. Consequently, when a junk makes a successful journey, the crew celebrates with fireworks as a tribute to the images of river gods which are carved on the stones on the banks.

Old War Pictures

Probably the largest collection of war pictures in the world is owned by the United States government. This library, in the custody of the War department, was started in 1861 by Matthew B. Brady, who obtained President Lincoln's permission to follow the armies and take pictures. The collection contains 7,200 pictures made by Brady, for which he received the then munificent sum of $25,000.

Quezon Inaugurated First President of Philippines—Co-Ordinator Berry Has Troubles—Reassurances for Business Men—Armistice Day Celebrations.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

SELF-GOVERNMENT became a reality for the Philippines on November 15, according to schedule, and it is now up to the islanders to utilize their independence wisely and safely, with only general supervision by the United States. In the presence of a great throng of distinguished persons in the magnificent legislature building at Manila, Manuel Quezon, veteran advocate of independence, was inaugurated as the first president of the commonwealth. Representing the United States were Vice President Garner, Speaker Byrns and a large party of senators and representatives with their wives. Many foreign governments sent unofficial observers, and the leading statesmen of the islands were present.

Manuel Quezon

After Quezon had taken the oath of office, Sergio Osmena, vice president, and the members of the new unicameral legislature were sworn in.

President Roosevelt was personally represented by Secretary of War Dern, who made a pleasant speech and read the proclamation, simultaneously issued in Washington, terminating the old government of the islands and establishing the commonwealth government which is to lead to complete independence of the archipelago in 10 years. A cablegram of congratulation also was received from Mr. Roosevelt.

Because of the danger of outbreaks by the extremist followers of Emilio Aguinaldo who have opposed Quezon, the constabulary was out in full force, thousands of its members being brought in from all over the archipelago.

The day before the inauguration the legislature held its final session and Frank Murphy, the last of the governors general, appeared before it to review the accomplishments of the American regime that lasted 36 years. "Having found democracy good for itself, America believes it will be good for the Filipinos," he said. Mr. Murphy was then sworn in as high commissioner of the new government.

The entire American delegation attended a grand reception and ball given by Mr. Quezon in honor of Mr. Murphy.

MAJ. GEORGE L. BERRY, industrial co-ordinator of the New Deal, is having a hard time co-ordinating industries. An industry-labor conference has been arranged for December 9 in Washington, but it is evident that some very considerable industries will not be represented. First, the Ford Motor company refused curtly to send a representative; then the Automobile Manufacturers' association objected to the affair, announcing its opposition to any revival of the NRA, though most of its members signed the old NRA code; and next came a sharp letter from the National Hardwood Lumber association, one of the country's oldest and largest trade associations, flatly refusing to attend the conference. The letter, written by J. W. McClure of Chicago, secretary of the association's board of directors, labeled any attempt to impose a new NRA on industry as "impractical, unworkable, unenforceable, a menace to respect for all laws and therefore opposed to public interest."

George L. Berry

Nevertheless, the conference will be held, and representatives of labor are expected to advocate a plan for licensing industry, a proposal that all government contractors comply with code provisions and the 30-hour week.

IF SECRETARY ROPER in addressing the Associated Grocery Manufacturers of America in New York was speaking with authoritative knowledge of the intentions of the administration, business may feel considerably reassured. He said "the breathing spell which we are now enjoying is to be the end of governmental regimentation." He declared business was the "scapegoat" of the depression and he upheld the profit system. Of Mr. Roosevelt's announcement of a "breathing spell," the secretary said:

"This declaration of the President is clear-cut and concrete. It means specifically that the basic program of reform has been completed. It means that business no longer needs to feel any uncertainty as to what may come in the future with respect to governmental measures."

According to a Washington dispatch in the New York Times, informal orders have been issued by President Roosevelt to administrative officials to cut federal expenditures under the 1937 budget to $500,000,000 less than the newly estimated total for 1936.

As a result, the dispatch says, the lives of many federal bureaus and agencies were reported to be hanging in the balance.

THAT story, originating with the Deseret News of Salt Lake City, that George Norris had said he would not seek re-election to the senate from Nebraska, seems to have been at least premature. The veteran senator says he will make his decision at election time next year, and not earlier.

"A campaign would be a small disturbance, compared to the trouble my not being a candidate has cost me," he said in Los Angeles. "I have received hundreds of letters from all parts of the United States urging me to run next year."

ARMISTICE DAY was celebrated in the United States more generally and elaborately than it had been since the first of those occasions seventeen years ago. Chief of all the ceremonies, naturally, was that at Arlington National cemetery in Washington, where many thousands gathered to hear an address by President Roosevelt. Standing before the tomb of the Unknown Soldier, the Chief Executive paid a brief but eloquent tribute to the gallantry of America's fighting men in the World war, set forth America's hopes and intentions for world peace, and announced the imminent signing of a trade treaty with Canada which Prime Minister King had been negotiating.

