PORT ANGELES OLYMPIC LEADER

VOL. 30. NO. 2. PORT ANGELES, CLALLAM COUNTY, WASHINGTON, FRIDAY, JANUARY 9, 1914. $1.00 EER YEAR.

FRONT STREET CONTRACT LET

Another Change in Francis Street District; Each Street Will Pay Its Own Way.

Third street ordinance read third time and referred back to city attorney for one week.

Bid of Lewis, Wiley & Morse for improvement of districts 11 and 12 embracing the business portion of the city and adjacent streets was accepted and clerk instructed to notify them at once. Contractors have ten days in which to enter into contract with city.

Resolution No. 14 for improvement of Francis street district was rejected and a substitute resolution adopted. The new resolution, official publication of which is made in another column of this issue, changes the streets somewhat, avoiding the condemnation of unopened streets thru the reserve. It also provides that the property abutting on each street shall pay for the improvement on such street, and on that street only.

Plans for Street Improvements.

Chairman Elliott of the street committee recommended small appropriations for the filling of chuck holes on Front, Peabody and C streets, making them passable for the winter. He stated it would cost $200 to do a reasonable job on C street alone and the money would be practically thrown away; it was his belief that assessm-nt districts should be created covering each of these streets.

Councilman Dustman, the other member of the committee, opposed the report, saying the gravel fills would simply make two chuck holes for every one that exists at present. C street especially is flat as a pancake; he would grade it up so the water would run off, put in culverts and then we would have a road. It would cost $1,000 to put east Front street — at present the worst section in the Angeles-Sequim road — in good shape, and fully $500 to rebuild the C street road, which is also the worst stretch on the way to the Lakes.

Councilman Swanson believed that if any street work was done Laurel street, over which passes most of the lake traffic, should be included for it is worse'n the other two put together. Fleming, directing attention to the fact that the cost of creating an assessment district for C street would be $300 or more, did not believe in saddling the expense on the residents of Lincoln Heights. $300 expended directly on the road would put in a first class gravelled road, as the distance was not great and the drainage question largely settled by nature. The committee's recommendation for temporary repairs was turned down by a unanimous vote.

Later in the evening, Shields secured the appointment of a committee, consisting of Shields, Dustman, and Bigelow, to look into the cost of a team or an auto truck with iden of city making such purchase and employing two or three men by the month to do the grading and graveling.

New Officers Installed.

The business of the old year having been wound up with the reports of the committees, Mayor Mead stated that on account of pressure of business he would waive whatever right he might nave had to make an address and thanking the council for courtesies shown to the chair he administered the oath of office to Horace White, mayor-elect. After the new councilmen and officers-elect had been installed, Mayor White read his inaugural address, which was well received, and the year 1914 was under way.

Clerk's Annual Report.

The annual statement of the City Clerk, read and referred to the finance committee, shows receipts of $26,999.88 in the current expense fund account, of which sum there was received from taxation $11,867.-95 and from saloon licenses $12,-248.33. There was $6194.59 in the fund at the close of the year, with outstanding warrants amounting to $4627.52, all of which have been called. (See treasurer's notice in another column.)

The statement of warrants issued on the current expense fund shows that streets and sidewalks cost $4804 in 1913; the clerk's office used $3616, the treasurer $980, attorney $715, marshal $1900, engineer $3890, fire department $1343, with $6920 under the miscellaneous heading. Elections cost $441, hydrants $1215, street lights $2225, liquor license to state $1783.

$11,706 was collected in light rents during the year; operating expenses were $7297, maintenance $926 and construction $3467. In the inventory the electric light plant is listed at $25,000 and the electric light franchise is valued at another $25,000. Official publication of the entire report will be made in the Olympic-Leader next week.

Application of J. W. Little for liquor license granted, five voting for and one against.

Surety bond offered by Clerk Beam approved.

Resignation of H. C. Bishop as city marshal read and accepted.

Duplicate warrant ordered issued to John Donohue, who accompanied affidavit of loss with bond.

Proposal of A. B. Hartman to do cemetery work at certain prices referred to committee.

Bill of Commercial Club for $40 to cover W. B. Ritchie's expense to Portland in interest of lease of Ediz Hook laid over to be presented in proper form.

Mayor White's Appointments.

Mayor White announced the following appointments, which were at once confirmed:

Marshal, A. W. Grierson.
Policeman, Frederick Pollow.
Street Commissioner, Wm. Graham
Health Officer, D. E. McGillivray.
Electrician, Dell Church.
Engineer, Charles Filion.
Police Judge, J. Merton Davis.
Janitor, Tom Olson.

Wm. A. Lange Will Not Qualify as Treasurer.

Communication from City-Treasurer-elect Lange stated that he had found it would be utterly impossible to take up the office without serious injury to his own business, and requested council to appoint someone to fill the position. No action taken further than agreement that affairs should be conducted by old officials for the present.

Police Judge Davis reported the sum of $581 as his year's collections, which has been duly turned over to the city treasurer.

Communication was read from F. H. Godfrey, consulting engineer of Tacoma, stating that that city is about to replace light standards now in use with an entirely different system. The present standards are in first class condition and complete with five lamp sockets, wiring and globes, and may be purchased for about the cost of junk castings. The city would thus be enabled to have modern lights at about the price of the present type of fixture.

A GREAT STORY BY A GREAT AUTHOR

"The Ne'er Do Well, a Tale of the Panama Canal During Construction, by Rex Beach.

This story of the making over of a man among the toilers of the big ditch is said to be the best that Rex Beach has ever written; the opening chapters are published in this issue of the Olympic-Leader. Those who have enjoyed Rex Beach's Alaskan tales will be equally pleased with this.

"The Ne'er Do Well" will be followed by "The Abysmal Brute," by Jack London. these two being the opening serials in a collection of seven Big Book Successes which will be published in these columns this year.

The annual meeting of the Congregational Church was held Dec. 31st and showed the last year to have been the best in the history of the Church. The Church is now self-supporting, not having received any missionary aid since 1912. Five new members were added Sunday morning, Miss Sarah E. Brown by letter and four of the young people of the Sunday school on confession of faith. The Church is greatly encouraged by the influence and timely aid of the new families.

MAYOR WHITE'S INAUGURAL ADDRESS

Recommends Sinking Fund for Electric Light Bonds and Revision of Light Rates.

Gentlemen of the Council:

In assuming the position of Mayor I desire to express my deep sense of the responsibility attaching to the office. Our little city, as I believe, is just on the threshold of great growth and development and the duties of the executive will doubtless be exacting and in many instances extremely perplexing. I forsee all this and stand ready to assume the burden. I shall render the best service in my power. I shall at all times endeavor to subordinate personal preferences to the good of the general public. All questions arising under the statutory duties and prerogatives of the executive shall be determined in the broad light of advancing the interests of the entire community.

To the outgoing Mayor and members of the council of the term just ended I wish to say that you have accomplished much. It has been a busy year for you and not a man has shirked his duties. Not a single person who has intelligently kept track of the events of the past year and the conditions under which you have labored and who takes an inventory of what you have accomplished but will unstintedly applaud your work. You have had a most difficult task and you have acquitted yourself with credit.

To the members of the new council I have this to say: You have been chosen to represent your several wards. The people who have sent you here look to you to direct the affairs of the city; to enact such laws as will advance the material interests of the municipality. It is a momentous task and promises to be increasingly difficult as the months go by. In this connection I want to make a few recommendations for your future consideration.

In the enforcement of law and order we must secure good men. We can not do this without offering good salaries. Our policemen at present are receiving $60.00 per month. It seems to me that this should be increased to, at least, $75.00 per month.

The time is not far distant when it will be absolutely imperative that cows be prohibited from running at large. I would not insist that this be done immediately but if you should see fit to pass such an ordinance now or at any time in the future it shall receive my approval.

I would suggest that the revision of rates for electric lights be made a subject of inquiry. The present rates are 10 cents for the first 50 kilowatts and 5 cents for all over that. It seems a more equitable division of rates could be devised.

In my opinion steps should be taken to create a sinking fund to retire the electric light bonds. Under our contract for electric power from the Olympic Power Company we should have a handsome income from our electric lights and we should use it to lessen our interest debt as much as possible.

