THINGS DOING BY NEXT WEEK

,treets Torn Up; Concrete Being Laid; Pumping Machinery Being Installed.

"By next week it will look as tho there was something doing," were the parting words of Engineer Morse of the contracting firm of Lewis, Wiley & Morse, as he boarded the steamer Tuesday. And with our streets already piled full of rock and sand and the cement mixer coming along on wheels we can well believe it.

About six to seven weeks, it 'is said, will be necessary to get things in shape for sluicing, but after they are ready, Front street, requiring 9,000 yards of dirt, can be filled in three days. The entire job, both districts, it is estimated, will require seven months.

The big pumps and dynamo arived on a barge, together with pipe ınd other material, Monday, and are ıow being installed in the power ıouse alongside Lincoln street dock. Two of the large pieces weigh eleven tons each and have been hauled into position with a donkey engine. Another barge of lumber, intended partly for the street work, also arrived yesterday.

The concrete base, on which will stand a retaining wall from three to five feet thick at bottom, one foot wide on top, and from six to twelve feet high, will be laid on the north side from Lincoln to Laurel by tonight and doubtless from Front to First on the west side of Laurel tomorrow. It is the intention to fill these blocks first; after the bases are in and forms made a trestle will be built along each side that the mixer may work from above.

Work has not commenced on Railroad avenue, it having been impossible to get old growth piling in accordance with specifications. Two rafts are expected today, however, one from up sound and the other from Victoria, when with two drivers on the job the work will be hustled along. Things have been at a standstill on the railroad trestle, building east to Oak, for the same reason.

The raising of the business street o meet the new grade started Monlay morning when C. A. Spinney, a ıouse-mover with a record of 2,000 buildings to his credit, got men and naterial on the ground for work on he "Creamery building;," owned by Dave Morse. With something like ighty buildings to be raised from ix to twelve feet, and at a cost rangıg from about $100 to $1,000 and pwards, there will be considerable oing within the next two months.

Mr. Morse will not attempt to ıise the Morse Block, but will ıange the floors, losing one story ereby. A horseshoe balcony velve feet in width will first be ılt on the second floor, eight feet low the ceiling. This will be proded with rest rooms, dressing oms and other conveniences. Mr. rschberg will move a large part of s stock to the balcony and continue siness there while the floor is beg lowered. It will be necessary rebuild the front of the building.

The Lutz brick stores will be hand much the same way, a change of ors and a new front being thought eferable. It is likely another story l be added here.

Piling is complete for the new t office block and material the concrete work is being dered.

TEACHERS ENGAGED FOR NEXT YEAR

Every School is Overflowing; New Teacher Added on Lincoln Heights.

An important meeting of the school board was held Tuesday evening at which time all the present corps of teachers were re-elected for next year with the exception of three who have tendered their resignations. Robert Gilmore who has successfully filled the position of principal for the past three years has resigned.

Mr. McGillivray, the English teacher, expects to take a trip thru Canada to complete his collegiate course and Miss Boughton, the music teacher expects to take a trip through California with her parents. Mr. White, the present city superintendent, has been retained at an increase in salary, which will give him $1550 next year. At the next meeting of the school board, plans will be outlined for re-arranging the course of study for next year, so as to include a commercial course and domestic science.

The basement at the Lincoln Heights school has been fitted up for a class room to accommodate part of the primary pupils, as Miss Ester's room was overcrowded. A new teacher arrived Monday morning from Seattle to take charge.

This crowded condition exists in practically all the rooms and if the population keeps on at the present rate of increase, it looks as though the school board would be up against another building proposition before fall.

BOSSY STILL RULES THE TOWN

Councilmen Propose to Rent Streets for Cow Pasture at Expense of Property Owners.

The gentle bossy still ruleth the town and incidentally the council. In the matter of the legality of allowing one cow to roam the streets and prohibiting others from the same privilege, the city attorney submitted a verbal opinion to the effect that there was no precedent in law covering the subject, and the law of common sense would have to govern. He would not say that such action would be illegal, though some of the councilmen were evidently anxious to shift the responsibility if he would simply say the word 'illegal.' He thought the enforcement of the practical to say the least, and later in a written opinion drawn from his pocket he advocated a compromise allowing cows to be staked out on the streets where they would not interfere with traffic.

The ordinance was taken up in its amended form as laid over from last week. After the status of the ordinance was noted, Dustman arose, he stated, to explain his position. Some weeks ago he had moved and Shields had seconded the motion for the city attorney to bring in an ordinance eliminating the cows. He wished to state at this time that if an ordinance covering cows only was presented he would support it. The city attorney who had included the other features of the ordinance defended the ordinance on the ground that it corrected defects in existing ordinances, and in fact was taken almost bodily from the Seattle ordinances governing the running at large of stock, that if he had followed instructions literally, young stock and males would be free to roam and we would have the nuisance without the benefits.

Shields moved to reconsider Section 1 which permits one cow; this carried by a vote of 4 to 3. The vote to adopt the section as amended was then again taken and declared carried, tho there was a dispute as to how Fowler voted. A poll however, showed that Wilcox, Fowler, Bigelow and Fleming voted to amend to allow one cow. Shields then moved to indefinitely postpone further consideration of ordinance, seconded by Fisher. Lost. Fisher and Shields alone voting aye. Fleming then moved the adoption of the ordinance as amend-

RAILROAD ORDINANCE PASSED

May Place Tracks on Third North and Extended, Thus Reaching Base of Spit.

All members were present at Tuesday's council meeting, and another long session was had, several important matters coming on for consideration, also a large grist of minor routine matters.

The Street committee recommended that Mr. Morse be required to open the approach to alley to traffic at the new post office site and to place red lanterns at obstructions at night. So ordered.

Fire, Light and Water committees reported having examined city jail and being of opinion that some repairs should be made, also that better toilet facilities be placed at city hall. Messrs. Wilcox, Fowler and Bigelow were named a committee to report further on the jail, and were given power to install necessary accommodations at City Hall.

Power Rate Sheet Too High.

Chairman of Light Committee Dustman, reported that the city electrician had been directed to get material asked for, with exception of time switch at power station. The report was adopted. In regard to automatic switch for turning on and off street lights, Mr. Church was authorized to install this also upon recommendation of the committee. The power rate of 6 cents was considered too high, and rate sheet was returned to the city electrician for further report. Answering query of Mr. Dustman, the city electrician reported that he had a letter from Mr. Godfrey asking in regards to equipment for sub-station . He thought everything would be here and installed by May 1.

Special committee on 8th street and K street asked and was granted another week in which to report. The property owners are figuring on a change of route at K street, understood to be to the middle of the block between K and I where there is a natural cut, whereas at K street there is a very high bluff.

Third Street Matters Settled.

City attorney reported that the railroad people had held up money for payment of extension of Third street, refusing to pay until ordinance granting franchise over Third

HOW WILD ANIMALS LIVE

A $250,000.00 Production; Pictures Taken in Many Lands of Many Curious Animals.

Someone has said, "Never trust a man who does not love animals," and few of us are without the innate love for "life" that makes us sympathize with wild animals. We all encourage children in their love for animals as it gives them a wider sympathy with mankind.

The management of the Dream Theater has secured five reels of wonderful animal pictures for tonight. This is a $250,000 production which is said to surpass Paul Raineys African Hunt pictures. Over three years' of time, much money and infinite patience, dangers and hardship are the price of these pictures. In a few hours one may select from the entire world's animal life, interesting phases, dramatic, tragic, and even comic epsiodes in the life of animals The element of humor is not wanting in these pictures. A young bear, with an inherited taste for honey and a greater appetite than discretion, goes hunting for honey on an old tree trunk. You should see what the bees did to him.

The evening's entertainment will open at 6:30 sharp. Admission 20c and 10c.

A suggestion to our city council: Why not substitute the cow bell for the time-honored gavel? We believe the majority of the members of the present council would feel more at home! And we might as well make them confortable while they are with us. Surely the new spirit which Port Angeles has shown lately will in the future elect councilmen who will represent all the people, and not a few who happen to own cows!