President Roosevelt

Then, at 11 o'clock he bared his head and stood silent for a minute, as did millions of his fellow citizens all over the land. The President next placed a wreath on the Unknown Soldier's tomb. For six hours, afterward, uniformed organizations marched up the hill in Arlington and laid their wreaths at the tomb.

The celebration in the national capital was culminated by a ball arranged by the Veterans of Foreign Wars. Congressional Medal of Honor men headed the list of guests, others being cabinet officers, diplomats and high officials of the army, navy and marine corps. Mrs. Woodrow Wilson was one of the guests.

BRITISHERS went to the polls in the seventh general election since the World war, to elect a new parliament. Counting and publishing the vote over there is a deliberate process, so at this writing the results are not known. But there was no doubt of the victory of the government forces, though probably they would lose a number of seats. Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin was unopposed. But the Laborites made a hot fight to defeat Ramsay MacDonald and several other members of the Baldwin cabinet.

Stanley Baldwin

The government, in its campaign, urged support of its League of Nations activities and its program of unemployment relief and stimulation of national trade.

Liberals and Laborites took issue with the Conservative candidates on national defense questions, with Labor candidates particularly insistent on disarmament and international control of war materials.

GOV. CLYDE L. HERRING of Iowa and Gov. Floyd Olson of Minnesota made a bet of one hog on the football game between the universities of their states. Herring lost, and paid by delivering a fat porker to Olson. That seemed all right, but Virgil Case, a vice crusader and editor of a DesMoines monthly paper, immediately swore out a state warrant for the arrest of Herring on charges of gambling, and said he would file federal charges against Olson.

Under Iowa statutes, gambling is a misdemeanor punishable by a maximum fine of $500 and a year in prison. The federal charge is a felony, Case said, punishable by a $5,000 fine and a prison sentence.

Neither governor appeared to be perturbed by the charges. Herring named Olson as his counsel, along with Senator Dan Steck of Iowa, who accompanied him to St. Paul to deliver the pig.

Brief Resume of Happenings of the Week Collected for Our Readers

Tacoma — Five of the 28 glaciers that cover Mount Rainier show an average recession of 57 feet for the last year. Nisqually glacier melted back 54 feet.

Pullman — Plans for a modern building to replace the old O. W. R. & N. depot at Pullman have been forwarded to the executive committee in New York for final approval.

Pasco — The Pasco Community Chest committee has abandoned a community chest for this year, leaving it to individual organizations to make separate drives for relief funds. Indifference on the part of many local people is the reason assigned.

Colville — A huge blue grouse flew through the plate glass window of the Minzell Motor company here and fell dead inside the garage. Lloyd Neil, county game warden, was inside and the bird fell at his feet. It is believed that the grouse was pursued by a hawk.

Olympia — The state supreme court has upheld the 1935 tax rebate law. The statute provides that persons paying delinquent taxes for prior years shall be allowed a 5 per cent. rebate if payment is made before November 30. The law applies to both principal and interest.

Grand Coulee Dam—The stream of cement destined to flow for four years here, with a possible average of 50 cars a day, has begun to come in, slowly, but with increasing volume. Two cars arrived one day, 14 the next, and more are expected each day to help fill the 85,000-barrel silos at the top of the hill.

Yakima — Ranchers of the Tieton Water Users' association, growers on the Tieto division of the Yakima reclamation project, today voted to purchase 30,000 feet additional of storage water at a cost of $180,000 and recommended an effort to organize a Yakima power district. The users decided to postpone for a year efforts to close a contract with the reclamation service for taking over the project.

Kennewick — It is estimated that 210,000 pounds of turkeys will be shipped from the vicinity of Kennewick during the approaching holiday season. At the present price of 24 cents per pound, the crop will bring about $50,000. Last year's price at this season was 16 cents per pound. That the price will not go lower is indicated by the shortage of birds in the middle west and south. Many growers are predicting a rise.

Toppenish — Sugar beet growers will receive $4.25 a ton as the first payment on the 1935 crop, H. C. Rosenfelt, valley manager for the Utah-Idaho Sugar company, said. The amount is 15 cents a ton less than the first payment last year. Additional payments based on the price and volume of sugar sold in the next 11 months will be made later, he said. The crop this year was 21,000 tons, he said, estimating the shrinkage due to the freeze at 1000 tons.

Walla Walla — Strong opposition to that portion of the AAA wheat control contract which prevents farmers from using summer fallow to produce peas, was voiced by directors of the county farm bureau. "This section is contrary to the government's erosion control program and is contrary to any program of progress. We are sending in a vigorous protest to George E. Farrell, head of the wheat section of the AAA," declared Charles Baker, bureau secretary.