In conclusion I wish to say that I am especially pleased with the personnel of the present council. We are to work together for, at least, one year. I believe that the Council as now constituted will establish a record for efficiency and intelligent and concerted action. Let us strive at all times for harmony. Let the spirit of concession abide with us and grant every man the privilege of exercising his judgment in all matters. Let a sense of good fellowship prevail in our meetings. If I am not mistaken history will record our year of service as the period when Port Angeles awoke from its lethargy and made its greatest strides towards that commercial eminence its location and resources insure. Nature has done all she can for us as a city. Let us all pull together as one for a great, a beautiful, a clean city and we will see our hopes realized.

Road Boss Henry Marshall, in charge of the Fairservice camp on the Solduck spent the early week in the city on business. While here he filed an oil location in the vicinity of Forks.

ANGELES WILL CELEBRATE ON FEBRUARY 12th

Arrangements are under way for one of the biggest celebrations in Port Angeles' history, to be held on February 12th, Lincoln's birthday. The reason for the great fete is founded on the unusual prosperity which has come to the city in the last year by reason of the building of the railroad, the completion of the hydro-electric power plant, the building of the mills, extensive civic improvements, and the numerous other factors which have conspired to infuse new life into the municipality.

A committee appointed by the Commercial Club has the matter in hand and it is their purpose to make the affair one which will reflect unlimited credit to the city. The exercises will consist of an elaborate banquet, speeches, etc. Prominent people from all parts of the Northwest will be invited to attend.

Further details will be published at a later date.

PORT ANGELES TRUST AND SAVINGS BANK

Number of Leading Citizens Included Among Stockholders.

A new commercial bank for Port Angeles in which a number of our business and professional men have taken stock is to be known as the Port Angeles Trust and Savings Bank and will be open for business about February 1st in the new Morse building. Mr. Benj. N. Phillips, a young man of some ten years' experience in the banking business, and who for the past three years has been connected with James Hoge in the Union Savings and Trust Bank of Seattle, has been here for the past two weeks working up the proposition and is more than pleased with the success and encouragement with which he has met. Mr. Phillips comes with the highest recommendations from the people with whom he has been associated, as a man of exceplent character and exceptional business ability. Feeling that there is an unusually good opening here, he went enthusiastically to work and secured the desired amount of subscriptions in a very short time, and all he now asks is a fair share of the public patronage.

The firm hopes to have handsome quarters in the Elks building as soon as it is completed, probably by July. They start out with a capital stock of $25,000 and the following citizens as stockholders: R. D. Willson, T. T. Aldwell, D. E. McGillivray, W. Chambers, C. L. Babcock, K. O. Erickson, Herman Johnson, C. Kupler, F. T. Hyde, W. J. Mathewson, Cecil McNutt, D. A. Christopher, F. E. Warner, J. F. Clark, J. D. Hickok, F. D. Babcock, H. Marshall, B. J. Phillips, F. L. Plummer.

BISHOP KEATOR WILL BE HERE SUNDAY

Special Services at St. Andrews on Sunday, and Reception at Parish Hall Monday Evening.

There will be services of unusual interest and importance in St. Andrew's church next Sunday, Jan. 11th. The Rt. Rev. F. W. Keator, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, will preach at the eleven o'clock service, and at the evening service (7:30) he will preach and administer the Sacrament of Confirmation to a large class. In addition to the usual good music of the choir there will be special selections at both services. A cordial invitation is extended to the public for these and all other services of the Church.

On Monday night, January 12th, the Ladies Guild of St. Andrews Church will give an informal reception in the Parish Hall in honor of Rev. Keator and the candidates to be confirmed next Sunday evening. A general invitation is extended to the public and members of the Church are especially requested to be present to welcome the new members. A musical program will be rendered that will be pleasing to all, and light refreshments will be served. Eight to eleven.

G. A. Glines and Engineer Seabrook are in the city on a tour of inspection of the power plant.

COMMERCIAL CLUB ELECTS OFFICERS

Julius Kirschberg President; Old Board Continued; Splendid Addresses Given.

By W. S. Pearce.

The Port Angeles Commercial Club held its annual election of officers Wednesday night at the Club room for the coming year.

Some new names appear in the official roster.

Mr. J. I. Kirschberg was elected to the presidency of the club. Mr. G. M. Lauridsen, the incumbent for the past year, declined to stand for re-election, assigning as his reason the pressure of other business, and further that he desired to see some new blood in the organization.

Mr. Kirschberg was elected by acclamation, and gracefully acknowledged the compliment with a felicitous speech of acceptance.

Mr. W. B. Ritchie was then placed in nomination for the vice-presidency and was likewise elected by acclamation. In accepting the honor, Mr. Ritchie in his wonted, happy vein assured the large audience that he would exercise his utmost endeavors in behalf of the welfare of the Club, which means the upbuilding of the city.

Mr. J. P. Christensen was re-elected treasurer by acclamation, after which the old board, consisting of Messrs. J. C. Hansen, R. D. Willson, A. A. Smith, S. J. Lutz, P. Grubb and Alfred I. Filion, was re-elected.

At the close of the election Mr. G. M. Lauridsen delivered an able address, embodying a resume of the work accomplished by the Club during the past year. It was a lucid exposition of the Club's attainments, and demonstrated most forcefully the potency of the Club in its relation to the material advancement of the city, and its indispensability to the city's progress. The address was greeted with thunderous applause, and a unanimous vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Lauridsen and all the officers of the organization for their earnest, efficient and untiring efforts in its behalf.

Addresses were delivered by many of the members and friends of the Club, notable among which was the speech of Mr. Thos. T. Aldwell, the retiring vice-president, who declined to stand for another term. Mr. Aldwell, in his own inimitable way, urged concerted action and unabated vigilance on the part of Port Angeles' citizenship, which he averred was essentially important in the city's development. He also counseled harmony and the relegation of petty strife and sectional feeling to the dead past.

Short talks, germain to the occasion, were made by Mr. A. A. Smith, Mr. J. W. Lindsay, Mr. A. A. Davis, and others, all of which were greeted with generous cheering.

The Club room was filled to capacity with a distinctly representative assemblage of business and professional men, who by their interest and evident concern in the deliberations, gave unmistakable proof of more than passing solicitude for the welfare of the Club.

The meeting in its entirety was signalized by the best of feeling, and if anyone present was disgruntled or harbored anything akin to discontent it was most successfully concealed or squelched by the robust optimism which prevaded the atmosphere.

The Club starts out most auspiciously with the New Year, and its officers will not halt in their efforts to place Port Angeles in the forefront as one of the busiest and most progressive towns on the North Pacific Seaboard.

WE HAD NO RAIN AT ALL!

It is true we have had a pretty steady rainfall this week, but it followed a long dry spell and wound up a year deficient several inches in annual rainfall. However, we should worry! Down in Aberdeen they had a total of 85 inches, or seven feet, in the year just past, it being the third wettest year in the history of the bureau. In 1902 the rainfall was 91.5 inches and in 1909 it was 100 inches. 17½ inches of water fell last October in Aberdeen, more than half an inch per day, and more than half as much as we had in Ageles during the entire year.

COUNTY WANTS BIDS ON GRAVELING 9 MILES ROAD

Bids Asked for on One and a Fourth Miles of Rockwork Between Beaver and Lake Crescent.

The Commissioners met Monday in regular session. All present.

Estimate of work done on Permanent Highway 2, Myers contract, approved for amount $2071.50.

$799.50 ordered transferred from the Road and Bridge Fund of District 1 to town of Sequim.

Walter Barr was placed on payroll at $50 per month as treasurer's clerk.

Petition for change of route of road from Sequim to Sequim Bay laid over for investigation.

Petition for a road to run northeasterly from Dungeness also laid over for same purpose.

Board granted petition for road to connect Sequim cemetery with the Dungeness-Sequim new road.

Letter of E. G. Morse re change of Quillayute road referred to Commissioner Clark for report.

Auditor was directed to call for bids for the graveling of main road from Morse creek to Long Prairie road, nine miles, estimated that 10,-000 yards of gravel will be required.

Auditor was directed to notify bonding company of the default of R. E. Meith, contractor of Elwha bridge, that the penalty of $10 per day is now in force. Work was to have been complete January 1st.

For burial of paupers as per call for bids, Board awarded contract to Fulmer Uudertaking Co., at $25 each within a radius of eight miles.