SOUTH HILL PEOPLE WILL GRADE STREETS

District Three Blocks Wide and Mile Long—Heart of the City

At a meeting of the South Hill Improvement Club held Wednesday evening to consider estimates submitted by Engineer Gehrke, it was decided to request the council to proceed with the improvement of a teacher, expects to return to Toranto, Oak and Cherry, and cross streets between First and the Boulevard, on a grade not to exceed ten per cent. at any point. Tho the council had already taken up Lincoln, Third to Boulevard, it was thot best to include it in the district in order to avoid expense of a trestle thru the gulch. At the same time Lincoln is the cheapest dumping ground for the earth excavated o nthe other streets.

It is believed inasmuch as South Hill is the most valuable portion of town, as well as the most progressive, having over 75 per cent. of the new residences, no difficulty will be experienced in financing an improvement along the proposed lines.

L. O. O. M. MEMORIAL DAY

The Loyal Order of Moose will hold memorial services in the Opera house Sunday, April 19th, L. W. Long, district deputy supreme dictator, to be the orator of the day. Hon. Edgar Easter, deputy supreme dictator, will also be present. The public is invited to the services which will begin at 2:30.

Moose brothers are requested to meet the supreme officers in Odd Fellows hall at 1:30 sharp and march to the Opera house.

GOVAN WILL HAVE CHARGE

State to Complete Hood Canal Road, 9 Miles, by Day Labor Instead of Contract.

Work will start in a few days on the second stretch of nine miles of the Olympic Highway, down the west shore of Hood canal, says the Port Townsend Leader. This unit begins at Hama Hama, the southern terminal of the work now under way, on the contract of R. Horace Hill of this city, and will complete the road to a point in the neighborhood of Lilliwaup, not far from a connection with the road which has been built northward from Hoodsport. The work on the second stretch of highway will be done by the state by day work, and not by contract, as was originally intended. Construction will be under the supervision of David Govan, of Clallam county, a road builder of much experience, who has made a splendid reputation for himself by the character of the work he has done in Clallam.

Mr. Govan was in the city last evening, accompanied by a representative of the state highway commissioner's office. He will leave this morning on the Puget for Port Gamble, where he will take passage for Hama Hama on the boat running up Hood canal. At that point he will be met by Highway Commissioner Roy and a camp site will be located. The assembling of the road crew and the necessary equipment and material will immediately follow, and it is expected that within ten days' time work will be under way. Mr. Govan says that between eighty and a hundred men will be employed and that the nine-mile stretch of road will be completed in about four months. Contractor Hill expects to have his portion of the road finished by September, insuring the opening of the road for traffic by fall. This will give at least two months of good weather in which tourists can make the trip by automobile into the Peninsula, without the inconvenience of having their machines handled by boat.

Mr. Govan was a member of the party which made an inspection of the route of the state road along Hood canal, the decision being reached that the highway could easily be built for $6,000 a mile, the sum

THIS IS THE REAL QUESTION

Why Shouldn't Every Man Himself Pay the Expense of Keeping His Own Cow?

The cow question is not a question of whether or not my neighbor is to be permitted to keep a cow. It is a question of whether or not I am longer to be compelled to pay for the keep of my neighbor's cow.

In no town in the country, half the size of Port Angeles, are cows allowed to run at large. Were it not that we have been isolated for years, we would not think of permitting such a nuisance to exist for a moment. If you and I were to take a trip to any halfway civilized community and see the beautiful lawns, the neat parking strips, the rows of fine trees, that follow the banishment of the cow and consequent removal of fences, we would be ashamed to longer permit such conditions to exist here.

In every town, immediately the fences come down, improvements follow as a matter of course. The fence is responsible for the existance of more ugliness than any other thing that can be named. The cow is responsible for the fence.

If it were not for my neighbor's cow I'd take my fence down tomorrow. I'd open the door on my yard. Thereafter I'd have to keep it trim and neat, and the street in front of it, merely as a matter of pride.

Were it not for the cow, I would plant shade trees along the sidewalk. I can't do it now. I don't want the unsightly board cribs I would have to put up to protect those trees. I've seen trees planted in a hundred places along the streets about town. Where are those trees today? Broken down and destroyed by the neighbor's cows.

Every town, every village, in progressive communities, has shade trees lining its streets. People who come here must of necessity come from progressive towns. They remark the absence of shade trees, the unsightly fences, the general lack of that citified air, if you please. They receive an unfavorable impression.

We say the real estate men want to get rid of the cow. Why? Because the real estate men have found by bitter experience that people don't want homes in what appears to them to be a shiftless community. It matters not how industrious the people may be, it don't show up, it can't show up, with such lawns and streets. The cow prevents the sale of property, and the real estate men know it well.

The business men don't want the cow. Why? Because they know that more than any other one thing the cow has prevented the growth of of the town, the addition of new blood, of new customers. The cow has kept business at a standstill. It matters not how attractive the climate and scenery may be, people of means from progressive communities are not going to locate, do not locate, in a town that has shiftlessness stamped on its face.

There are twelve families in my block. One of them keeps a cow. To keep his cow out of my yard I had to build a fence along the street; it cost me $35. Two other fences cost me $25. The other fences in the block are as good or better than mine—a total investment of $600 in pasturage for my neighbor's cow.

And that does not include the upkeep of those fences, nor the repair of sidewalks, nor the lessened value of our property due to lack of ordinary improvements. Nor does it include the damage to my garden everytime someone leaves a gate open, or a cow manages to work it open when we are absent. Does my neighbor offer to pay for the damage at such times? He does not.

Every new resident in Port Angeles who builds a house has to invest from $25 to $100 in fences. He has to pay that much towards fencing the pasturage for his neighbor's cows. There have been over 150 houses built in Port Angeles in the past eighteen months. Not less than $3,500 has been invested in fences; more likely it will run over $5,000.

Now I've no objection to my neighbor's keeping a cow. I buy milk of my neighbor. I want him to continue to keep a cow. I expect to pay what that milk is worth. But I want him to pay the bills for pasturage or for herding and for hay. I don't want him to force me to pay for the keep of his cow and then pay for the milk besides.

My neighbor is a poor man. He needs his cow to help eke out his living. His children need the milk What of that? Poor is a relative term. Here in Port Angeles we are all poor. Yet we are none of us so miserably, contemptibly poor that we cannot afford to pay for the keep of our one cow.

Again, I've no objection to the cows running at large in Councilman Fleming's ward, nor in Councilman Bigelow's nor in Councilman Wilcox's. Nor for that matter in Councilman Dustman's. If they and the people in their wards want free pasturage for their cows, all well and good. But in my ward, the most closely settled in the city, the best improved, the one making the most rapid growth, and largely because we have few cows, the great majority of the people are like me—they don't keep cows and they don't want cows running at large.

Why, then, should these councilmen seek to continue this imposition on me and my neighbors? Why not establish limits that will meet the needs of those living in the center of the town as well as the convenience of those living in the outskirts?

BEAUTIFUL SERVICES EASTER

Alpine Lilies Breathed Spirit of Spring and Renewed Hope and Life.

Easter church services were never so well attended in Angeles as they were this year, the seating capacity of every church being taxed to its uttermost to accommodate the many worshippers.

The floral decorations were very beautiful, Easter lilies and carnations vieing in beauty with the more simple, modest flowers of the woods whose delicate perfume filled the air, breathing the spirit of spring and renewed hope and life.

At the Congregational church the song service both morning and evening was very beautiful; Mrs. Smith's rendition of Ashford's Easter Prelude at the morning service and Celestial Voices at the evening was most impressive. The church is to be congratulated upon having an organist capable of bringing forth such music. The choir soloists, Mrs. Luppen and Cecil McNutt, sang both morning and evening. Rev Smith preached a joyful Easter sermon, inspiring his congregation with fresh courage and hope by his interpretation of the resurrection.