12 Walnut Trees Give $300 Return

Pasco — Nagel Bros. reported the harvest of a ton of English walnuts from 12 trees at a return of $300. The trees occupy no more than a sixth of an acre. They sold the nuts at 15 cents a pound in Pasco.

Wheat Three-Fifths Sold

Pasco — About 60 per cent of the wheat grown in Franklin county has been sold, it was stated at the county extension office here. The remaining 40 per cent. is being held for seed and a later market. The crop this year is estimated at 1,200,000 bushels, much of which is premium wheat.

Wheat Price Booms Deposits

Wilbur — Bank deposits here have taken a most encouraging upward trend, making a big jump in the last four months. The total increased from $444,296 last June to $730,022 November 1. Loans and discounts decreased $41,000 and the total resources of the bank increased from $511,046 to $804,355. The higher price of wheat and consequent heavy sales were credited for the situation.

Fascinating Tales of Lost Mines

VALLAGRANA LEDGE

DON TOMAS AGUILA was the richest man in Monterey. Surely he had no need for more, but such is wealth that no one ever thinks he has enough. Don Tomas, certainly, felt that he would like to add to his riches. There was a silver mine in Lower California—the Vallagrana — which brought forth enormous quantities of the pale metal. Don Tomas wished to own a part of this mine—a third would do—and he would pay $150,000 for the privilege. But why should its owners part with a third of their wealth? Alas, no, senor, it could not be!

To whom the Don made his offer is slightly obscure. The Vallagrana was an Indian mine, owned and worked by the natives of Baja, Calif.

The mine was real—there is no doubt of that. It takes its name from the Mexican governor of Lower California, who, due to one of those political tempests which have flurried ever so often over Mexico, was forced to flee in 1860 to La Paz. On the way, Vallagrana and his followers took refuge for a time in an Indian camp.

The governor evidently had a manner of making friends. Before he left the hospitable Indians they had showed their guests the wonderful ledge of silver which was their treasure. Wonderful it certainly was, for the outcrop could be traced for over 1,800 feet, and was over 25 feet wide at the surface!

After promising absolute secrecy, the governor and his party were given seven specimens of the ore for souvenirs, and later they departed for La Paz. Various vicissitudes befell them, then, and a year later only one man still had a piece of ore. At last he had it assayed. It ran 3,900 ounces of silver to the ton!

The prospect of obtaining more of this precious ore overcame the memory of promises made. Vallagrana told, then, what had happened, and in July of 1863 he and five other men landed in La Paz on their way back to the wonderful ledge.

But Indians had strict codes of justice. After the former governor and his men left La Pas they were never seen or heard of again.

Every year since 1863 there have been others who hoped to find the ledge of silver.

UNPROFITABLE MURDER

AN OLD Uintah Indian told Pete Madison, prospector-at-large, a story of gold. There were two miners, the tribesman said, who spent the winter in the Pat's Hole section of Moffat county, Colorado. They worked all winter, in spite of storms, and at last collected about 25 pounds of gold.

Finally they ran out of provisions. It would seem pleasant to see other people again, a sort of vacation after the long, tiresome winter, so the two left their camp and started west toward a settlement where they expected to buy supplies.

In the early days of the West, "bad men" seemed to be hidden in the most unexpected places. A band of such outlaws appeared after the two miners had crossed the Utah line, and they found that they must fight for their lives.

There was a ledge back of them; they stood against this and defended themselves as best they could against the desperadoes.

It was an uneven battle. One miner went down; the other tried to fight his way through but a bullet stopped him.

Much to the chagrin of the outlaws, the miners had only enough gold with them to pay for their supplies and a modest spree. It had been scarcely worth while killing them for this. And now the point arose that if these bodies should be discovered, posses would certainly trail down the murderers.

The only thing to do was to conceal the corpses where they lay. Accordingly, the outlaws pried off the face of the ledge so that fallen rocks and dirt covered the two dead men, and hurried away from the scene.

This was the story that the old Uintah Indian told Pete Madison, and Pete, a characteristic chaser of golden phantoms, made up his mind to hunt out the mine. He went as far as the ranch of Harry Chew, an old-timer in that region, and here he found substantiation to the story and the fight: Years before, while Chew was exploring a steep cliff in Pool canyon, Utah, he found a human skull, exposed by erosion, at the foot of a ledge. Curious to know what lay out of sight, he dug around and uncovered two bodies—evidently those of the two unfortunate miners.

Beyond this neither man was able to trace. The mine remains hidden among the hills, perhaps concealed by fallen trees or rock slides, and the lucky discoverer has not yet come along.