Auditor was directed to call for bids for 1¼ miles of Beaver-Lake Crescent road, same being mostly rock work.

BRIDGES WASHED OUT NEAR DUNGENESS

The heavy rains of the past week have caused a little anxiety as to bridges and wash-outs throughout the county, but so far nothing very serious has been reported. The Elwha rose very high, giving the new dam the best kind of a test, but it withstood the pressure. Several men were kept busy for a day or two, however, baling the water out of the power house, which is locatedetaoin power house, the floor of which is but ten feet or so above the river at low water, but no damage was done.

Near Dungeness the Ward and Canfield bridges were washed out, and the Cougar Mill bridge near the hatchery. The railroad construction company report very little damage to their grade, but the Little River Logging Co. had some of their track on the flat near the brewery washed out. The Earles mill water mains were out of commission one day but were quickly repaired. The city water system came thru the ordeal safely, even tho the flood was some four feet over the dam.

Someone has it figured out that in the week's time we received about a quarter of the entire amount of rain due us in a year. Terrific storms and washouts are reported all over the sound country.

Judge Ralston is down for the regular January term of the Superior Court. There is quite a calendar, mostly minor matters however. All criminal cases and possibly all contested right-of-way cases wil go over to the next jury session in February or March. Three preliminary hearings in railway condemnation were heard yesterday, and decrees of necessity granted.

The Citizen's National Bank has had the necessary papers drawn up and at the next meeting of the board of directors will make application for membership in the new federal reserve system, thereby linking up the local institution with the strong system created by the new currency law just passed by the national congress.

Treasurer Babcock says his office is a busy place these days, getting ready for the rush of work when the taxes begin to come in. The tax rolls will reach $460,000 this year, fully $100,000 more than last year. This, together with the $150,000 bond money to be expended this year, should mean a great deal in the way of improvements.

ANGELES PAPER KNOCKING EVERYTHING IN SIGHT

It is really unfortunate that Port Angeles has a publication that distorts facts to suit its purposes, especially when important civic issues are at stake. In a late issue this publication belittled the honest worth of Senator Poindexter and Congressman Falconer to secure the passage of the Ediz Hook Spit bill. The Olympic-Leader does not desire in any way to deprecate any efforts Senator Jones or Representative Johnson may have made, or belittle any assistance they may have been to the bill, but on account of the article published in another paper and in justice to Senator Poindexter, we are publishing the Congressional Record's account of the passage of the bill, from which it will be seen that Senator Poindexter played a very important part and that his work on the measure was most essential.

This publication to which we have referred, in line with its policy of misstating facts on all occasions, said in its editorial that the Commercial Club at the instance of the Bull Moosers thanked only Senator Poindexter and Congressman Falconer for their work, when as a matter of fact and record, in order to be impartial, at the same meeting a strong resolution was adopted thanking Senator Jones for the work he had done as well as one thanking Senator Poindexter and the delegation. We need the assistance of all our Congressional delegation on this most important matter, and Senator Poindexer and Congressman Falconer are working and have worked most effectively as will be seen by the Congressional Record, as also have Senator Jones and Congressman Johnson.

The citizens of Port Angeles appreciate all efforts made by the members of the Congressional delegation from this state irrespective of politics and if the bill is passed there will be glory enough for all. It will require all their enthusiastic co-operation to secure this without any publication or persons here trying to create discord by questioning the motives of any person who is working to this end.

THE PASSAGE OF THE BILL.

Mr. Myers. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 3454) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to lease to the City of Port Angeles, Wash., certain property, to report it with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 141) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Washingon (Mr. Poindexter) to the fact that the report recommends a amendment suggested by the Department of Commerce.

Mr. Poindexter. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this bill.

The Vice President. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. The Secretary will read, for the information of the Senate, the substitute reported by the committee.

(The bill was read.)

The Vice President. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. Brandegee. Mr. President, I should like to have some kind of a statement in regard to this matter or to have the report read, if it is not long. If the report is long, however, I should rather have a short verbal statement.

Mr. Poindexter. Mr. President, the report is not long. It consists of a letter from the Secretary of Commerce, in which he states that the department, which, I suppose, is guided by the advice of the Lighthouse Board, for whose uses this reservation is made, has no objection to the bill.

I will state further that the existing law already authorizes the lease by the Government of unoccupied lands on reservations such as this for a period of five years, but it has been ascertained from experience that short terms of leases are not available for any practical use, so it was desired to obtain a lease in this instance for 99 years of land which is unoccupied, and unless it is leased in some such way it will probably continue indefinitely to be unoccupied. That is the situation. It is a small town, lying between the waters of the Strait of San Juan de Fuca and the Olympic mountains. The quantity of land is very limited, and it i sdesired for the establishment of manufacturing industries. The lease, as embodied in the substitute read by the Secretary, states in specific terms that the city shall build and maintain a macadam roadway from the public highway to the lighthouse, which is situated at one point on the reservation. I think these are the essential features of the proposition.

Mr. Brandegee. What is the total area of the land involved?

Mr. Poindexter. Something like 86 acres.

Mr. Brandegee. It is 2 miles long?

Mr. Poindexter. Yes; a long narrow strip.

Mr. Brandegee. I make no objection to the bill, but I think a lease of 99 years is equivalent to a fee.

The Vice President. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Revolutionist Zapata formally notified Huerta to be prepared to be publically disgraced and, along with his cabinet, hanged from the balcony of the national palace upon a certain day which will be named later. Evidently Zapata expects to be in something of a hurry when the hanging is to be done, and, therefor, is giving Huerta notice beforehand to be all ready and in trim for it. Which only indicates that courtesy, at least, is spreading among the Mexicans.

ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE FILES PROPOSED LAW

Question of Statewide Prohibition Will Be Leading Issue in General Election This Year.

Olympia, January 7th.—With the filing here of a proposed statewide prohibition law, to be voted on under the initiative rules next November, a contest that is expected to absorb much attention between now and November 3 next has been started.

The proposed law, if enacted, will forbid the sale or manufacture of any intoxicant in the state after January 1, 1916. Only pharmacists will be permitted to sell liquor, and then only upon a physician's certificate. This also applies to patent medicines containing any alcohol.

The only way any person can legally obtain liquor other than by physician's certificate, if the law is enacted, is by securing from the county auditor, upon payment of a 25c fee and giving information in regard to the user, a permit which will enable the recipient to ship in for his own use 12 quarts of beer or one-half gallon of stronger beverage. This supply must be made to last 20 days, for no other permit will be issued within that time.

Under these conditions the supply will be shipped from an outside point, but the words "intoxicating liquor" and the name of the person ordering it, are to be printed on the outside of the package.

The Anti-Saloon League plans to start immediately to secure the signatures of 33,000 registered voters, whose names must be checked and petitions turned into the secretary of state by July 3.

Fined $240 for Permitting Women to Work Over 8 Hours on Piece Work.

The state bureau of labor is enforcing vigorously the woman's eight hour law throughout the state. Mrs. Frances K. Headlee recently filed 24 complaints against the National Lumber Manufacturing company at Hoquiam and a conviction was obtained in each case, the firm being fined a total of $240 and costs.

The girls were employed making boxes, being paid under the piecework system, which made it possible for them to make an average wage of about 90 cents per day of nine hours' work. Many of the girls lived at Aberdeen and not being able to afford car fare out of their earnings were compelled to walk to their employment in Hoquiam and return, a distance of eight miles each day. The firm will now increase its rate of pay. Most of the girls are foreigners and this case, the labor commissioner says, is simply a forerunner of what might be expected when the great influx of foreign immigration begins with the opening of navigation through the Panama Canal, if it were not for the minimum wage law for women, which he terms "a timely piece of legislation."

The cases at Hoquiam follow a series of convictions that have been secured for violating the eight-hour law in Seattle, Spokane, Auburn, Everson, Olympia, and Centralia. Cases are also pending in other parts of the state.

Blindness in Children is Preventable and Treatment is Simple.

Thirty per cent of blindness in the state of Washington is preventable," says Prof. W. B. Hall, superintendent of the State School for the Blind at Vancouver, who was in Olympia in conference with the Board of Control.

"This percentage of blindness is caused by 'opthalmia neonatorum' commonly known as baby's sore eyes and results in either total or partial blindness," said Superintendent Hall. "A simple treatment of silver nitrate solution for these cases would have prevented a tragedy and retained perfect vision for the child. Many states are spending annually from $5,000 to $20,000 through commissions for the blind and in giving publicity to the means for the prevention of blindness.

