HART AND COYLE WELL IN THE LEAD IN REPUBLICAN PRIMARY

MORE THAN 130 ARE KILLED OR INJURED BY MYSTERIOUS BLAST

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—Thepolice reported at 5:30 o'clock this evening that it was definitely known that at least 19 persons had been killed outright and 97 injured, mostly by flying glass in the explosion in front of the Wall Street headquarters of J. P. Morgan & Co., at noon today.

The police say that a complete list of casualties probably would show at least ten more killed and at least a score more injured.

Allegations that radicals planned a renewal of the bomb war recently were sent to the W. J. Burns detective agency and according to a statement by Burns today, the explosion was deliberately planned and not an accident.

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—A mysterious explosion, disastrous in its effects, occurred today in Wall Street, killing more than a score of persons and injuring hundreds. Office workers were just hurrying into the street for the noonday meal when a jet of black smoke and flame rose from the center of the world's great street of finance. A reporter of the Associated Press, making his way down Wall Street from Broadway, suddenly saw go up in front of him a cone of flame from the center. Then came a blast and a moment later scores of men, women and children were lying blood-covered on the pavement.

Two minutes later nearly all the exchanges had closed, men had turned from barter to errands of mercy—and there was need of it.

While the police toiled for hours seeking the dead and injured, trained investigators were trying in vain to determine definitely whether the explosion had occurred from a bomb dropped in front of the office of J. P. Morgan & Co., or whether the colliding of an automobile into a wagon loaded with explosives had taken its toll. Frank Francisco, one of the most able investigators of the department of justice declared after arriving on the scene that it was his opinion that not a bomb plot but a collision had been responsible for the blast which tore fronts from buildings for blocks and scattered deadly missles all directions. The damage to the Morgan building alone is estimated at $500,000, while the damage to other buildings it was expected would total at least $500,000 more.

Treasury Guarded

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16.—Extra guards and other protective measures were thrown around the United States treasury building here this afternoon by the order of the secretary of the treasury pending difinite information as to whether the explosion in Wall Street today was accidental or part of a new red plot.

MARKETING PLAN OF FARM BUREAU IS ANNOUNCED

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16.—The American Farm Bureau Federation announced today the personnel of the committee of seventeen, appointed by President J. R. Howard to work out a plan for cooperative marketing of the American grain crop. Methods of cooperating grain elevator associations in the middle west and of the grain raisers of western Canada will be studied as well as the systems used in similar marketing enterprises by fruit growers and other producers, the federation said, estimating that it would require two years of preparation before a cooperative plan for the grain crop could be put in action.

"I desire emphatically to deny," said President Howard, "that any policy of plan involving price-fixing has been decided upon by the American Farm Bureau Federation or any committee appointed by it. We desire merely to evolve a marketing system which will eliminate useless handling costs, unnecessary selling expenses, ruinous price fluctuation due to market juggling and speculation, and to so coordinate supply and demand as to insure that on the one hand the producer receives the cost of production plus a reasonable and living profit and on the other hand the consumer gets an adequate and uninterrupted food supply at the least possible mark-up over actual costs."

SUMMER COLONY WATCHES BIG GUN PRACTICE

ROCKPORT, Mass., Sept. 16.—The bombardment of moving targets at sea from an artillery train on the Rockport branch of the Boston and Maine railroad furnished the summer colony of the Massachusetts North Shore with a novel spectacle and plenty of noise during the first days of this month.

Military experts were especially intersted in the demonstration as it was designed to show the feasibility of repelling an attack of war vessels by means of railroad artillery. At a distance of 13 mires from shore targets towed by a tug were a mark for the heavy guns of the Forty-Second Coast Artillery. The line towing the target was a mile or more in length and the batteries consisted of eight-inch guns, four to a battery mounted on specially constructed railroad cars. The guns which weighed 87 tons each carried projectiles weighing 200 pounds.

The entire artillery trains consisted of 34 cars . It was moved from Camp Devens in two sections and included cars for tools and ammunitions, a machine shop, a hospital, fire control, a kitchen, an office, mess, wireless and cars for the personnel.

Eghty-five per cent of all diamonds mined in all time have been produced since 1889.

GOVERNOR HART'S VICTORY

Notwithstanding the promise of early returns the rather spectacular campaign of Col. Roland Hartley for governor seems surely to have failed to land him the nomination and Governor Louis F. Hart will hold the fort. Gov. Hart admittedly had a great strategical advantage in his record in the office which is free from any highly controversial incident. The general sentiment appears to be that the governor has done pretty well in the past and that he is a safe and reliable anchor for the ship of state at this time.

The governor lacks the personal magnetism of his chief rival for the office but Col. Hartley was handicapped by his chief plank, which assured the hostility of organized labor. This is probably what lost him the nomination, even though his stand for the "open shop" in industry attracted the support of the employing interests. There are more labor votes than employers' votes.

The overwhelming victory of Senator Jones is another example of public endorsement of honest work. The senator antagonized a great many of his friends and supporters by his position early in the war but when he say his mistake he made ample amends and it was realized at the time that he had acted as he believed in the way that the majority of those he represented desired. His record is that of a good representative and an earnest worker for the welfare of his state and especially of the farmers and settlers. His reward is a great majority in the primary contest.