Thrice the Slaves in World as Century Ago

The world may be improving in some ways but in regards to human bondage it is growing steadily worse, according to figures gathered by Lady Simon, wife of Britain's foreign minister. There are three times as many slaves in the world today she says, as there was 100 years ago (not counting those in the United States).

Slave trading is carried on openly in most of the larger cities of Arabia and a slave market adjoins the Great Mosque of Mecca. Oddly enough, Liberia, which at one time was a refuge for escaped and liberated slaves of the United States, has nearly 800,000 slaves numbered among its 2,500,000 population. Slavery still exists in many parts of Ethiopia, many parts of China and northern Africa.

IT WORKED FOR ME

Women should take only liquid laxatives

MORE people could feel fine, be fit and regular, if they would only follow the rule of doctors and hospitals in relieving constipation.

Never take any laxative that is harsh in action. Or one, the dose of which can't be exactly measured. Doctors know the danger if this rule is violated. They use liquid laxatives, and keep reducing the dose until the bowels need no help at all.

Reduced dosage is the secret of aiding Nature in restoring regularity. You must use a little less laxative each time, and that's why it should be a liquid like Syrup Pepsin.

Ask your druggist for a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and if it doesn't give you absolute relief, if it isn't a joy and comfort in the way it overcomes biliousness due to constipation, your money back.

Beware Coughs from common colds That Hang On

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your cough, chest cold or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with anything less than Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble to aid nature to soothe and heal the inflamed membranes as the germ-laden phlegm is loosened and expelled.

Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, your druggist is authorized to guarantee Creomulsion and to refund your money if you are not satisfied with results from the very first bottle. Get Creomulsion right now. (Adv.)

CONSTIPATED 30 YEARS

"For thirty years I had chronic constipation. Sometimes I did not go for four or five days. I also had awful gas bloating, headaches and pain in the back. Adlerika helped right away. Now I eat sausage, bananas, pie, anything I want and never felt better. I sleep soundly all night and enjoy life."—Mrs. Mabel Schott.

If you are suffering from constipation, sleeplessness, sour stomach, and gas bloating, there is quick relief for you in Adlerika. Many report action in 30 minutes after taking just one dose. Adlerika gives complete action, cleaning your bowel tract where ordinary laxatives do not even reach.

Dr. H. L. Shoub, New York, reports: "In addition to intestinal cleansing, Adlerika checks the growth of intestinal bacteria and colon bacilli."

Give your stomach and bowels a real cleansing with Adlerika and see how good you feel. Just one spoonful relieves GAS and chronic constipation. Sold by all druggists and drug departments.

Real Learning

It's what we learn after we think we know it all that counts.

What SHE TOLD WORN-OUT HUSBAND

She could have reproached him for his fits of temper—his "all in" complaints. But wisely she saw in his frequent colds, his "fagged out," "on edge" condition the very trouble she herself had whipped. Constipation! To Bake a Meringue Properly

Meringues are usually spoiled in the baking even when they are properly prepared. The meringue should bake slowly. Too hot an oven sears the outside and leaves the rest uncooked. The entire meringue should dry out first and then brown. Bake it in an oven of 300 degrees Fahrenheit for from 15 to 30 minutes.

Bee in His Mouth

A boy about ten years rushed into the Annapolis (Md.) Emergency hospital and stuck out a badly swollen tongue. Doctors and nurses tried to find out what was the matter, as he fidgeted and mumbled with pain. Ice reduced the swelling and then he explained. While he was eating, a bee flew in his mouth and stung him. He didn't feel like talking and soon left.

A Law Every Mother Should Know and Observe

Never Give Your Child An Unknown Remedy without Asking Your Doctor First

According to any doctor you ask, the only safe way is never to give your child a remedy you don't know all about, without asking him first.

When it comes to "milk of magnesia," that you know everywhere, for over 60 years, doctors have said "PHILLIPS' Milk of Magnesia for your child."

So—always say Phillips' when you buy. And, for your own peace of mind, see that your child gets this; the finest men know.

Safety for You and Yours
You can assist others by refusing to accept a substitute for the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. Do this in the interest of yourself and your children—and in the interest of the public in general.

Rid Yourself of Kidney Poisons

DO you suffer burning, scanty or too frequent urination, backache, headache, dizziness, loss of energy, leg pains, swellings and puffiness under the eyes? Are you tired, nervous—feel all unstrung and don't know what is wrong?

Then give some thought to your kidneys. Be sure they function properly for functional kidney disorder permits excess waste to stay in the blood, and to poison and upset the whole system.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are for the kidneys only. They are recommended the world over. You can get the genuine, time-tested Doan's at any drug store.