"The state of Washington should provide for an examination of the eyes of all students in the Vancouver Institute by the best oculists obtainable, who should determine the cause of blindness and tabulate these causes, so that operation or treatment or fitting of glasses may improve the vision of some and enable them to attend the public schools. This would relieve the state of the expense of special education."

Steamboat Inspection and Enforcement of Navigation Law.

The annual report of the state labor commissioner covering the work of steamboat inspection and enforcement of the provisions of the state navigation law has been transmitted to Governor Lister.

The report shows that 54 boats have been inspected and granted licenses during the past year. These boats ply on eighteen different bodies of water, thirteen navigating Lake Chelan, the largest body of fresh water in the state. The report indicates that gasoline is fast supplanting steam as motive power, only seven out of the total number being operated by steam.

New Deal at the State University.

With the naming of five new university regents by Governor Lister this week, the recent small tempest at the University of Washington has quieted completely. Of the governor's appointees three are republicans and two democrats, thus giving a republican majority on the board and emphasizing the governor's views that politics of no kind, partisan or otherwise, should be allowed to interfere with the work of the university.

The personel of the board, Seattle papers indicate, disposes satisfactorily of assertions made by a retiring regent that the governor wanted a "dummy board." The new board will set out immediately to secure a capable president to take the place of Thomas F. Kane, whom the old board removed summarily in the middle of the term. Prof. Henry Landes will continue at the head of the university, as acting president, until next year.

Judge M. M. Godman, chairman of the public service commission, who has been in California on a brief vacation for his health, has returned to Olympia. Commissioner Frank R. Spinning has returned to Olympia after a visit to Portland where he had a conference with the Oregon Commissioner to arrange a uniform agreement regarding express rates governing shipments exclusively within the states.

Governor Lister has appointed the Rev. M. H. Marvin, of Sunnyside, to fill the vacancy on the industrial welfare commission that has existed since its organization, while Mrs. W. H. Udall, a prominent club woman, Tacoma, has been appointed to succeed Mrs. Theresa McMahon of Seattle whose term expired January 1.

THE LEADER DEPARTMENT STORE

The state department of agriculture has promised its best cooperation in behalf of the next Washington Boys' and Girls' Agricultural and Industrial exhibition, which will be held at Tacoma this year, the last week in October. George P. Wiley, a Waterville banker, has b en elected president of the contest.

The department of agriculture states that December was the driest month recorded in Olympia since the government weather bureau service was started here, fifteen years ago. The precipitation for the entire year was far below normal.

Fifty pound boxes of apples may be shipped here from eastern Washington cheaper than by express, the parcel post zone rates being based on mileage as the crow flies, while freight rates are calculated according as the railroad tracks may happen to run, says a Seattle paper.

It is said that a grocer in one of the smaller towns stocked up recently via the parcel post, which one can readily appreciate when he considers that the rate on packages from Seattle is less than half present express charges.

"Lingerie waists should be squeezed not rubbed," says a woman's magazine. Keep this in mind when you go to spend an evening with your best chicken."— Vancouver Columbian.

In a recent statement Lord Rosebery said that England ought to have 500,000 more babies than she has. There's a real live subject that the suffragettes might well get busy upon.

A new tariff, new currency, new diplomatic doctrine, Senators elected by the people, new foreign policy, income tax, parcel post, lobbyists smoked out of Washington — these are some of the claims made by the Democrats. If all the innovations enumerated prove even a tenth part as successful as the parcel post, the Democrats may well pat themselves on the back.

The bottle which the bankers tried so hard to make the country believe a few weeks ago contained poison, contains soothing syrup and is just what they needed, they tell us now, since the Democracy bill has actually become law in spite of them.

A Toledo, Ohio, man has written several articles favorable to the cultivation of dandelions in hothouses, and because of which articles a commission is inquiring into his sanity. From this angle, it looks like a hopeless case.

With Nature sobbing as she usually sobs at this season of the year, and the water wagon jolting along as it usually jolts along in January, there is something sweetly apropos in the filing in Olympia of the draft of a "dry" law.—Tacoma News.

A Great Falls, Mont., woman who carried her money where they all carry it, was held up and robbed by two men who ripped the lisle open with a knife. Such garter snakes as some criminals are getting to be!

A WILLIAM TELL STORY

Total Destruction of the "City" of Port Angeles in 1863.

The Washington Standard is digging up from its old files some mighty interesting reminiscences of early days. From the issue of December 26, 1863, is taken the following:

"Mr. Bradshaw has shown us a letter from Jared S. Brown deputy United States marshal, written from Port Townsend on the 23rd inst., announcing the total destruction of Port Angeles by a torrent of water which burst suddenly from a ravine in the rear of the town. The calamity occurred on Wednesday evening about 6 o'clock. The first intimation which the residents had of the danger was a rushing, roaring sound proceeding from the gorge and looking in that direction, they saw a great body of water several feet in height, bearing upon its surface or sweeping before it logs, trees and stumps. Before they could even realize their danger the flood was upon and over the greater part of the town. The custom house, a large two story structure stood exactly in the path of the vast torrent and was overturned and swept away in a moment. Of the three occupants in it at the time, Dr. Gunn, the collector, was the only one who escaped. The accident is supposed to have been caused by the late rains melting the ice and snow in the mountains and causing avalanches into the lakes at the foothills which were then overflowed and rushing down the gorge carried everything before them."

While it is true the entire "city" at that time was located on the sand at the mouth of one of the tiny creeks which flow thru the present town of Port Angeles, it is very doubtful if any such "wall of water" ever came down stream. The creek gulch is only two miles long, scarcely reaching the hill back of town; there are no lakes, and water from the mountains would have to flow up over a 2500-ft. hill to get into the gulch. Still, at that, the story is no more extravagant than many that are told by alleged boosters at the present time.

THIRD GAS VEIN AT HOH

Strike Christmas Day Convinces Drillers that They Are Near Oil Sand.

Down to a depth of 875 feet on Christmas Day with the drill in a strata of earth which emitted the biggest flow of gas since operations at the Hoh river started, is the gist of a letter received by Jay Crary of the Jefferson Oil Company this morning, says the Aberdeen World.

The news convinces Crary and his associates more than ever that they are near the coveted oil sand. The odor of gasoline is very strong, giving rise to the belief that oil is near at hand. As it has been over a week since the big gas vein was encountered, further news is eagerly awaited. All preparations have been made to rush out report of a strike as soon as one is made.

"The gas vein encountered on Christmas Day," said Mr. Crary this morning, "is the largest yet. The water is literally boiling from the hole. It looks good, surely. I have no predictions to make. I have refrained from making predictions from the start. But this strike of gas, coupled with other favorable indications, makes us very optimistic."

This is the third gas vein struck since the Jefferson Oil Company sank its well on the Hoh river field. Importance is attached to the presence of gas since oil is seldom, if ever, found without gas, and since gas indicates the proximity of oil.

Nothing new was received from the Indian Oil Company's well at Tahola today. J. A. Paulhamus is on the ground and the task of proving the well is now in progress. He had to send to Los Angeles for some new parts for his machinery and this delayed work a few days. The parts have arrived, are installed and the work has been renewed. Paulhamus is drilling through a hard formation which continues for the remaining 60 feet he has to go before striking the solid rock upon which he will rest his casing, preparatory to baling out the hole.

"The auditor in one of the largest banks in Spokane estimates that a 1c letter postage would cut the bank's postage bill about in half. He further states that he believes other banks and firms would save a proportionate amount by cutting letter postage from 2 cents to 1 cent. Great heads for figures those Spokane bankers have."—Colfax Gazette.

GOVERNMENT WILL LOCATE THE SALMON BANKS

Albatross Assigned for Work to the Fishing Banks Off Cape Flattery

The salmon fishing industry, worth millions of dollars to the state of Washington, will be extended from the Sound and the rivers to the outer sea and a continuous supply of salmon made available irrespective of whether the fish are running in the rivers, according to professors of the biology deparment of the University of Washingon. This possibility was revealed when it beceme known that the United States deep sea dredging vessel Albatross had been assigned for work to the fishing banks outside Puget Sound and the mouth of the Columbia river.