The Episcopal congregation listened with interest to the inspiring sermon preached by Archdeacon Hilton of Seattle. They had a vested choir under the leadership of Mrs. Troy to sing the beautiful Easter service of the church. Miss Ethel Welch and Mrs. Troy each sang a solo with Prof. Lange as organist. His opening prelude was grand, as he is a master hand at the organ. Holy communion was administered at the close of the service.

Rev. Phillips of the First M. E. Church, in his sermon Sunday morning, had a message of joy and hope for his congregation and the songs of praise and gladness rendered so admirably by the choir made a most effective impression upon the large audience. In the evening an Easter concert was given by the choir under the efficient leadership of the choir director, Miss Holt. The excellence of the chorus work reflects credit upon her ability as director and the solos were also especially enjoyable.

Mrs. VanKuren and the young people are to be commended for the beautiful decoration which made Lincoln Heights church so attractive

CELEBRATED GOLDEN WEDDING

Mr. and Mrs. Hart celebrated their golden wedding anniversary at Georgetown (Seattle) last Sunday. There were thirty-six relatives present, children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren.. Plates were laid for fifty, but some could not attend. Homer Hart, H. G. Fritch, Jr., and Clyde Hart of Clallam county were present.

A PLEA FOR THE POOR MAN'S COW

Our Lincoln Heights Correspondent Presents "the Other Side" of the Cow Controversy.

The cow question seems to be the most interesting one at present, and the councilmen are having a serious problem to solve. It is an old saying that, "There are always two sides to a question," but this one has more than two, and calling the councilmen names, or "crazy," wont have any good effect on them or settle the question.

One of the sides has not been discussed in the papers as yet; that is the humane side, or perhaps human would be better. If, as is generally conceded, "The most valuable assets of the nation are its children," their side should be considered and it is a well known fact that in this age a large per cent of our babies are compelled to depend on the fourfooted mother for their sustenance, and the milk from one cow is believed to be more healthful for the child than that of a mixture from many. Again, it was difficult for many parents to buy the amount of milk necessary, when it could be had for five cents per quart of a very generous measure from a kind neighbor. It will be much more difficult to pay one dollar for fourteen quarts, exact measure, and we have no assurance that the price will not be higher when the town cow is banished, and roads are muddy.

Good cows made money for their owners with milk at five cents per quart, when hay was much higher in price than now, and many a quart was given to the needy or sick.

Again there is much feed growing in the outlying districts of the city, that should be eaten by cattle, otherwise it will grow up rankly and when the dry season comes, some careless smoker may drop a cigar stub, and start a fire that will be more devastating than are the cows. There are other nuisances in this city more harmful than the cows. Why not first obliterate those which are endangering life, health and soul, things that are not beneficial to any one? A cow on the sidewalk may leave that which is unsightly, but is easily seen and can be avoided. A hidden evil is much more dangerous.

Is itjust to ignore the things that are of vital interest to the laboring man and his family, the man who has only his blaor to sell, and cater to the wishes of the business men whose incomes depend very much on the ability of the laboring man being able to buy the things they have to sell?

No doubt the councilmen will receive much abuse if they don't banish the cows, but it wont hurt them as it would to know that little children were crying for milk.

Cows grazing on the streets are a much prettier sight than the thistles with which they are so much adorned and are better evidences of prosperity.

One of the empty houses spoken of last week is now occupied by Mr. Ralph Sisson and family. Mr. Sisson is running a milk wagon.

Mr. Higgins has sold his property on B near 11th to Mr. Beckner, who came from Montana recently. Mr. Higgins will remain here until fall, when they expect to go to their home at Fern Hill near Tacoma.

Many here are afflicted with the Oregon fever and are trying to sell their homes here to locate in that place where they can keep cows all they wish with none to molest or make them afraid of the business or real estate men.

News is very scarce this week, at least the writer has not heard much.

NATURE STUDY CLUB ORGANIZED

Resolutions Passed On Closing Day of Institute Give Credit Where Credit is Due.

Clallam County Teachers Institute closed last Friday afternoon, after a very instructive and helpful session of one week. The principal speakers, Dr. Bolton, of the U. of W., State Supt. Mrs. Preston, and Prof. Kreager of the State College at Pullman, made a highly instructive and entertaining force of instructors. The local talent in addresses, songs, and readings was a strong feature. The spelling and declamation contests coming at the same time made it possible for the teachers to be with their pupils entering these contests. It is quite evident that interest through the country is fast becoming keener in the spelling and declamation and such public contests go a long way toward making it so.

Supt. Geisness deserves much credit for planning and carrying out so successful an institute. At the close, the following resolutions were presented:

A Natural Science Club.

A want has long been felt by some of the teachers of the county, of available information on the common plant and animal forms found in this section. No textbook in general circulation gives much help on local forms. This matter was brought up at the close of Institute Friday afternoon and after discussion a Natural Science Club was organized with the intent of becoming better acquainted with the life of plants and animals, with which this county abounds in a peculiar manner, and placing the information gained at the disposal of the teachers and the public. Mosses are to be taken up especially this season. It is not intended to make the work unnecessarily technical.

Miss Sara E. Brown, instructor in botany in Central High School, was chosen president, Mr. A. S. Foster, who has carried on quite an extensive study of mosses and lichens, was chosen vice-president, Miss Lizee of the city schools, secretary, and as a committee of two to draft a constitution, Miss Lorena Fulmer and Gomer Jones were chosen, The new officers at once set to work and the teachers will hear from them as soon as a definite plan can be arrived at.

The committee on resolutions respectfully submit the following:

1st. Resolved that we as teachers of Clallam County, recognize the fact that the salary of our county superintendents is inadequate and that we recommend that the teachers and all persons interested in educational matters use their influence with their representative, to remedy this condition at the meeting of the next legislature.

2nd. Resolved that we as a committee do indorse the idea of consolidation of rural schools, that they may receive the broader education now offered in our cities.

3rd. Resolved that we heartily indorse the spelling, declamatory, and industrial contests, and believe they should be made a yearly feature of our schools.

4th. Resolved that we extend a vote of thanks to Mrs. Josephine Preston, Dr. Bolton, Prof. Kreager, Supt. Zent and Supt. Delanty, and all others who so kindly contributed toward making this institute a success.

5h. Resolved that we extend a rising vote of thanks to those clubs that sent delegates, to our meeting, to the ladies auxiliary that tendered the reception of the teachers, and to the board of directors for use of the school building during the institute.

6th Resolved that we, as teachers of Clallam County, put ourselves on record as favoring the passage of the Teacher's Retirement Fund bill, and that our representive be instructed to use all means in his power to secure the passage of thisbill.

NEWS FROM THE STATE CAPITOL

OLYMPIA, April 14.—With business men of North Yakima actively cooperating with the state department of agriculture this year for the first time, prospects are bright for an excellent state fair that will live up to the reputation made by the department in 1913.

The agricultural advisory board will meet with the North Yakima business men Monday, April 20, and at that time it is expected a manager will be selected who will work with the business men's committee. Meanwhile, the officials of the department of agriculture have been busy making all possible arrangements for this year's show.

An entire day devoted to swine, to be known as Hog Day, will be one of the attractions at the fair this year, plans and arrangements for which are at present being made by Dr. H. T. Graves, acting commissioner of agriculture.

Last year, according to hog experts, the swine display at the Yakima fair was the best in the country, being pronounced by A. J. Lovejoy, president of the International Livestock show and acknowledged leader of hog judges in the United States. This year it is the intention of the acting commissioner to make all livestock exhibits as strong as possible.

Already a large number of prizes have been tendered the department which are sure to arouse an unsual interest in the swine exhibit and more are in process of arrangement.

The National Duroc-Jersey Record association offers for a herd consisting of boar and three sows, a first prize of $20, second of $10 and third of $5, and an additional handsome silver trophy to the best young herd under one year, consisting of boar and three sows. This association offers also for barrow under one year a first prize of $8, second $4, and third $2; all animals to be registered in the National Association, and the department will add the same amounts.