Here's Hoping, Kid, You Are One of Brave Dark Horses

HE IS a freckle-faced young man whose legs always seem several inches too much for his first long trousers. Ordinarily I see him busily engaged in proving that, given an unguarded lot and a few kindred souls, the average American boy can make scant work of those theorists who claim that baseball no longer is the great national game. This night, though, he was standing on the corner watching.

"What's the matter, Kid?" I asked him. "Sick or something?"

He hesitated while a deeper red united all the freckles. "Naw," he said, stuffing at the shirt that never seems to make proper contact with the top of those first long trousers. "They—aw—well, you see we got a football team now and—they—well—aw—"

Since the story is painful it may be passed over quickly. The young man is an individualist as well as a citizen of considerable daring, imagination and ambition. So he had been inventing some new plays and trying them out on his own because—"Aw, well, you know they got a better team than we have because they're bigger and some of 'em work and—."

Again let us skip the woe. Probably the plays were very good ones but, as his teammates pointed out before sending him to the sidelines, they were not working. In an important contest such as the one that night you could not blame them for this because—"Well, maybe he oughtn't to have tried that lateral but those other birds were so much bigger that he thought—Well, if he could just get another chance he'd show them that he—."

Can't Dim This Lad's Confidence

Just then there was an insistent yelling from across the street where a badly scuffled, poorly inflated thing that seemed to be a football was being given a moment's rest. There was only a minute or two more to go and if those bigger fellows were to be defeated there was dire need for the services of a young man who is an individualist as well as a citizen of considerable daring, imagination and ambition. So the captain was calling and—.

I did not have time to wait. Somehow when you write pieces for the paper you seldom have time for anything except attending stuffy dinners in the evenings. But—

There was slim Francis Ouimet. Only a caddy scant months previously, he surged with patriotic fervor when he met the mighty Vardon and the mightier Ray in the national open in 1912. He won the playoff and a golfing miracle was recorded.

Ouimet.

In 1912 an unknown pace-setter summoned new strength, refused to quit when a more favored teammate faltered, and Ted Meredith raced on to fame in the Olympics.

They said Molla Mallory was through in 1921. She walked onto the court one afternoon late in summer. When she walked off Suzanne Lenglen, winner of three straight Wimbledon titles, had been defeated in the United States woman's national tennis championships. Bronzed giants came out of the West in 1923 and Washington upset a rowing dynasty.

Even the most loyal fans knew that the Giants were doomed to a miserable second division existence in 1933. They took command at the start and remained triumphant to the finish, even to the finish of the World Series.

In 1913 a proud Army eleven scheduled a practice game with a team from "a little school some place out West." Dorais passed to Rockne, Eichenlaub hit the line and Notre Dame was launched as a gridiron power.

They were dark horses, Americans who came through when the odds and the world's beliefs were long against them. I am sorry that I missed seeing you, Kid. But I hope that you made it, too. Despite the talk they do "come back."

IT PERHAPS is not entirely true that if Mr. Arthur Brisbane ever took a gander at Tony Galento, the best gorilla investors could get from then on would be even money. Yet, since each mail brings evidence that other gifted, if not so well informed, writers are vastly impressed, with what the squat, hairy Tony might do if the Hearst press should slip him a more reasonable assignment, his talents will be discoursed upon today.

Definitely, a considerabe portion of the literate metropolitan populace seems overcome by an irresistible yen to see the Newark Nightstick swinging against Joe Louis for the greater glory of Mike Jacobs and the financial benefit of the Christmas Basket fund. So because a show is promised for December and the stamp buyers should have fair opportunity to hoard those pennies which can be exchanged for ringside seats, there has been some wonder as to why the subject goes into a St. Vitus dance each time it is touched upon.

Galento, once the most eminent of New Jersey's far famed and efficient galaxy of speakeasy bouncers, is a round-headed, beady-eyed young man who probably would be doing Mussolini a lot of good right now if he had not had the luck to be born in Orange.

Plainly—as even those partisans who suffered so acutely during his recent strivings against Willie McGee—he is not a boxer. Aside from some slight concession to form in the matter of sticking a plump left arm out in front of him, his scorn for those niceties introduced by the Marquis of Queensbury is as evident as is that desire of better celebrated heavyweights to avoid him.

Joe Louis.

Such disregard of the finer phases of the manly art of self-defense should long ago have caused him to go into discard along with those other fifth-rate performers who so frequently have outpointed him. That, instead, he now has become a town topic must be because he is a man with a mission in life and a pride in his work.

Whether this mission is to become such a source of embarrassment to Joe Louis as the similarly roly poly Willie Meehan once was to Jack Dempsey is something that need not be unduly discussed here. What is more important is the pride Mr. Galento takes in beating par in the matter of belting out any designated opponent.