"It seems probable," he said "that the salmon have fixed locations in the ocean and that they do no go far out to sea. If this is so, then it should be a fairly easy matter to locate the salmon outside the Sound. A continuous supply of salmon would then be available without regard to the run in the rivers.

"It now seems probable that they never go far from shore, but have definite locations in comparatively shallow water. The Albatross will endeavor to locate the salmon banks and an entirely new face will be put on the fishing industry in the state of Washington."

"The banks lie northwest of the entrance to the strait," Prof. Smith declares. "The old theory that salmon migrated northward was shattered a year ago last summer when Prof. Gilbert of Stanford university discovered sockeye salmon feeding out beyond the Straits, the banks extending out 10 or 15 miles from shore. Here the salmon feed on crustace, and last summer I saw hundreds of fishing boats, seiners and trawlers out there and when the banks are definitely located fishing may be carried on all thru the year.

J. L. Stahl, of the state experimental station, Puyallup, in a recent lecture on fruit growing in Western Washington, said the two best things to begin with on logged-off land are red raspberries and logan berries. He explained the planting, cultivating, cutting and trimming the vines and how to pack the berries. He told of a farmer in the White river valley who planted one acre to horse radish and got four tons of the root. He is now selling his crop in Seattle for 6 cents per pound. He will get $480 off his one acre.

"When a man buys a quarter section of land and lets it lie idle in a growing neighborhood, our out-of-date tax system allows him to take the rise in value, and to do as little as possible by way of tax return to the county. But let him build a house or clear a forty, or dig a well, and our same blind-bat system comes along and fines him for his thrift. Some day we will learn that it is opportunity and not use which should be taxed.—Morton Mirror.

Best Cough Medicine for Children

"I am very glad to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy" writes Mrs. Lida Dewey, Milwaukee, Wis. "I have used it for years both for my children and myself and it never fails to relieve and cure a cough or cold. No family with children should be without it as it gives almost immediate relief in cases of croup." Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is pleasant and safe to take, which is a great importance when medicine must be given to young children. For sale by all dealers.

THE NEW REGENTS FOR STATE UNIVERSITY

Ousting of Dr. Kane in Middle of Term Made Necessary by Code of Ethics in Vogue.

Governor Lister has appointed five new regents for the University of Washington to fill the places of the members of the board whom he forced to hand in their resignations two weeks ago. The new regents are Col. W. T. Perkins of Seattle, a banker and business man; Dr. W. A. Shannon, a prominent physician of Seattle; Charles E. Gaches, a hay and grain dealer of Mt. Vernon; Winlock W. Miller, Seattle, a financial agent, and O. A. Fechter of North Yakima. Of these men only Mr. Gaches is an alumnus of the University of Washington. The others received their education in eastern and Middle Western colleges. The regents who have resigned are J. C. Higgins, A. F. McEwan and Geo. H. Walker of Seattle; A. L. Rogers of Waterville, and A. F. Hazeltine of South Bend. Mr. Walker was not asked to resign, but did so voluntarily, declaring that the action of the board in ousting Dr. Kane was right and he would stand by it. Mr. Higgins also issued a statement criticising the governor for his interference with the action of the board. In answering the governor's objection to the time of asking Dr. Kane to resign, the regents call attention to the fact that, due to the ethics of those who are university executives, and who will not consider the acceptance of a position until such a one is formally announced vacant, it was necessary to take action in order that a new head for the University might be chosen before the new college year begins next fall.

The Seattle Times is constantly making assertions in headings to articles which the body of the articles do not confirm. A few days ago it headed an article as follows: "Building Pace Here Equals Nation's Best." Then the Times says that the percentage of building operations for 1913 over 1912 is 18 per cent. Following this it gives a resume of building published by "The Contractor," a building trades paper, which gives a list of cities and the percentages of gain over 1912, as follows: Wichita, Kan., 402 per cent, Wilkesbarre, Pa., 109, Peoria 95, St. Joseph 44, Hartford 297, Cedar Rapids 170, Dallas 175, Columbus 61, Manchester 81. And so it goes all down the line, with only one city that has a less percentage of gain that Seattle — Baltimore, with 14 per cent. The reader who goes no farther than the headings in the Times would think that Seattle is the whole cheese instead of merely a maggot in the rind.—Quilcene Megaphone.

LINCOLN HEIGHTS

From the way the elements have been weeping, since the advent of 1914, we think she must have been sorry to come upon the sphere of life. Wonder if it is because of the thousands who are homeless wanderers in this land, where there is an abundance for all if properly distributed that she exhibits this sorrow? Hope her tears will not turn to snow.

New Years Day passed off very quietly on the Heights.

Mrs. Wakeman's mother, who has been caring for her daughter, at the Ristine home, left last Friday for her home at Silverdale, taking Mrs. Wakeman and baby with her.

Henry Jackson and family went out in the country Saturday to visit relatives and returned home Tuesday.

Lela Epperson is assisting Mrs. Cooper with her work.

Mrs. R. A. Martin has been quite ill for a few days but is gaining slowly.

Mr. and Mrs. McGoff gave a dance in Martin's Hall, Saturday night in honor of the two Misses Hood, who came with them when they returned from their long visit in Seattle.

There was not a very large crowd to the dance in the school house Saturday evening owing to the heavy rain. Music was furnished by the Vail orchestra and was good, those who did attend were well repaid for turning out.

Glady and Henry Race returned to Angeles Wednesday after a pleasant visit with their cousins.

Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Lewis and son Charles celebrated with Mr. and Mrs. Claud Lewis and family in the city.

Mrs. Ella Kale entertained the relatives this time.

Mrs. Stewart is spending the holidays with her parents and little daughter.

The Christmas entertainment at the school house surpassed expectations. The children's recitations were appropriate and well delivered, thanks to Miss Glen. Santa Claus was quite true to life and very accommodating. Having learned in some mysterious way what some few wanted (it was hinted that they wrote to him) he bro't them their heart's desire.

The school house decorations were never before so elaborate and the tree brilliant with candles and trimmings.

The candy, which the ladies made, was fine, looking shop-made. Mrs. Jessie Jackson deserves great credit as she gave so much of her time to the making, etc.

Several surprises were sprung which met with hearty applause.

Howard Putnam, Harry and Lucile Bunnell and Gladys Cays spent Sunday with the Broughton family.

Nat Broughton secured two large wild-cats for his Christmas present.

The National Convention of the W. C. T. U. at Ashbury Park, New Jersey, designated Jan. 15th as National Constitutional Prohibition Day, to be observed by all white ribboners and all like minded with us, as a day of fasting and prayer for victory in the campaign. As we of this state are now engaged in a state-wide campaign it has been thought best to adopt this plan to our special need, deeming that the best aid we can give to National Constitutional Prohibition is to win prohibition in our own state.

We call upon all members and friends to work together to make January 15th notable in the history of our state as a day of mighty power in advancing the cause of state wide prohibition.

Day of Prayer for State Prohibition will be held in the M. E. church Thursday, the 15th, from 1:00 to 5:00 p. m. All christians and moral people are cordially invited to attend.

A very instructive and interesting program is being arranged. Good music is assured. Let us not fail to come and join our prayers with the millions of others not only in every city, town, hamlet and district in our own state but in these United States. "In union there is strength." This is true in prayer as well as in other matters. Prayer is something against which the forces of evil cannot prevail. With millions praying for one definite object, unitedly allying their cause with Almighty God, invoking His blessing, His aid, His leadership, wonderful shall be the victory.

SEQUIM REMAINS DRY

The much mooted license question was disposed of by the city council at their regular meeting on December 31, 1913, by the adoption of the following resolution:

"Because of the confusion of legal opinions as to the advisibility of granting liquor license under the conditions existing here, therefore be it

Resolved, That this Council does hereby express its purpose and intention not to grant any liquor license to any person in the town of Sequim, until after a regular election has been held, and the will of the voters therein for and against license has been ascertained and declared."

The council deserves much credit for the commendable manner in which they have disposed of this, the most perplexing problem they have yet had to deal with.—Press.

THE NE'ER-DO-WELL

A Romance of the Panama Canal

BY

REX BEACH

COPYRIGHT, 1910, 1911, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

PROLOGUE.

Panama as the home of the great canal we all know about, and now here's the zone as the scene of a rattling good romance.