THE LAW AND SENTIMENT

Discussion on this side of the water of the self-imposed starving of Lord Mayor McSwiney of Cork in Brixton jail partakes always more from the sentimental than the practical side. That is one of the chief difficulties of the Irish situation. The English people are chiefly practical, and the Irish chiefly sentimental; hence they do not understand each other very well. To the English mind the behavior of Mr. McSwiney is evidence of obstinacy in a mistaken cause and also of plain folly. Also suicide is a crime in English law, as it is in the law of Christian churches, and Mr. McSwiney is thus regarded in England as twice an offender.

The practical side of the question is just this: if every man who elected to hunger strike in jail were to be freed, the punishment of criminals would become impossible. English law looks very unfavorably upon exceptions and distinctions. Premier Lloyd George went quite a long way when he offered to release McSwiney if the Sinn Feiners would undertake to quit killing policemen.

FALSE ELECTION NEWS

The Post-Intelligencer says: "Grossly misleading totals, without warrant in fact, were published by some afternoon papers, showing Hartley 6,000 in the lead" yesterday. The Herald, as usual had it right. The Associated Press is almost always right, because its methods of collecting news are far superior to any other agency.

The Girl Who Smiled Through

By MARION RUBINGAM

THE NEW INTEREST

Chapter 51

Alice felt she was not accomplishing all she wanted to by adopting the little waif. And yet she couldn't do otherwise. There was something in her that urged her to take the child, and the desire was stronger than her reason.

"Of course, she's going to be a care," Alice told her mother when they sat talking about the prospective adoption. "It's going to mean hours and hours every day devoted to looking after her. I'll have to learn how to take care of a baby, for one thing. Mrs. Godfrey gave me a splendid book written by the foremost doctor on children's health in the country."

"Of course, I can look after her for you," Mrs. Fairbanks offered anxious as always to give Alice her way. But the girl shook her head.

"No, you'll have a certain amount of care, of course, that can't be helped. But I'm going to do most of it."

So, in the course of a few weeks, the deserted baby arrived at its permanent home. Berenice, as Alice called her, adopting the foreign spelling of that attractive name, was really a pretty baby.

"Though goodness knows she was homely enough when I first met her," Alice remarked humorously to Clara when this chum called to see the new member of the family. "She was thin as a rail, and gray, and her hands had that dreadful appearance of bird claws that we see often in the babies in Shantytown."

"Is she much trouble?" Clara asker, holding out a finger awkwardly and watching the baby's hands curl around it.

"No, not much," Alice answered. "Of course, I'm pretty green at it. I've joined the Little Mother's classes Mrs. Godfrey has at the settlement house and you should see the number of things I'm learning to do.'

"You always were pretty efficient, I thought you must know most everything by this time," Clara answered smilingly. "Can I hold the baby?"

"No," Alice answered with an air of great wisdom. "The essence of knowledge in bringing up a baby is to let it alone. Berenice has her bath and her bottle and then she naps. If she needs care during the morning while I'm at the garden work at the settlement house, mother gives it to her--

"Oh, Clara," she broke off to laugh, "you should see mother and the baby! It's been years since she had one, of course, and she can't get used to new ways. Berenice has a bath at a certain temperature and I have a bath thermometer that floats in the tub to show when it's warm enough—Mrs. Marlowe gave it to Bernice as a present. Mother says she used to stick her elbow in the water, and if it didn't scald her, it wasn't too hot for me!"

She went on, telling the events of the new baby's day, bottles and naps, fresh air, more naps, loose clothing that left her legs free to kick, absence of all excitement and coddling, no rocking, no jumping up and down to bring out a crow of delight— and to bring on indigestion.

"Mrs. Marlowe had a doctor for her, and he has given the formula for preparing her milk," Alice went on, her tone unconsciously assuming that lofty air of great wisdom which all young mothers display.

Clara listened with interest and sometimes with amusement. This was a new Alice, this girl who held the tiny child in her arms, and caressed her so gently, who carried her upstairs to bed and who sat wit her head turned to one side to catch any possible sound that might show Berenice was wakeful.

"It's awfully funny," was Clara's way of telling her mother about it. "I used to think last year when David Thorne was so crazy over Alice, and they were to get married, that this summer I would be visiting them in the country and that Alice would have a baby, she always adored children so. And here she is with a baby sure enough, only a gypsy family had to come along and desert the child so Alice could show another side to her generous heart."

Clara had expressed it awkwardly enough, but she had come strangely near the truth.

The desire that had almost forced Alice, against even her common sense, to take in the orphaned baby, was the world-old desire of motherhood. Unconsciously she had planned ahead her whole life with David. Naturally, she wanted children, as every normal woman does. The maternal instinct was stronger in her, perhaps, than in some frailer girls.

And she was now, as the psychologists would say, rationalizing her maternal instincts by adopting this stray child. The love that was waiting for the children denied her, was being lavished on this little one, so much in need of just the affection and care that Alice could give it.

And in the giving of it, Alice was happy.

It was strange—she thought one night as she put out one hand in the dark to touch the sleeping baby's crib —that more women did not try to reconstruct their lives in this fashion, to build again, even when the foundation of their happiness was destroyed.