This is a work at which he moves with real zest and with a pretty disdain for the punches that may meanwhile be bouncing off his own ironclad jaw. While toddling around the ring, right arm almost on a level with his own bent knee, there is something almost wistful about him. He seems to be a guy who would willingly be put to bed without supper if an opponent would just—.

Tony's Big Right Makes Fans Happy

Here the opponent, perhaps overtired from piling up points, relaxes for a sympathetic moment. There is a scant opening. The Newark Nightstick is leveled upon a defenseless lug.

Mr. Galento puffs, dabs daintily at the beads of sweat upon his chest and then glances at the victim squirming upon the canvas. Sometimes then there is a disdainful gleam in his eyes but it is not for the weakness of this victim who, a moment ago, was doing so well. Rather Mr. Galento is ribbing his own right hand, telling it that it ought to be ashamed of itself having to take two swishes before it could convince a mere 230-pounder such as Young Hippo to stay tagged.

It is at such moments that Mr. Galento and his audience are happiest. Perhaps his delicate pinkies have not yet been planted under enough jaws to merit such intimate esteem as caused an entire nation to hail Frank Moran's maulie as Mary Ann. Yet, for all that there may be people who love and honor him for other more enduring qualities, it is only because he has that right hand that Mr. Galento can charm an audience into paying real money for the chance of being happy.

Therein also is the reason—far more than any prejudice against the rights of the foreign born Schmelings, Neusels and Paulinos to take satchels full of gold out of this country — why the audience seems to crave him as Louis' next opponent.

Probably the fight would be a very bad one. Louis, the best boxer among the heavyweights of the day, should outpoint him with ease. Possibly Louis, who hits almost as hard as Detroit's other idol, Hank Greenberg, might also knock him out. Yet, even though the League of Nations might persuade Ethiopia and Italy to revert to the ancient custom of settling their own mass troubles by this one test, it is rather evident that it is a fight that never will take place.

Grandfather Bensen's Will

By RUTH ASTON

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

JEROME HATHAWAY BENSEN set his coffee cup on the tray with a bang, leaned back against his pillow and beamed at his manservant.

"Graves, I believe I've got it!"

"Have what, sir?" inquired Graves uneasily. He was an apologetic little man who stood in painful awe of his heavy jowled, white haired employer.

The old man's eyes were bright with elation. "Graves, call up my granddaughter and tell her I'm dying."

The servant trembled violently.

"Stop shaking that tray!" boomed Mr. Bensen. "What's the matter with you, anyway?"

Graves set down the tray and wiped his pale forehead. "But you said you were dying, Mr. Bensen!"

"I said nothing of the kind!" roared Grandfather Bensen. "I said to call my granddaughter and tell her I'm dying. Now do you grasp the difference?"

"Yes, sir," admitted Graves in a relieved tone.

"This is my idea," continued the white haired man. "Some day I'm going to die. Not soon," he growled, looking at Graves sharply, "but some day. And when I die, I'm going to leave a large fortune. A very large fortune." He eyes Graves as though he dared him to deny this. "And my granddaughter, Betty Bensen, is my only heir."

He sighed deeply. "To think that I, Jerome Hathaway Bensen, should have only one heir, and that a scatter-brained young girl."

"Is she scatterbrained?" inquired Graves sympathetically.

"I don't know," admitted Mr. Bensen. "But I soon will. And if she turns out to be one of these cigarette smoking young moderns with no respect for their elders, I'll leave my money to some worthy charity. I'll not have the hard earned Bensen millions scattered to the winds by a silly chit of a girl. Tell her to come here, Graves. Say I'm dying. And when she gets here, tell her I'm dead, and bring her in to see me. Then explain about the will and ask her how she plans to use the money. Suggest that she use some of it for a memorial hospital, and we'll see what she says."

An hour or so later Grandfather Bensen heard the doorbell ring. Grandfather wondered if the girl would cry. Then a soft voice said, "He doesn't look much worse than when he was alive, does he?"

"He hasn't been dead very long," explained Graves.

"That's so. I suppose he'll look deader in his coffin. My, he looks awful cross, even now. He always was like that. He never liked my mother, and when Daddy died, grandfather stopped coming to see us. And whenever mother and I would call on him, you'd say he was out. And we could see him peeking at us from behind the curtain."

Graves cleared his throat importantly. "Nevertheless, he's left all his fortune to you!" he announced.

"Oh, surely not!" cried Betty.

"Mother always said the old codger would probably disinherit me!"

"His last wish," continued Graves, "was for you to erect a memorial hospital."

Betty chuckled. "Now isn't that just like him? I suppose he wanted a neon sign on the roof, Jerome Hathaway Bensen Memorial in letter two feet high."

"But," inquired Graves in a shocked tone, "surely you will engage in some noble enterprise, with all that wealth?"