It's by Rex Beach, who jumps from Alaska to the tropics to tell about a young American and his friends and foes in the zone. The hero of this tale is the sort of fellow you like to read about—one who has the hard luck to get into all kinds of scrapes and the nerve and courage and wit to get himself out of them. And the heroine—there are two of her. One's an American, and the other's a member of a proud, haughty family of the upper native classes of the canal zone. Both are worth reading about.

Of course the other characters help along the yarn. If you have paid any sort of attention to the story of the digging of the "big ditch" you will recognize some of them.

CHAPTER I.

The Trail Divides.

IT was a crisp November night. The artificial brilliance of Broadway was rivaled by a glorious moonlit sky. From the city's canyons came an incessant clanging roar.

In the lobby of one of the playhouses a woman paused to adjust her wraps, and, hearing the cries of the newsboys, petulantly exclaimed:

"I'm absolutely sick of football. That performance during the third act was enough to disgust one."

Her escort smiled. "Oh, you take it too seriously," he said. "Those boys don't mean anything. That was merely youth—irrepressible youth—on a tear."

The doors belched forth the football players and their friends. Out they came, tumbling, pushing, jostling, greeting scowls and smiles with grins of insolent good humor. The twenty athletes dodged in through the revolving doors of a cafe, leaving Broadway rocking with the tumult. All the city was football mad, it seemed, for no sooner had the newcomers entered the restaurant than the diners rose to wave napkins or to cheer. One said to his companions:

"That is Anthony—the big chap. He's Darwin K. Anthony's son. You've heard about the Anthony bill at Albany?"

"Yes, and I saw this fellow play football four years ago. Say! That was a game."

"He's a worthless sort of chap, isn't he?" remarked one of the women, when the squad had disappeared up the stairs.

"Just a rich man's son, that's all. He's twenty-six."

"Didn't I read that he had been sent to jail recently?"

"No doubt. He was given thirty days."

"What—in prison?" questioned another in a shocked voice.

"Only for speeding. It was his third offense, and his father let him take his medicine."

Up in the banquet hall, however, it was evident that Kirk Anthony was more highly esteemed by his mates than by the public at large. He was their hero, in fact, and in a way he deserved it. For three years before his graduation he had been the heart and sinew of the university team, and for the four years following he had coached them, preferring the life of an athletic trainer to the career his father had offered him. And he had done his chosen work well, his team winning the day's game against great odds.

It had been a tremendous spectacle, and when the final whistle blew for the multitude to come roaring down across the field, the cohorts had paid homage to Kirk Anthony, the coach to whom they knew the honor belonged.

Naturally, the newspapers gave the young man's story as well as a history of the game. They told of his estrangement from his father, of the Anthony anti-football bill which the old man in his rage had driven through the legislature and up to the governor himself. Some of them even printed a rehash of the railroad man's famous magazine attack on the modern college.

The fact was that Kirk's associates were of a sort to worry any observant parent. In particular Anthony senior was prejudiced against a certain Adelbert Higgins, who, of course, was his son's boon companion, admirer, aid and abettor. This young gentleman was a lean, horse faced senior, whose unbroken solemnity of manner had more than once led strangers to mistake him for a divinity student, though closer acquaintance proved him wholly unmoral and rattle brained.

It was Higgins this evening who, after the "cripples" had deserted and the supper party had dwindled to perhaps a half dozen, proposed to make a night of it, beginning with a visit to the Austrian Village. The college men selected a table and, shouldering the occupants aside without ceremony, seated themselves and pounded for a waiter.

Padden, the proprietor, came toward them, and, after greeting Anthony and Higgins by a shake of his left hand, ducked his round gray head in acknowledgment of an introduction to the others.

"Glad you dropped in," Mr. Padden assured them. "Anything you boys want and can't get let me know."

When he had gone Higgins averred: "There's a fine man—peaceful, refined—got a lovely character too. Let's be gentlemen while we're in his place."

Ringold rose. "I'm going to dance, fellows," he announced, and his companions followed him, with the exception of the cadaverous Higgins, who maintained that dancing was a pastime for the frivolous and weak.

When they returned to their table they found a stranger was seated with him, who rose as Higgins made him known.

"Boys, meet my old friend, Mr. Jefferson Locke of St. Louis. He's all right."

The college men treated this new recruit with a hilarious cordiality, to which he responded with the air of one quite accustomed to such reunions.

"I was at the game this afternoon," he explained when the greetings were over, "and recognized you chaps when you came in. I'm a football fan myself. I just got into town this morning, and I'm sailing tomorrow. I couldn't catch a boat today, so I'm having a little blowout on my own account. When I recognized you all I just butted in. New York is a lonesome place for a stranger. Hope you don't mind my joining you."

"Not at all!" he was assured.

When he came to pay the waiter he displayed a roll of yellow backed bills that caused Anthony to caution him.

Locke only laughed. "There's more where this came from. However, that's one reason I'd like to stick around with you fellows. I have an idea I've been followed, and I don't care to be tapped on the head. If you will let me trail along I'll foot the bills. That's a fair proposition."

"Oh, come now," Anthony struck in. "You're more than welcome to stay with us if you like, but we can't let you put up for it."

The stranger, despite his avowedly festive spirit, showed a certain reserve.

When the music again struck up he declined to dance, preferring to remain with Higgins in their inconspicuous corner.

"There's a fine fellow," the latter remarked, following his best friend's figure with his eyes, when he and Locke were once more alone. "Sweet nature."

"Anthony? Yes, he looks it."

"He's got just two faults, I always say—he's too modest by far, and he's lazy—won't work."

"He doesn't have to work. His old man has plenty of coin, hasn't he?"

"Yes, and he'll keep it too. Heartless old wretch!"

The dancers came crowding up to the table at the moment, and Ringold suggested loudly: "I'm hungry. Let's eat again."

"I just fixed it with Padden for a private room upstairs," Anthony said. "All the cafes are closed now, and this is the best place in town for chicken creole anyhow."

Accordingly he led the way, and the rest filed out after him. But as they left the ballroom a medium sized man who had recently entered from the street caught a glimpse of them, craned his neck for a better view, then idled along behind.

Anthony played the part of host more lavishly. Mr. Locke, however, insisted that his friends should partake of a kind of drink previously unheard of and with this in view had a confidential chat with the waiter, to whom he unostentatiously handed a five dollar retainer.

The meal was at its noisiest when the man whom Locke had so generously tipped spoke to him quietly. His companions were too well occupied, however, to notice this byplay even when the waiter continued in a low tone:

"He slipped me a ten spot, so I thought it must be something worth while."

"He—he's alone, you say?"

"Seems to be. What shall I do sir?"

Locke took something from his pocket and thrust it into the fellow's hand, while the look in his eyes changed to one of desperation.

"Step outside and wait. Don't let him come up. I'll call you in a minute."

Anthony caught a glimpse of Locke's eyes and inquired in surprise:

"What's wrong, old man? Are you sick?"

Locke shook his head. "I told you fellows I'd been followed this evening. Remember? Well, there's a man downstairs who has given the waiter $10 to let him have his coat and apron so he can come in here. I think it's part of a plan to rob me."

Kirk Anthony rose suddenly, moving as lightly upon his feet as a dancer, and rang for the waiter.

"Give that chap your coat and apron," he ordered when the attendant answered, "and when I ring next send him up. Pass the word to Padden and the others not to notice any little disturbance. I'll answer for results."

The white faced Locke sank back into his chair, while Anthony directed sharply:

"Now, gentlemen, be seated. Here, Locke, your back to the door; your face looks like a chalk mine. There! Now don't be so nervous; we'll cure this fellow's ambition as a gin slinger. I'll change names with you for a minute." He pushed the button twice, and a moment later the door opened quietly to admit a medium sized man in white coat and apron.

The man allowed his eyes to shift uncertainly from one to another as if in doubt as to which was his quarry. Anthony did not dream that it was his own resemblance to the Missourian that led to this confusion; but, in fact, while he and Locke were totally unlike when closely compared, they were of a similar size and coloring, and the same general description would have fitted both.

Having allowed the intruder a moment in which to take in the room, Kirk leaned back in his chair and nodded for him to approach.

"Are you Mr. Locke, sir?" inquired the new waiter.

"Yes," said Kirk.