The American Hampshire Swine association, the American Berkshire association and others have also tendered attractive cash prizes in addition to valuable silver trophies.

Notations made by Mr. Lovejoy on such exhibits as Berkshires, Duroc-Jersey and others indicate that the hog exhibitors of this state would be among the winners at any show, and it is the intention ofthe department of agriculture to make this feature of the livestock exhibit this year of such a magnitude as to attract exhibitors and hog fanciers from all parts of the northwest.

During the past year the business of the industrial insurance commission has increased 55.95 per cent over that of the previous 18 months but the monthly administrative expenses of the department have increased only 4.25 per cent, an analysis of the finances of the commission shows.

Comparisions are made with the receipts and expenses of the commission for the first 18 months of its existence. During this period its receipts were $1,703,556.90, an average of $94,642.05 per month, and expenditures were $155,000, an average of $8,611.11 per month.

During the 12 months ending March 31, 1914, receipts were $1,771,145.71, an average of $147,595.47 per month, and administrative expenses were $107,917.77 an average of $8,993.15 per month, or less than 6 per cent of receipts.

Miles M. Dawson, a consulting actuary of New York city, recognized as a national authority on insurance has written the commission, commending it upon its economical administration, stating in part:

"When we first began to talk of workmen's compensation laws in this country and I cited the very low expense of management in Norway and Austria, ranging from about 10 to 11 per cent, it was everywhere declared that in our politics-ridden country no such experience as this relatively, you have demonstrated could by any possibility be expected, and yet within your first two years, which are always the most expensive it to be possible in a relatively newly settled state, with its population scattered, to do this work at a lower rate of expense than has ever so far been achieved in any other country."

Educational work, to show the value of good roads and the progress made in this state in road building, will be taken up by the state highway department. Sets of stereopticon slides are being prepared for the exhibition.

Now that Washington's first minimum wage conference has recommended $10 as the minimum wage for girls and women employed in department and other stores, the industrial welfare commission plans to proceed at once toward the fixing of minimum wages for women workers in factories and laundries. A meeting of the welfare commission will be held here next Tuesday at which dates for these conferences will be fixed and conferences selected. It is also believed that at this time the commission will order into effect the $10 wage recommended for store employes.

Although the legislatures of a number of states passed, in the early months of 1913, minimum wage laws similar to that adopted in this state, Washington has made faster progress than any except Oregon, toward putting the minimum wage into effect. In Oregon, before the law was passed a state survey of wages and cost of living had been made, on which the welfare commission was able to take action at once.

In all other states except Washington, it was necessary for the welfare commissions created by law to make their own investigations. Now that this work has been completed matters are moving forward rapidly and the state of Washington was first except Oregon, to announce the recommendation of a conference.

It is expected that the conferences on factory and laundry wages may be held within 30 days.

The public service commission Wednesday entered upon the rehearing of the case involving interurban rates between Seattle and Tacoma. The case involves a complete revaluation, brought up to date, of the interurban properties and also the reasonableness of the existing fares and promises to be one of the most important of recent months. April 17, at Seattle, is assigned for the hearing involving commutation tickets on the interurban operating between Seattle and Everett.

Beginning May 11 at North Yakima, the commission will take testimony upon the valuation of the Eastern Washington properties of the Pacific Power & Light company. The commission's engineers have been working on this valuation for many months. May 13 at North Yakima will be heard protests against the existing rates of the Cowichee Telephone company and the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph company.

Since the first crop condition report was received from the various inspectors by the department of agriculture, the Blalock Fruit company and other growers in the vicinity of Walla Walla have decided to return to the smudge pot this year as a preventative against loss by the late frosts, and find themselves confronted by such a scarcity of smudge pots that lard pails and every kind of an empty can that will serve the purpose is being pressed into service.

For the benefit of farmers of this state the department of agriculture has secured a supply of valuable bulletins, which will be distributed free to farmers requesting them. They include bulletins on the tuberculin test, tuberculosis, management of the dairy herd, dehorning cattle, hog cholera, pig management, records of dairy cows, bacteria in milk, breeds of dairy cattle, and the making and feeding of silage.

The state prison board, which held a quarterly session at Walla Walla last week, recommended fewer discharges from the penitentiary than have been granted at any previous meeting for years past. street to north city limits via K street is passed. Mr. Brumfield stated that the railroad company considered the proposed amendments for crossings and rejected same because of the expense and the fact that there are no streets extended across Third street north along the Sampson tract. The railroad company was ready to turn over its portion of the cost of extending street whenever franchise is adopted as offered. Everything is settled as far as title is concerned.

Dustman moved that ordinance be read in full and placed on third reading. It was so read. It provides that the railroad may place one or more tracts along Third Street Extended, Third Street North, crossing K and L streets and alleys in blocks 136 and 137, and the other streets to the north city limits, which leaves it headed out on the spit. One track may be put in now and additional tracks at any future time. All under usual conditions protecting city. Upon motion of Dustman, seconded by Fisher, the ordinance was put upon its final passage and adopted by unanimous vote. Mr. Brumfield then placed in the hands of the city clerk the railroad company's draft of some $1250 to pay its half of the street extension purchase.

The city attorney was then instructed to secure the deeds to the tracts from the banks and place them on record.

Extension Over Harbor Area.

In reporting on his trip to Olympia, the city attorney expressed considerable satisfaction in being vindicated in his position as to the extension of the streets over the harbor area. He held a considerable session with Land Commissioner Savidge whom he found was not informed as to the real status of the matter, and his letter together with the opinion of the attorney general was only general, not applying to local conditions. The maps and profiles sent from this city at the time of the adoption of the ordinance extending these streets across the harbor area was brought to light. In the roll was the opinion of former Commissioner Ross that the city had legally complied with the provisions of the law and that the streets were legally extended. Why they were not made of record is hard to say. He also saw the attorney general and that officer stated that his opinion was general and not applicable to Port Angeles status.

Revenue Case To Be Reheard.

The city attorney reported also that while away he had seen the city attorney of Olympia in regard to the recent decision of the Supreme Court cutting the revenues of cities to 10 mills, and found an individual act-thought the bill correct. No action. ing in behalf of others that had intervened for a rehearing in the case. He was of the opinion that a rehearing would be granted and the ruling reversed. Mr. Smith had also conferred with others in regard the decision and all agree that it is very extraordinary to dig up an old law and throw municipalities into a state of anarchy by construing that it is in force, in the face of such adverse conditions.

Municipal Water Works.

In regard power of cities of third class to construct and operate municipal water works, the city attorney read law giving absolute power; he also suggested that the improvement law could be invoked for the purpose taking in the whole city. Also that the city has the power to install auxiliary fire protective systems, and to acquire lands for municipal purposes inside and outside of city limits. He had also met Mr. Brewer in Olympia, who stated that it would be cheaper for the city to purchase ...esent plant than to build a new plant. In this respect the attorney stated that the city had the same powers to purchase. No action was taken at this time, the matter being in the hands of a special committee.

City Engineer Filion reported adversely to pay for repair of private sewer on Francis street and claim for $5 was disallowed.

H. W .Meredith protested that his light bill was exorbitant and asked reduction. Electrician Church thought hte bill correct. No action.

Crescent Transfer Co. by W. D. McMahan thought the license of autos of his company at $15 compared with the other macines and the fact that he only operated a few months a year was not fair. No action.

Otto Brockhaus wrote council to effect that eye witnesses had informed him that his cow had been driven to the pound before the restricted hour and asked return of his money. Filed.

An ordinance was introduced by Shields appropriating $2031. from the current expense fund to pay assessments on city hall property and other government land in block 32, which assessments cannot be paid back later. In this matter the city attorney held that in paying this assessment the city would secure rights which the government could not take away. Referred.

No Bids On East End.