Betty laughed roundly. "Noble enterprise?" She paused. "I shall engage in the noble enterprise of having a good time. Of buying scads of new dresses and a long, jade cigarette holder!"

"If you'll parden me, miss," said Graves, "I believe he made some stipultaion in the will that you were to use a part of the money for some charitable work."

"Why, the mean old thing!" cried Betty. "Why didn't he do the charitable work himself before he died? I don't mind building him a hospital, but I think it was horrid of him to tie strings to his old will. And just like him!" she added furiously.

It was too much for Grandfather Bensen. Flushing to the roots of his white hair, he sat up in bed and pointed a trembling finger at Betty. "Young lady, for that you sha'n't get a cent! You're a vain, frivolous girl who thinks of nothing but having a good time."

"I don't care!" snapped Betty, eyes flashing. "I didn't want your old money in the first place. I wouldn't take it if you begged me to." She flung out of the room, then turned back suddenly. "And you needn't think you fooled me with your trick of playing dead, grandfather. Dead men don't frown!"

Mr. Bensen's jaw dropped in astonishment as Betty left the room. Gradually the indignation in the old man's eyes gave way to gentle wonder.

"Graves! Did you hear that? She knew I wasn't dead, yet she wouldn't try to impress me." He paused, then added proudly, "She's a great girl, Graves. A chip off the old block!"

Sculptor Loses Fortune and Bemoans His Fate

A talented young sculptor was the last to arrive at the party. He seemed gloomy and dejected and the smile was missing from his usually cheerful countenance. As he seated himself beside the Woman she found it unnecessary to ask the cause for his dejection, for he immediately informed her ruefully, "I lost $2,500 today."

The Woman was surprised. Although he is a talented young man he has not yet reached the stage in his career where he can turn his talent into a means of livelihood. He has difficulty selling his work and the woman never would have suspected that he owned so much money. She said nothing and he continued, "I'm so mad at myself. It's all my own fault, too."

Her curiosity prompted her to put the question for which he was waiting. "What happened?" she asked.

He seemed glad to unburden his troubled soul. "I wanted to bet on the horse that came in first today and if I had, I'd have won $2,500. But I didn't have the $12 to put on him—darn it. I'm as mad as hops at myself—all that money lost."—New York Sun.

Nature Story

The fig tree from his native Italy which Frank Ardizzone of Moberly, Mo., tended 41 years is dead. Dead also are the parsley bed, the grapevines and shrubs he allowed no one else to tend. Neighbors reported they withered after Ardizzone died on the eve of his seventy-fourth birthday. Every effort to revive them failed, although the surrounding garden flourished.

Eavesdropping on the "Monticello Party Line"

"The Monticello Party Line" is a radio program recently begun on a series of middle-western and southern radio stations. The radio listener is asked to imagine that he is eavesdropping on the party line of Monticello—and in this way he daily hears all the activity, the gossip, the fun, and the occasional trouble, that marks life in Monticello.

All the people in this program are thoroughly natural, everyday folks. The setting is that of a real town—Monticello, Illinois—the home-town of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, the product that sponsors this new and different radio show. "The Monticello Party Line" is broadcast every week-day except Saturday.—Adv.

Do You Ever Wonder

Whether the "Pain" Remedy You Use is SAFE?

Ask Your Doctor and Find Out

Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's Well-Being to Unknown Preparations

THE person to ask whether the preparation you or your family are taking for the relief of headaches is SAFE to use regularly is your family doctor. Ask him particularly about Genuine BAYER ASPIRIN.

He will tell you that before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin most "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as bad for the stomach and, often, for the heart. Which is food for thought if you seek quick, safe relief.

Scientists rate Bayer Aspirin among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and the pains of rheumatism, neuritis and neuralgia. And the experience of millions of users has proved it safe for the average person to use regularly. In your own interest remember this.

You can get Genuine Bayer Aspirin at any drug store — simply by asking for it by its full name, BAYER ASPIRIN. Make it a point to do this — and see that you get what you want.

Odors of Many Blossoms Are Far From Agreeable

Throughout the ages, scents have exercised a fascination over mankind. In far-off days, says Tit-Bits Magazine, incense and frankincense were used in the temples of most religious orders. On a granite tablet at the base of the Sphinx there is still to be seen a representation of King Thothmes IV burning incense as an offering. It was the custom to prescribe certain perfumes in cases of illness. The smell of white violets was said to be good for the digestion, while a perfume made from vine leaves was supposed to keep the mind clear.

Scent-making methods today do not differ greatly from those employed long before history was written. Everyday flowers still form the basis of all really good scents, although synthetic preparations are sometimes used in cheap varieties. There are 4,300 varieties of flowers grown in Europe, of which only 400 possess any agreeable smell. More than 3,500 types of blooms are disagreeable in odor.