"Telephone message for you, Mr. Locke," the waiter muttered. "They're holding the wire outside. I'll show you the booth."

"Oh, will you?" Kirk Anthony's hands suddenly shot out and seized the masquerader by the throat. The man uttered a startled gasp, but simultaneously the iron grip of Marty Ringold fell upon his arms and doubled them behind him. The rest of the party were on their feet instantly, watching the struggle and crowding forward with angry exclamations.

"All the way from St. Louis for a telephone call, eh?" Anthony sank his thumbs into the stranger's throat; then, as the man's face grew black and his contortions diminished, added, "We're going to make a good waiter out of you."

Jefferson Locke broke in excitedly: "Choke him good! Choke him! That's right. Put him out for keeps. For God's sake, don't let him go!"

But it was not Kirk's idea to strangle his victim beyond a certain point. He relaxed his grip after a moment and, nodding to Ringold to do likewise, took the fellow's wrists himself, then swung him about until he faced the others. The man's lungs filled with fresh air, he began to struggle once more, and when his voice had returned he gasped:

"I'll get you for this. You'll do a trick"— He mumbled a name that did not sound at all like Jefferson Locke, whereupon the Missourian made a rush at him that required the full strength of Anthony's free hand to thwart.

"Let me go," the stranger gasped. "I'll take you all in. I'm an officer."

"It's a lie!" shouted Locke. "He's a thief."

"I tell you I'm—an officer. I arrest this"—

The words were cut off abruptly by a loud exclamation from Higgins and a crash of glass. Kirk Anthony's face was drenched, his eyes were filled with a stinging liquid; he felt his prisoner sink limply back into his arms and beheld Higgins struggling in the grasp of big Marty Ringold, the foil covered neck of a wine bottle in his fingers.

The foolish fellow had been hovering uncertainly round the edges of the crowd, longing to help his friends and crazily anxious to win glory by some deed of valor.

"I've got him!" he cried joyously. "He's out!"

"Higgins!" Anthony exclaimed sharply. "What the devil"— Then the dead weight in his arms sobered him like a deluge of ice water.

"You've done it this time," he muttered.

"Good God!" Locke cried. "Let's get away! He's hurt!"

"Here, you!" Anthony shot a command at the speaker that checked him half way across the room. "Ringold, take the door and don't let anybody in or out. We're in bad now. I want Padden." He stepped to the door and signaled a passing waiter. A moment later the proprietor knocked and Ringold admitted him.

"What the"— Padden started at sight of the motionless figure on the floor and, kneeling beside it, made a quick examination, while Anthony explained the circumstances leading up to the assault.

"Thief, eh? I see."

"Is he badly hurt?" queried Locke, bending a pale face upon them.

"Huh! I guess he's due for the hospital," the owner of the Austrian Village announced. "He had his nerve, trying to turn a trick in my place. I thought I knew all the dips, but he's a stranger." With nimble fingers he ran through the fellow's pockets, then continued:

"I'm glad you got him, but you'd better get together and rehearse before the police"— He stopped abruptly once more, then looked up curiously.

"What is it?" questioned the man from Missouri.

Padden pointed silently to the lapel of the fellow's vest, which he had turned back. A nickeled badge was pinned upon it. "He's no thief; he's a detective—a plain clothes man!"

The crowd looked nonplused, with the exception of Jefferson Locke, who became calmer than at any time since the waiter had first whispered into his ear.

"We didn't know who he was," he began hurriedly. "You must square it for us, Padden. I don't care what it costs." He extended a bulky roll of banknotes toward the gray haired man. "These boys can't stand this sort of thing and neither can I. I've got to sail at 10 o'clock this morning."

"Looks to me like you've croaked him," said the proprietor, ignoring the proffered money.

"It's worth $1,000 to me not to miss my boat."

"Wait a minute." Padden emptied the unconscious man's pockets, among other things of some telegrams and a legally folded paper. The latter he opened and scanned swiftly, then turned his little eyes upon Locke without a word, whereupon that gentleman, with equal silence, took from his inside pocket a wallet and selected a bill, the denomination of which he displayed to the proprietor before folding it inside the bundle he held.

"Here! It may cost you something."

CHAPTER II.

A Gap.

PADDEN nodded and accepted the money, saying:

"Oh, I guess I can fix it. I know the right doctor. But you'll have to keep your traps closed, understand?"

"Will he die?" asked Ringold fearfully, his back still against the door.

"Not a chance. But if he does he'll never know who hit him. You see, we picked him up in the alley and brought him in." Padden winked meaningly. "It happens right along in this part of town."

"You chaps have done me a big favor tonight," said Locke a little later, when he and his companions were safely out of the Austrian Village, "and I won't forget it either. Now, let's finish the evening the way we began it."

Anderson, Rankin and Burroughs, to conceal their nervousness, pleaded bodily fatigue, while Anthony also declared that he had enjoyed himself sufficiently for one night and intended to go home and to bed. "That episode rather got on my nerves," he acknowledged.

"Mine too," assented Locke. "That's why you mustn't leave me. I just won't let you. Remember, you agreed to see me off."

"'S'right, fellows," Higgins joined in. "We agreed to put him aboard and we must do it. Don't break up the party, Kirk."

"I don't want to go home," Ringold muttered.

"It's a breach of hospitality to go home," Higgins insisted. "Besides, after my bloody 'ncounter with that limb of the law I need a stimulant. You must look after me."

Numbed as they were by the excesses of the evening, it did not take the young men long to lose all clear and vivid remembrance of this recent experience, for the time had come when nature was offering her last resistance, and their brains were badly awhirl. Of all the four, Jefferson Locke was the only one who retained his wits to the fullest—a circumstance that would have proved him the owner of a remarkably steady head had it not been for the fact that he had cunningly substituted water for gin each time it came his turn to drink.

Dawn found them in an east side tenement drinking place frequented by the lowest classes. Ringold was slumbering peacefully on a table; Anthony had discovered musical talent in the bartender and was seated at a battered piano laboriously experimenting with the accompaniment to an Irish ballad; Higgins and Locke were talking earnestly. Locke, as usual, sat facing the entrance, his eyes watchful, his countenance alert. To a sober eye it would have been patent that he was laboring under some strong excitement, for every door that opened caused him to start, every stranger that entered made him quake.

"Grandes' fellow I ever met," Higgins was saying for the hundredth time. "Got two faults, Anthony; he's modesht an' he's lazy—he won't work."

"You and he are good friends, eh?"

"Best ever."

"Would you like to play a joke on him?"

"Joke? Can't be done. He's wises' guy ever. I've tried it an' always get the wors' of it."

"I'll tell you how we can work it. I've got a ticket for Central America in my pocket. The boat sails at 10. Let's send him down there."

"Wha' for?"

Locke kept his temper with an effort. "To make a man of him. We'll go through his clothes, and when he lands he'll be broke. He'll have to work. Don't you see?"

"No." Anthony's friend did not see. "He don't want to go to Central America," he argued. "He's got a new autom'bile."

"But suppose we got him soused, went through his pockets and then put him aboard the boat. He'd be at sea by the time he woke up. He couldn't get back. He'd have to work. Don't you see? He'd be broke when he landed and have to rustle money to get back with. I think it's an awful funny idea."

The undeniable humor of such a situation finally dawned upon Higgins' mind.

"I'll get him full if you'll help manage it," Locke went on. "And here's the ticket." He tapped his pocket.

"Where'd you get it?"

"Bought it yesterday. It's first class and better, and he'll fit my description. We're about the same size. Wait." Locke rose and went to the bar, where he called loudly for the singer. Then when the bartender had deserted the piano he spoke to Anthony: "Keep it up, old man. You're doing fine."

For some moments he talked earnestly to the man behind the bar. No one observed the transfer of another of those yellow bills of which he seemed to have an unlimited store.

Strangely enough, Mr. Jefferson Locke's plan worked without a hitch. Within ten minutes after Kirk Anthony had taken the drink handed him he declared himself sleepy and rose from the piano, only to seek a chair, into which he flung himself heavily.

"It's all right," Locke told his drunken companion. "I've got a taxi waiting. We'll leave Ringold where he is."