The time arriving for the opening of bids for the big district east of town, it was announced by the clerk that there was no bids offered. The reason is said to be a defective resolution in some respects.

About fifteen employees of Hahn & Gierson, contractors on Francis street, petition council for payment of their claims holding that it is the city's duty to protect them. The city attorney held that their action was against the bonding company and that he would do all he could to assist them but that the city was not liable. The bonding company settled some of the claims at a discount which was admission of their liability. He also held that the 25 per cent held by the city and later paid to Johnson & Co. for completion of the work did not in any manner complicate the city.

Must Clear Vacant Lots.

Shields moved that city attorney bring an ordinance requiring owners of vacant property within city limits to clear lots of brush and rubish. Carried, all aye.

Finance committee reported adversely to claim of Christ Kuppler for appraising the loss to city building on the ground that the insurance company had authorized the appraisement and not the city. Dustman wanted the matter to go over one week and so moved. Carried.

Wilcox called attention to necessity of a light at 7th and Washington streets, the high dark walk there being dangerous. Referred to light committee with power to act.

Upon suggestion of the mayor the smokestack at power station was ordered painted at a cost of $15.

Mr. Fleming called attention to need of street work in his district, on 9th, 10th and 11th streets. Fowler of street committee moved that $250.00 be allowed for work. The matter went over one week for fuller report and estimate of cost.

Upon motion of Dustman, table for newspaper men was ordered placed inside of railing, among the elite.

Street Supt. notice of assessments for sidewalks built on 4th street was referred to street committee.

Fowler of street committee thought the walk on south side of First between Lincoln and Laurel should be renewed; so ordered.

The contract with Johnson & Co. for improvement of Third street to K, andK to water front was read and mayor and clerk authorized to sign same.

COUNTY SUPERINDENT'S OFFICE

In one or two of the local papers the name of Willie Bugge was omitted in the list of prize winners in the spelling contest. Willie Bugge had a perfect record.

Sixteen perfect contestants after three hours of spelling is a good record. We are sorry that the funds would not admit of more substantial prizes for the winners.

Plans are on foot for a series of Community Center meetings the latter part of May. At these meetings the plans for the Industrial meetings to be given next fall as preliminary to the state contest will be fully discussed.

The State Superintendent has notified this office that the next convention of county superintendents will be held in Olympia, June 8, 9 and 10.

This office desires to extend to the officers and members of the different literary and civic organizations who sent delegates to the institute and otherwise contributed to its support Special thanks is due the members of the Ladies Auxiliary for the reception tendered visiting instructors and teachers. The annual Teachers Institute should be an event of interest to all the people of Clallam county who have the interest of the schools at heart.

The alleged disrespect shown certain speakers under the head of general discussion Wednesday afternoon of Institute was due to the fact that at that hour the spelling contest was in progress in rooms 7 and 8, Central building, and the presence of the presiding officer was needed there. There was no intention of showing any disrespect to any of the participants and we hopethat the parties in question will pardon the seeming lack of interest when the circumstances are known.

The State School Industrial Exhibit will be held in Tacoma October 28-30 in connection with the State Teachers' Association. A preliminary contest will be held in Clallam county October 24th, and all teachers and directors are urged to encourage the movement to the end that we may have a very creditable exhibit in Tacoma and encourage the move toward more and better industrial training in the schools. The exhibit should not be overlooked as a means of advertising the resources of Clallam county.

The following book companies contributed toward the prizes given; American Book Company, Ginn and Company and the Macmillan Company.

PLANS FOR ANNUAL ROSE SHOW

The Women's Auxiliary of the Commercial Club held its regular monthly meeting last Tuesday afternoon at the library room. The reports of committees were heard and bills ordered paid, after which some time was spent in discussing plans for the annual Flower Show to be held sometime in June. Mrs. F. E. Warner was appointed chairman of the entertainment committee with privilege of choosing her own helpers A committee to take charge of the premium list and other matters in connection with the Flower Show was left for the president to appoint at her leisure. As the librarian, Miss MacClure, expects to go to Seattle next week the Auxiliary voted to give her fifteen dollars to expend in books for the library. She will purchase a number that have been called for by patrons of the library, also some of the late juvenile books. As the attendance at the Auxiliary meetings has not been as large as it should be, the ladies decided to try meeting at the Commercial Club rooms for a while, as it is much more central and convenient for a majority of the members. A hearty vote of thanks was extended to the managers of the Dream and Star Theatre for the courtesies extended by them to the Auxiliary in advertising their entertainments free of charge. All members of the Auxiliary were urged to assist in selling tickets for the Calico Ball and to do whatever they could to make it a success.

The president reported that the new manager of the Olympic Hotel dining room, Mr. Hancock, had not only promised to throw open the dining room for the night of the ball, but had kindly offered to make the coffee, which will be served free to all with the box luncheons. The popular Reliance brand of coffee, one of the very best on the market has been generously donated by the National Grocery Co. of Seattle through the courtesy of their traveling salesman R. G. Trumbull.

The election of officers resulted in re-electing the same ones with the exception of second and third vice-presidents. President, Mrs. R. D. Willson; vice-presidents Mrs. E. E. Hopkins, Mrs. Julius Kirschberg and Mrs. F. E. Warner; secretary, Mrs. Jessie Webster; treasurer, Mrs. A. H. Thompson; recording secretary, Mrs. A. A. Smith.

available for the work. At that time the project was discussed of giving Mr. Govan a force contract for the nine miles, owing to the time which would be taken if the ordinary preliminaries for the contract, including advertising for bids for thirty days. The determinination of the highway commission to proceed with the work at day labor, under the direction of Mr. Govan, shows the confidence in which the Clallam county man is held by those who are best able to judge of his ability.

NEW POST OFFICE ASSURED

Various parties have asked me if I had been successful in completing my arrangements for the necessary funds to erect the building, which I undertook under a contract with the government, and, I may state that all arrangements have been made for this purpose and that I now have ample funds for the enterprise.

It appears that the inquirers heard a statement made at the last meeting of the Commercial Club by a local gentlemen to the effect that I was up in the air as to financing the building, and for this reason I want to set the anxious minds at rest. The building is assured and Port Angeles is to have an up-to-date Post Office.

It is true that I first went to the Citizens National Bank for the loan, and they informed that Mr. Farmer would endeavor to get the loan arranged for me up-sound as it exceeded the amount permitted under the National Banking laws; at this juncture another local institution promised me the funds, but later, after I got the work started, advised me that I could not be accommodated to the full extent of my needs. I then again took the matter up with the Citizens National Bank with the result that I am now in position to complete the building.

In justice to the older banking institutions I may add that the gentleman was mistaken in his statement when he said these had turned me down.

Very truly yours
C. A. MORSE

ed, seconded by Bigelow. Shields then suggested a license of $1 for one cow and $15 for each additional cow, upon the theory that it would give a check on the animals running at large. This seemed in the face of the adoption of the amendment and the possible adoption of the ordinance to be more acceptable to all, and Mr. Fleming was induced to withdraw his motion that the ordinance might be further amended. Dustman then moved that the first cow be licensed at $1 and additional cows $25 per year. Bigelow then called attention to the clause prohibiting more than one cow at any figure. In the confusion that followed all seemed incapable or disinclined to remedy this defect, and Shields moved to lay over one week and city attorney be instructed to bring in a substitute ordinance regulating the running at large of stock only. There was some opposition to this question again going over, but after some discussion and more confusion the motion carried, Fowler of the "cow" supporters voting for the motion.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNTY BOARD

The Commissioners in Regular Session Transact Business of the Public.

Monday April 6, 1914, at 9:00 a.m.

The board met pursant to adjournment, all members being present.

Minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved..

It having come to the notice of the board that David Govan, who has a road contract with the county, has not been complying with the State eight hour law, the Auditor was instructed to notify said Govan that hereafter he must comply with same.

There being two bids on file for doing the County printing, the board proceeded to open same, finding them as follows:

Webster Publishing Company bid 50 cents per inch per insertion for all official publications.

