FORKS RAINDROPS

FRANCES ETCHISON

People are interesting subjects of conservation, and all of us talk about other people—some much more than others. This is good, perhaps, if we are sympathetic and say good things about our neighbors and fellow men. Some of us are inclined to gossip about practically anyone and spread all sorts of tales. This can and does cause untold harm in every community.

The Forks Grocery is doing some extensive remodeling. New fixtures, new refrigeration, lots of paint and additional floor space. Grand opening will be soon.

Television viewers who were observing the "Wide World of Sports" last Saturday afternoon, enjoyed watching "Hay" Johnson of Forks, retain his world championship as high climber, at the Lumberjack howl in Hayward, Wisconsin.

Golden Buck—Ed Burr was successful on the last day of deer season in the area of the river in an effort to find Mr. Meister, when he emerged from the brush at Campbell's gravel pit, cold, hungry and tired.

Late Monday afternoon Charles Miller of Forks was preparing to drift the river in an effort to find Mr. Meister, when he emerged from the brush at Campbell's gravel pit, cold, hungry and tired.

Other three hunters came out of the timber opposite the Dave Mansfield home on the Bogachie Sunday night and Monday. Tracks were found along the Bogachie River near the Rayonier steel bridge.

Seen on the Pay & Save parking lot a point elk and a moose on the river in an effort to find Mr. Meister, when he emerged from the brush at Campbell's gravel pit, cold, hungry and tired.

It is reported that Carol Kinley brought in a beauty, 1 point from the Nolan Creek area. All 1 have seen after three days of hunting in the woods is one large roly-poly doe.

Charles Dresen, manager of the Ballard City Light office in Seattle, spent a long four day weekend with his family in the area of the river in an effort to find Mr. Meister, when he emerged from the brush at Campbell's gravel pit, cold, hungry and tired.

Weekend Hunting Reports...

Hunters in nearly all areas of the state experienced rough weather this weekend, and the indirect effect was a reduced harvest of game according to field checks taken by State Game Department personnel.

Most attention was centered on bull elk as the season opened in western Washington and saw the second weekend of bull hunting on the west side. Elk hunters found snow, rain, fog, and ice hampering their hunts.

Weather conditions were such that even some of the web-footed western Washington hunters broke camp early and headed for home. Most major elk areas reported hunters sticking to their cars with hunter harvest lessened.

Coastal and Peninsula county elk hunters managed to beat the odds, and had what was probably the best elk hunting in the state this weekend. Some spots—such as the Humptulips—were slow. The Willamette provided much better success.

Better yet were Clallam County hunters who were able to take 150 hunters with 22 elk. In the Hoh area of Jefferson County, things were very slow. In the Mt. Rainier area, hunters were able to take 11 elk for a very high success rate.

With hunting pressure normal and below that of last year in coastal and peninsula counties, field personnel of the Game Department checked 316 bulls compared to 306 checked during the 1960 opening.

Southwest elk areas were very good, report northwest Washington hunters. 16 successful bull hunters were checked on the South Fork of the Nooksack over the weekend.

South Puget Sound elk hunters turned out in normal numbers over the weekend and harvest was up over last year. 23 elk were checked by State Game Department in the Mt. Rainier area, 23 also in the McDonald area, 10 from Packwood region with many jack-in hunters.

Harvest from one of the relatively unspoiled elk areas of Washington was good, report northwest Washington hunters. 16 successful bull hunters were checked on the South Fork of the Nooksack over the weekend.

South Puget Sound elk hunters turned out in normal numbers over the weekend and harvest was up over last year. 23 elk were checked by State Game Department in the Mt. Rainier area, 23 also in the McDonald area, 10 from Packwood region with many jack-in hunters.

Washington State welcomes the emerging industrial expansion now being experienced and looks forward to the personal and corporate demonstration of the regular, properly it will bring about. Enlightened labor, management, and government leaders seek ways and means to assimilate this growth without harvesting the unwelcome by-products of accelerated growth. High on the list of unwelcome dividends would be a path of progress strewn with working men and women who could be maimed, crippled, or killed by industrial accidents that could have been prevented. The professional engaged in the science of accident prevention of the State of Washington are fully aware that the speed of expansion will require new and improved techniques in safety education to insure maximum industrial safety protection for our growing work force. Mechanical fall-safe protective devices are only one answer; the human mind, the attitude and awareness of the individual must be programmed to eliminate the human factor in error. An individual unaware of hazard, inattentive, or careless sets the stage for an industrial accident. Workable answers must be found to meet the challenge of the industrial complex now building in our midst. Now, therefore, I Daniel J. Evans, Governor of the State of Washington, do hereby call upon the people of the State of Washington to observe the week of November 17 through 19, 1966, INDUSTRIAL SAFETY WEEK and designate November 17 and 18 as the dates of the Governor's 17th Annual Industrial Safety Conference in the Capital City of Olympia.