Twenty-four hours later Adelbert Higgins undertook to recall what had happened to him after he left Muller's place on East Fourteenth street, but his memory was tricky. He recollected a vaguely humorous discussion of some sort with a stranger, the details of which were almost entirely missing. Unexpected and alarming occurrences made it imperative for him to terminate his connection with his college, as big Marty Ringold had done earlier in the day, and begin to pack his belongings. Partly out of deference to the frantic appeals of his widowed mother, partly owing to the telephoned advice of Mr. Michael Padden of Sixth avenue, who said the injured man had recognized one of his assailants, he booked passage to Japan by the next steamer out of Vancouver.

Strictly speaking, Kirk Anthony did not awake to a realization of his surroundings, but became conscious of them through a long process of dull, dreamy speculation. He said to himself:

"Now, begin all over again, Kirk. Ringold was very drunk. Good! Everything is clear so far. Next you were playing a piano with yellow teeth while somebody sang something about a 'Little Brown Cot.' After that—Lord, you must have been drinking! Well, let's run through it again."

But his efforts were vain. He could recall nothing beyond the piano, so fell to wondering what hotel this could be.

"Some east side joint," he decided, "and a cheap one, too, from the size of this stall." He noted another brass bed close at hand and reasoned that Ringold or Higgins must have risen early, leaving him to finish his sleep. That was considerate, of course, but—Good heavens, it must be late! And he was due to motor to New Haven at noon! He raised himself suddenly and was half out of bed when he fell back with a cry as if an unseen hand had smitten him. He clapped both palms to his head, realizing that he was very sick indeed. The sensation was unlike anything he had ever felt before. His head was splitting, he felt a frightful nausea, the whole room was rocking and reeling as if to pitch him out of bed. It was terrible, so he arose blindly and felt his way toward the telephone. Failing to find it, he pushed a button instead, then tumbled back to bed. He heard the door open and a voice inquire:

"Did you ring, sir?"

"An hour ago. Haven't you more than one bellhop in this place?"

"I'm sorry, sir."

"And I'm sick, mighty sick. I'm going to die."

"I think not, sir. The others are sick too."

"Can I get you something, sir—a little champagne, perhaps, to settle your stomach?"

Anthony opened his eyes. "Hello! Are you the clerk?" Instead of the bellhop he had expected he beheld a man in white jacket and black trousers.

"No, sir, I'm the steward."

The invalid shook his head faintly. "Funny place I've got into. What's the name of it?"

"This? Oh! The Santa Cruz."

"Never heard of it. Why didn't they give me a good room? This is fierce."

"Suit A is considered very good, sir. It is one of the best on the line."

"Line?" Kirk grunted. "So this is some dead line dump. Well, I'm going to get out—understand? Hand me my trousers and I'll slip you a quarter."

The steward did as desired, but a blind search showed the pockets to be empty.

"Give me the coat and vest." But here again Kirk found nothing and was forced to apologize. "I'm getting sicker every minute."

"Perhaps you had better have the doctor?"

"Is there a good one handy?"

"Yes, sir."

"Here in the hotel?"

"This is a ship."

"A—what?" Anthony raised himself and stared at the white clad figure over the foot of his little brass bed.

"This is a ship, sir."

"You get out of here!" yelled the infuriated young man. The steward retreated hastily to the door.

"I beg pardon, sir. I will send the doctor at once."

"Must think I'm still drunk," mumbled Anthony dazedly as he once more laid his head upon his pillow with a groan.

When his dizziness had diminished sufficiently to permit him to open his eyes he scanned his surroundings more carefully. There were unfamiliar features about this place. While it was quite unlike an ordinary hotel room, neither did it resemble any steamship stateroom he had ever seen; it was more like a lady's boudoir. To be sure, he felt a sickening surge and roll now and then, but at other times the whole room made a complete revolution, which was manifestly contrary to the law of gravitation and therefore not to be trusted as evidence. The door opened for a second time and a man in uniform entered.

"I am the doctor."

"I'm sick—awful sick, doctor."

The stranger pulled up a stool, seated himself beside the bed, then felt of Anthony's cheek.

"You have a fever."

"That explains everything. How are the other boys coming on?"

"Everybody is laid out. It's a bad night."

"Night? It must be nearly daylight by this time."

"Oh, no! It is not midnight yet."

"Not midnight? Why, I didn't turn in until"— Anthony raised himself suddenly. "Good Lord! Have I slept all day?"

"You certainly have."

"Whose room is this?"

"Your room of course. Here, take one of these capsules. It will settle your stomach."

"Better give me something to settle my bill if I've been here that long. I'm broke again."

"You're not fully awake yet," said the doctor. "People have funny ideas when they're sick. Let me feel your pulse."

"The boys will think I'm lost. I never did such a thing before."

"Where do you think you are?" inquired the physician.

"I don't know. It's a nice little hotel, but"—

"This isn't a hotel. This is a ship."

"Doctor, you shouldn't make fun of a man at the point of death. It isn't professional."

"Fact," said the doctor, abstractedly gazing at his watch while he held Anthony's wrist between his fingers. "We are 150 miles out of New York. The first officer told me you were considerably intoxicated when you came aboard, but," he continued brusquely, rising and closing his watch with a snap, "you will remember it all in a little while, Mr. Locke."

"Wait!"

Again Anthony pressed his throbbing temples with both hot hands and strove to collect his whirling wits.

"Now, I know you are wrong, doctor, and I'll tell you why. You see, my name isn't Locke. It's Anthony. Locke went away on a ship, but I stayed in New York, understand? Well, he's the fellow you're talking to, and I'm asleep somewhere down around the Bowery."

"Nevertheless this is a ship," the physician patiently explained, "and you're on it, and I'm talking to you. What is more, you have not exchanged identities with your friend Anthony, for your ticket reads 'Jefferson Locke.'"

Deputy Grand Lodge officers, under the direction of Deputy Grand Master E. A. Prickett on Monday night installed the following officers of Clallam Lodge No. 72, I. O. O. F. for the ensuing year: Noble Grand, P. F. Harley; Vice-Grand, A. J. Cosser; Sec'y, C. E. Gordon; Financial Secretary, W. A. Rogers; Treasurer, E. A. Prickett; Chaplain, E. H. Finch; Warden, Ira Finch; Conductor, O. H. Burgman; C. A. Bork and J. A. Johnson, N. G. Supporters; G. W. Jeffries and Sylvester Yandle V. G. Supporters; John Rychner and Wm. Cooper Scene Supporters; T. J. Ball Inside Guardian; A. J. Pabst Past Grand and Trustee. One member was admitted by card and another initiated in the Second Degree. After the business of the evening a sumptuous luncheon was served in the spacious dining room. The lodge starts out the new year with flattering prospects.

Fred Farmer was here this week finishing up matters in regard to the new building he will begin to erect some time in February. He has secured a lease to 160 foot frontage on the wharf north of the Glendale creamery and will erect a corrugated steel building 110 by 60 on concrete piers. Fred left Thursday for Seattle but will return the early part of the week to remain. He has the agency for the Union Oil Co. and that, with his building and other matters, will keep him busy until he is ready to open his store and office. It looks good to see so many young men coming to Angeles to start in various business enterprises; we need young blood to help build up the city.

Mr. Phillips, the new telephone exchange man, went to Seattle last week to meet his wife and babies, who were returning from a visit to Portland. They spent the New Year in Seattle, coming down here Friday and going right to house keeping in the Nat Hawkins residence on Tenth street. Mr. Phillips is very enthusiastic about the future greatness of Port Angeles and is delighted with the climate, scenery, and people, as well as the good prospects.

The Olympic-Leader is the official city paper.

THE WOMEN'S AUXILIARY

All members of the Women's Auxiliary to the Commercial Club are earnestly requested to be present at the regular monthly meeting next Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 in the library building. Matters of importance are to be discussed and voted on. At the last meeting of the Congregational Brotherhood the subject of moving the present library building was discussed and many tho't it not advisable at the amount it would cost to move and repair. A committee consisting of Messrs. Lindsay, DeSwarte, and Beam was appointed to confer with a committee of the ladies and talk over the proposition of putting up a new building to serve the purpose until a Carnegie could be built. A report of this committee meeting will be presented next Tuesday for the body as a whole to take action on, and it is hoped a large majority of the members will show their interest by being in attendance. A cordial invitation is extended to all newcomers in our city to identify themselves with this active body of civic workers. All that is necessary to become a member is to pay the monthly dues of ten cents and assist in the work if possible.