The Tribune-Times Company bid 60 cents per inch ,each to set all matter in brevier or eight point type, except delinquent tax list.

The bid of Webster Publishing Company being deemed the lowest and best, they were awarded the contract.

The board adopted the following resolution for Permanent Highway No. 3, as a substitute for resolution passed February 4, 1914:

"Resolved that the Permanent Highway Fund for Clallam County shall be expended on the improvement of the Port Angeles-Port Crescent Highway; commencing at a point 128.5 ft. East or the one fourth corner between Sections 3 and 10 Tp. 30 N., R. 7 W. Thence in a westerly direction for a distance of about 38,163 ft.

"It is futher understood that this resolution shall take the place of and authorizes the withdrawal of any other resolution or resolutions that may have been filed by this board with the State Highway Commissioner at Olympia, Washington."

The board approved the Engineer's final estimate due A. Fairservice on his Beaver-Lake Crescent Road contract, in the sum of $10,420.97, and accepted said road.

The board also approved the Engineer's final estimate due R. E. Meith on his Elwha Bridge contract in the sum of $6,774.88, and accepted said bridge.

The board adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas, the following numbered county general fund warrants, to-wit: No. 673, issued Feb. 5,1895, for $100.00; No. 712, issued Mar. 4, 1895, for $100:00, and No. 717, issued Mar. 2, 1895, for $100.00 were on or about Dec. 8, 1897, ordered cancelled by the then board of county commissioners based upon a report of one Douglas Young, who was employed to expert the county books: and which order was made without notice to, or hearing by the owners and holders of them, and

"Whereas, litigation over the payment of some such has been had in our courts, and litigation threatens over the payment of the warrants herein mentioned, and

"Whereas, the County Treasurer has been offered a settlement by the owners and holders of them whereby they will accept the face of them, together with one-half of the accrued interest, and

"Whereas, it is the judgment of the board that it is for the best interests of Clallam County that the offer be accepted, and that no further litigation be had concerning them;

"Therefore be it resolved, that the said order heretofore made by the former board of county commissioners in so far as it affects the within described county general fund warrants be and the same is hereby revoked, and the County Treasurer be authorized to redeem the said warrants by the payment of their face and one-half of the accrued interest."

WOMEN SIZE UP SENATORIAL CANDIDATES

Every One a Prohibitionist Except Turner, Who Disenfranchised the Women of Washington.

(Western Woman's Outlook.)

The coming senatorial contest in Washington presents an unusual allignment of candidates. Seven men have declared their aspirations to wear the Evergreen toga, four of whom are pronounced progressives, two of decidedly liberal views and one only a reactionary.

Senator Wesley L. Jones, probably the only Republican nominee has the reputation of being absolutely honest, even in partisan matters, which is indeed remarkable. He is a believer in the initiative, referendum and recall, statewide prohibition and equal suffrage. George F. Cotterill is a Progressive Democrat. His character for moral integrity, civic righteousness and devotion to public duty is unimpeachable. He is an avowed champion of women suffrage, an apostle of statewide prohibition and an active promoter of all the political advances and humanitarian movements of the present day. Congressman J. A. Falconer, Progressive candidate to succeed Senator Jones, is one of the big men of the state. He is a man of unblemished private life and untarnished public career. As a lawmaker, he has served Washington both in the state legislature and in the lower house of Congress with conspicuous ability. He is decidedly progressive from the Progressive viewpoint, an exponent of social justice, governmental regulation of industrial monopoly and the principle of co-operation in economic affairs. Also he is a pronounced believer in statewide prohibition and of equal suffrage amendment to the federal constitution. Ole Hanson is a candidate for the Progressive nomination. He is a man of unusual force of character and intellectual attainments. In King County, where he is well known, he is well respected for business intregrity, high social ideals and sound principles of morality. So far he has never held public office, but has been an active worker in political fields for others. Though of foreign birth, he is an American and has remarkable knowledge of the origin, expansion and development of the American national character. Mr. Hanson is a man of ideal family life, the father of six unusually handsome children, and, naturally, a strong believer in statewide prohibition. Detailed information concerning Mr. Hugh Todd and Judge Black, both candidates for the Democratic nomination, is not available to the writer hereof. However, it is her misfortune and not at all discreditable to the gentlemen mentioned. They both are widely known in Washington. Judge Black received the largest vote for the Democratic nomination for governor in the late state election but was disqualified from accepting the office because of holding a judicial position, being judge of the Superior Court. Mr. Todd is the chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee. It is said that both are in sympathy with the national administration and fully in accord with President Wilson's policies. Ex-Senator George Turner is the single reactionary exception. Though a man of wonderfully strong personality and wide experience, he ceased to grow about twenty years ago. At present he is a Democrat of the Alton B. Parker type, up to sixteen years ago he was a republican. He is decidedly opposed to any and all of the legislative advances and reforms and not at all in sympathy with present-day humanitarian movements. Nearly all of his life he has held some kind of public office and is reputed to be possessed of great wealth. While Judge of the Federal District Court for Washington, it was his decision that disfranchised the women voters at the time Washington was admitted as a state to the Union. In 1897 he was elected for a single term to the U. S. Senate. When his term expired President Roosevelt appointed him on the International Commission, which place he has held until about three months ago. Senator Turner is very much opposed to prohibition or to every other form of interference with the liquor business. His attitude in this respect is thought to be a source of strength to his candidacy.— Western Woman's Outlook.

WASHINGTON POULTRYMEN NEED NOT BE ALARMED

Free eggs, under the new tariff, means that the markets of Seattle are open to shipments from all the nations, especially China and New Zealand, says a Seattle newspaper. Hence the alarm among poultrymen that they may be subjected to ruinous competition.

Eggs from China are so cheap as to cast a suspicion against them. A public servant has shown that it is well founded, through a discovery that one sample from the Flowery Kingdom's poultry houses carried not less than 90,000 bacteria. The millions of germs that might come with a cargo of eggs from China is so large as to stagger the imagination.

The American poultryman need not fear the competition of Chinese eggs. There is something about them that would make the consumer hesitate to take them as a gift.

When he learns of the unsanitary and indescribably filthy conditions under which they are produced he will instantly resolve to have nothing to do with them. Nothing but a miracle would make a market for Chinese eggs on the Pacific Coast.

New Zealand is a different matter. The egg season in that country is the reverse of that in America. When Washington hens are off duty those in New Zealand are working full capacity, and conditions are such that fresh eggs, of excellent quality, can be placed upon the Seattle market at a reasonable figure.

It follows that the local egg man must be on his guard. He will have to meet this competition from across the Pacific. It is probable that there will not be another egg famine as last December, with prices so high that most persons were forced to regard this food as a luxury.

RELIGIOUS PREJUDCE.

Religious prejudice is threatening the defeat of the Government measure for the home rule in Ireland. For over fifty years the Irish people have been striving for the privilege of making and enforcing their own domestic laws. Home rule does not contemplate release from British sovereignty, but it does comprehend personal freedom from English vassalage. The Irish want to oganize their own government, choose their own officials and regulate their own affairs in the same way as any other civilized British colony. English sentiment has been educated up to the idea and a large majority of the Irish people are eager to carry out the plan. But a comparatively small portion of the inhabitants are violently opposed to the proposed change, even to the extent of precipating civil war to prevent it.

The Irish who favor home rule are Roman Catholics, those who oppose it are Protestant Irish, covering, as they do, the whole of the island except a small subdivision in the north called Ulster. The Catholic Irish are indigenous to the soil, being the descendants of those natives who have occupied the land from time immemorial; while the Protestants are looked upon as interlopers, their ancestors having been brought from Scotland and colonized by Oliver Cromwell some time in 1600. It was Cromwell's idea that by planting Presbyterians in Ireland, the two nationalities would intermarry and eventually the native zeal for the Roman Catholic Church would become neutralized. It proved a mistaken policy. The two peoples did not mix and the religious zeal of the Catholics was not at all neutralized. On the contrary, the presence of the North Irishmen has been a source of constant irritation from generation to generation, serving only to fan the flames of religious prejudice, religious bigotry and religious hatred. The feuds of Catholics and Orangemen have had a worldwide influence, causing dissension, riots and bloodshed in whatever part of the globe the two classes chanced to meet.