"Junior" and "Third"

According to writers on etiquette, "Junior" or "Jr." always means the son or grandson of a man of exactly the same name: "Second" or "2nd," means the nephew or cousin of a man of the same name; "Third" or "3rd," is the son of a "Junior" of exactly the same name. It is improper for a man to continue to add "Junior" to his name after the death of his senior, or to add "Third" to his name if either or both of his seniors are dead.

Robins Winter in U. S.

Robins winter in the southern states and in northern Mexico. They are to be seen in flocks in winter through in the Gulf states, and are often killed in great numbers there, as they are in very good condition in the winter season. The migratory instinct is not so strong in this bird as in some others, and it often remains in sheltered places all winter. Its attachment to familiar spots is very strong.

Quicksand Doesn't Pull

It is commonly believed that a person trapped in quicksand is sucked downward to his doom. However, there is no force other than gravity and his own efforts to escape that cause him to sink and suffocate. When any one caught in quicksand tries to pull his leg out the movement is hindered by a suction produced by the pulling and which forces the other leg to sink deeper.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Rabies, Unlike Running Fits, Not Sudden Attack

The rabid dog is not generally convulsed. Rabies, unlike running fits, does not come on suddenly, but gradually develops over a period of a week or ten days of abnormal actions which finally evolve into either the furious or dumb form of the disease, advises a writer in the Los Angeles Times.

Rabies sets in with a variety of peculiar manifestations, in brief, those expressive of anxiety mingled with fear. The dog appears in a troubled state of mind and usually appeals for sympathy. He is prone to become more affectionate and to excessively lap the hands of his attendants. He wants more petting to appease his distress. Restlessness is a marked early symptom as is also the fact that he is easily startled. He continually paces about, except for an occasional pause. Refusing food, he shows a marked depraved appetite for inedible substances such as sticks and stones, or he may chew his bedding.

It is often noted that a rabid dog will continually lap woodwork about the house, such as floors and furniture. Thirst is decidedly increased, but the dog does not swallow very much of the water. This is becaue he cannot swallow as his throat is becoming paralyzed, a condition which will shortly be followed by paralysis of the jaw, causing it to drop and the mouth to remain open.

Governor's Porto Rico Palace Next to Oldest

La Forteleza, the Governor's Palace, is next to the oldest house in Porto Rico. Its huge towers and connecting galleries were completed before 1540. Its treasure vaults extend below the sea and here were stored, until they could be shipped to Spain, the cargoes of gold and silver gathered from Mexico and South America in the early days of Spanish occupation.

Historic frescoes, fine mirrors and rare stained glass adorn the Governor's Palace; doors, screens and other parts of native wood are rich with the patina of age. The large room extending across the entire front of the palace was known as the "throne room" under Spanish rule, because here were held audiences with the governor general, the direct representative of the Spanish throne.

Beyond the Governor's Palace looms the great cathedral, the burial place of Ponce de Leon, founder of San Juan. Near by is Casa Blanco, built by his children, and said to be the oldest continuously inhabited house in North America.—New York Times.

Quotation Not in Bible

"God helps those who help themselves." This quotation does not appear in the Bible. It is an old proverb that was first expressed in those words by Algernon Sidney in the Seventeenth century in "Discourses Concerning Government." It is also found in Benjamin Franklin's "Poor Richard's Almanack for 1733," as "God helps him who helps himself," and is later found in the same almanac for 1757, as "God helps them that help themselves." In George Herbert's collection of proverbs entitled Jacula Prurentum, it is found as "Help thyself, and God will help thee." A similar idea was expressed by Cervantes in "Don Quixote," and by LaFontaine in his fables. Even some of the ancient Greek writers of the Fifth century before the Christian era, hinted at the proverb in "Persae" Aeschylus wrote: "To the man who himself strives earnestly, God also lends a helping hand."

Ruler's Residence

Among the rulers' palaces with distinctive names are included the Vatican, or residence of the pope; the Quirinal or residence of the king of Italy; the Escorial of the former ruler of Spain; the Elysee, residence of the President of France; the Kremlin of the former rulers of Russia; the Marble palace of Potsdam of the former German rulers; St. James', official residence of the British ruler. Titles of the world's rulers include Presdents, kings, queens, princes, emperors, sultans, shahs, czars, maharajas, regents, dictators (including Fuhrer), grand duchess, emir, bey.

Reason for Jack Horner Story

Horner was the messenger whom the abbot of Glastonbury sent to Henry VIII with the deeds of certain manors involved in the dissolution of monasteries. Horner obsequiously handed the parcel to the royal spoilator, but first of all managed to abstract the deeds of the manor of Wells, a "plum," indeed, and the abbot was afterward punished on the charge that he had withheld them.