One redeeming feature of the affair was the action of the English troops in refusing to fight the Ulstermen. When a division of the army was ordered to the north for the purpose of coercing the covenanters into accepting home rule, in the event the bill passed parliament, the officers resigned and the enlisted men all but mutinied. It is said that King George interfered and proposed a compromise. The new program provides for home rule for Catholic Ireland and the continuation of English rule in the North country. Whether this plan will be acceptable to both factions yet remains to be seen.—Western Woman's Outlook.

Ed Cook was a butcher with considerable native wit. One day just before dinner, when his shop was full of customers, a man whom he did not like very well came in and asked for a dime's worth of dog meat.

"All right," said Ed; "will you have it wrapped up or just eat it here?"

WASHINGTON, LAND OF GLORIOUS OPTIMISM

A Goodly Heritage for the Enjoyment of Man.

IMPERIAL WASHINGTON! A commonwealth that commands the attention of the world, and inspires its admiration, through marvelous achievements; that holds its inhabitants by beneficences conferred, and that extends an invitation to the ambitious, the vigorous and the enterprising to participate in the advantages that attach to its measureless opportunities. As with the distinguished American citizen who was "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen," so may it be said of the peerless state that perpetuates his name, that Washington is first in progress, first in those elements of greatness that lead to inevitable dominance, and first in attributes and attractions that render life enjoyable, among the sisterhood of states. The employment of superlatives in speaking of Washington should not be construed as boasting. They are not necessarily evidences of boosting, for they constitute the only adequate medium for conveying an intelligent conception of the distinction that attaches to the portion of the farthermost West of which she is an integral part.

In those population-supporting resources and wealth-creating activities which have constituted the United States the greatest as well as the richest of the world's nations, the State of Washington has achieved a notable distinction during the comparatively short period that covers its present development, but it is the potential possibilities which attach to its position, the fact that it is the land of optimism, with a brilliant future certain of attainment, that confers an eminence that is unrivaled.

Here is a land of unsurpassed fertility, a combination of fecund soil and nurturing climate that assures sustenance, abundance to the coming millions who will people the North Pacific Coast. Mother earth yields of her riches with a prodigality that places the stamp of agricultural emplaces the stamp of agricultural eminence upon Washington with unmistakable import. Already the returns from given areas, and the wonderful diversity and scope of productions have attracted widespread attention while the large portion of the state yet to be brought under cultivation denotes cumulative progress in the prosecution of this interest.

Billions of feet of merchantable timber, suited to every demand of the building trades, supplying alike the the requisitions from the greatest of construction enterprises, and the materials for operating wood-working factories turning out the finest of finished products; unlimited measures of steam coal, practically the only supply on the Pacific Coast, with other undeveloped resources of mineral products, awaiting the advent of of transportation facilities; mighty waterways, capable of generating millions of horsepower in electrical energy for the propulsion of machinery, with every supporting element incident to manufacture upon a magnificent scale, afford assurance of industrial supremacy.

Nearly two thousand miles of shore line upon navigable waters, with splendid natural and safe harbors on the great inland sea that penetrates far into the interior of the Northwestern section of the state, the sheltered havens on the Pacific seaboard and along the shores of the mighty Columbia, which forms the southern boundry of Washington, render commercial development upon a magnificent scale inevitable. Already the swelling volume of import and export traffic is the marked feature in Washington's development. Her shipping activities have surpassed those of all other Pacific ports. The impulse that will be imparted by the completion of the Panama canal, a factor whose influence will be momentous, and supremacy in over-sea trade is accepted as an established fact.

Washington's distinction does not end with splendid advantages for the prosecution of agricultral, industrial or commercial operations, however. The world does not afford a finer climate, in which to enjoy comfort and health with prosperity. Tempered by favoring ocean currents, there are extremes neither of intense heat, nor bitter cold. The marketing of strawberries in November, and the picking of roses from the gardens in Tacoma at Christmas, are common occurrences, which demonstrate the mildness of its winters, while the fact that sunstrokes are unknown, and that the nights are never too hot to interfere with sleep, indicate the pleasant conditions in summer. The absence of violent electric storms and tornadoes, and the fact that destruction of life and property by the elements is of almost unknown occurrence, are features of distinct advantage.

Coupled with this delightful climate, is a landscape beautiful and inspiring. Washington's mountain scenery is the most impressive in the New World. From the Cascade range, extending from boundry to boundry, north and south, with an average elevation of over 6,000 feet, there rise at intervals, four towering peaks, mantled in eternal snows, that stand out in bold relief against the clothing of fir and cedar covering the lesser altitudes, wonderful landmarks as viewed from a distance in the peculiarly transparent atmosphere, and holding revelations of grandeur and beauty that render their ascent a profitable undertaking. The rugged and almost impenetrable Olympics form a glorious setting against the Western sky. Puget Sound is the most wonderful body of salt water in the world, while a myriad of scenic attractions are serving to draw an ever-increasing tide of tourist travel to delight in the wonders of Nature.

Already the crown of greatness has been firmly fixed upon the Evergreen State. The hand of Destiny is writing the story of Washington's marvelous achievements, and as each New Year is ushered in, it marks an added impulse to the development that is taking place in this Wonderland of the New West.— West Coast Trade.

HOW TO GROW RED CLOVER.

One of the Greatest Soil Improving Plants; Richest of Feed Crops.

The essential principles in the cultivation of red clover have been prepared in poster form by the State College, which urges its introduction on every ranch as it means more live stock, richer soil, heavier yields of grain, less waste land, and more and better farm homes.

1. Plow deep in the fall. Leave the ground rough to increase moisture. Allow it to weather and settle.

2. Harrow fall plowed ground as early in the spring as possible to save moisture and prevent crusting or baking.

3. For the next four to six weeks work soil to preserve mulch and keep down weeds. Avoid deep cultivation.

4. Prepare fine seed-bed with very shallow, mellow surface.

5. Secure clean seed of high vitality. If in doubt, send sample to Botany Department, State College, Pullman for free test.

6. Sow the seed in May. Seed with drill set to seed shallow. Sow six pounds to the acre.

7. Do not sow with nurse crop. Good stands have been secured with nurse crop, but results are uncertain.

8. Do not practice clipping nor pasturing till clover is well established. If weeds are bad, mow with cutter-bar set high.

9. The season of seeding, only a light crop is had. The college has secured full crops, from two to two and one-half tons per acre, the second and third years. It is usually not profitable to let it stand over three years.

10. The Agricultural College wishes to co-operate with the farmers in testing this crop. It has grown red clover successfully on the college farm, all exposures, for the past ten years, and finds it profitable.

CLASSES MUSSEL WITH OYSTER IN FOOD VALUE

Professor Trevor Kincaid, head of the department of zoology in the University of Washington, agrees with Dr. Irving A. Field, professor of biology at Clark university, that the mussel is a valuable article of diet, in the same class with the clam and oyster, and far more plentiful than either.

Professor Kincaid declares that it is an economic crime to deny the mussel a place on our tables. He says that it will not be many years before the mussel will be in demand as much as the oyster is now.

Last Christmas Eve, in a town in Virginia, an old negro had been out celebrating and, on boarding a car for home, he dropped a quart bottle of gin to the pavement.

Mournfully surveying the shattered fragments, he exclaimed: "Dah! Christmas done come an gone!"

Reilly—"Pat was drowned yesterday."

Fitzpatrick—"Couldn't he swim?"

Reilly—"Yes, but he was a union man. He swam for eight hours and then quit."

CHAPTER XVII.

The Rest of the Family.

THE time for Senor Garavel's return having arrived, Kirk called at the bank and found not the least difficulty in gaining an audience.

"I remember you quite well, sir," said Garavel—"'La Tosca.' Since you are a friend of Mrs. Cortlandt I shall be delighted to serve you."

"I have something very particular to say to you," Kirk began diffidently, "but I don't just know how to get at it."

Garavel smiled graciously. "I am a business man."

"This isn't business," blurted Kirk; "it's much more important. I want to have it over as quickly as possible, so I'll be frank. I have met your daughter, Mr. Garavel"—the banker's eyes widened in a look of disconcerting intensity—"and I am in love with her—sort of a shock, isn't it? It was to me. I'd like to tell you who I am and anything else you may wish to know."

"My dear sir, you surprise me—if you are really serious. Why, you have seen her but once—a moment, at the theater!"

"I met her before that night, out at your country place. I had been hunting and on my way home through the woods I stumbled upon your swimming pool. She directed me to the road."

"But even so!"

"Well, I loved her the first instant I saw her."

"I knew nothing of this. If you had reason to think that your suit would be acceptable, why did you not come to me before?"

"I couldn't. I didn't know your name. I was nearly crazy because I couldn't so much as learn the name of the girl I loved!" Kirk plunged confusedly into the story of his meeting with Chiquita.

"That is a strange tale," said Senor Garavel when he had finished. "If you would tell me something about yourself I might know better in what light to regard this affair."

"Gladly—though there isn't much to tell. Just now I'm working on the P. R. R as assistant to Runnels—the master of transportation, you know. I like the work and expect to be promoted. I have a little money—just enough to give me a fresh start if I should lose out here, and—oh, well, I'm poor, but honest. I suppose that's about the size of it." He paused, vaguely conscious that he had not done himself justice. "My father is a railroad man in Albany, N. Y."

"In what capacity is he employed, may I ask?"

Kirk grinned at this, and, seeing a copy of Bradstreet's on the banker's table, turned to his father's name, which he pointed out rather shamefacedly. Senor Garavel became instantly less distant.

"Of course the financial world knows Darwin K. Anthony," said he. "Even we modest merchants of the tropics have heard of him, and that his son should seek to win success upon his own merits is greatly to his credit. I congratulate you, sir, upon your excellent progress."

"I ought to tell you, sir, that I am not on good terms with my father at present. In fact, he has cast me off. That is why I am here supporting myself by hard work, instead of living in idleness. But I'm beginning to like the work—and I'll make good—I'll do it if only to show my father his mistake. That's what I care about most. I don't want his money. It's easier to make money than I thought. But I must succeed, for his sake and my own."

"May I inquire the cause of this—estrangement?"

"Oh, general worthlessness on my part, I suppose. Come to think of it, I must have been a good deal of a cross. I never did anything very fierce, though." He smiled a little sadly.

A quick light of thought flashed through the banker's eyes. He was a keen judge of men.

"Well, well," he said, with a trace of impatience, "there is no need to go into the matter further. Your proposal is impossible—for many reasons it is impossible, and yet—your spirit is commendable."

"Does that mean you won't even allow me to see your daughter?"

"It would be useless."

"But I love Gertrudis," said Kirk, desperately.

Garavel looked a trifle pitying.

"You are by no means the first," he said; "I have been besieged by many who say always the same thing—without Gertrudis they cannot, they will not, they should not live. And yet I have heard of no deaths. Her marriage has been arranged."

"Do you think that is quite fair to her? If she loves Ramon Alvarez"—

Once again Garavel's brows signaled surprise. "Ah, you know?"

"Yes, sir. I was about to say if she really loves him I can't make any difference. But suppose she should care for me?"

"Again it could make no difference once she had married Ramon. But she is too young to know her own mind. Youth is headstrong and blinded by dreams; hence it is better that marriage should be arranged by older persons."

"Exactly. That's why I want you to arrange mine." The banker smiled in spite of himself, for he was not without a sense of humor, and the young man's sincerity was winning.

"It is out of the question," he said; "useless to discuss. Forgetting for the moment all other considerations, there is an obstacle to your marriage into a Spanish family which you do not stop to consider, one which might well prove insurmountable. I speak of religion."

"No trouble there, sir."

"You are then a Catholic?"

"It was my mother's faith, and I was brought up in it until she died. After that I sort of neglected it. You see, I am more of a Catholic than anything else."

"What we call a 'bad Catholic?'"

"Yes, sir. But if I were not it wouldn't make any difference. Chiquita is my religion."

"Who?" The father started.

"I—I call her that," Kirk explained in confusion; "to myself, of course."

"Indeed! So do I," said Senor Garavel dryly. For a moment he frowned in meditation. There were many things to consider. He felt a certain sympathy for this young man, with his straightforwardness and artless brusquerie. Moreover, though the banker was no great respecter of persons, the mention of Darwin K. Anthony had impressed him. If Kirk were all that he seemed he had no doubt of the ultimate reconciliation of father and son. At all events it would do no harm to learn more of this extraordinary suitor, and meanwhile he must treat him with respect while carefully guarding his own dignity against possibly impertinent advances.

"She has been promised to Ramon," he said, at last, "and I have considered her future quite settled. Of course, such arrangements are frequently altered for various causes, even at the last moment, but—who knows?" He shrugged his shoulders. "She may not wish to entertain your suit. So why discuss it? Why make plans or promises? It is a matter to be handled with the greatest delicacy; there are important issues linked with it. For a young man I have known so very short a time"—he smiled genially—"you have impressed me not unfavorably. I thank you for coming to me, at any rate."

The two men rose and shook hands; Kirk was not altogether cast down by the result of the interview. He understood the banker's allusion to the possible change of arrangements, and felt sure from what Chiquita had told him that the marriage with Ramon could not take place after the true nature of Garavel's political aspirations became known.

The truth was that Andres Garavel had not hesitated long after that memorable night at the Tivoli before accepting the brilliant prize which the Cortlandts had dangled so alluringly before his eyes, and the decision once made, he had entered into the scheme with all his soul. He was wise enough, however, to leave his destiny largely in their hands.

It was not long after Kirk's visit to the bank that Garavel, during a conference with the Cortlandts, took occasion to bring up the young man's name. Cortlandt had been called to the telephone, and Edith was left free to answer without constraint.

"I have seen you and him riding quite frequently," her guest remarked, with polite interest. "Is he, then, an old friend?"

"Yes, we are very fond of him. He will be promoted soon, by the way, although he doesn't know it. He is to replace Runnels as soon as he is able. Kirk is certain to succeed, and old Anthony will come round, if I know American fathers."

Garavel smiled, well pleased that he had treated his recent visitor with proper consideration. After all, why not invite the young fellow to his house? That would be rather a significant step according to Spanish custom, yet he need not be bound by it. He could put a stop to the affair at any time. Besides, despite his frequent protestations to the contrary, he was somewhat influenced by his daughter's desire for more liberty. It was not fair to her, he thought in his heart, that she should know only Ramon. One reason especially appealed to his pride. If a break came between him and Alfarez, Ramon must not appear to have jilted Gertrudis. If, meanwhile, she had another suitor, and one of distinguished family, the affair would wear a better look. It cannot be denied that the name of Darwin K. Anthony rang musically in his ears.

"The boy has the right stuff in him," Edith went on. "He began at the bottom only a few months ago, preferring to work his way up, though he was offered a first rate position to begin with."

She would have said more, but just at that moment her husband entered. "You were saying that Alfarez suspects," said Cortlandt, addressing Garavel. "Has he said anything?"

"Not to me as yet, but he surely must know. The rumors must have reached him. He is cold, and Ramon acts queerly. I feel guilty—almost as if I had betrayed a friend."

"Nonsense! When the time comes you will be called for. But it must be the voice of the people calling. Bocas, Chiriqui, Colon—they must all demand Garavel." Cortlandt sighed. "I shall be very glad when it is over." He looked more pale, more bloodless, more world weary than ever.

"You need have no fear that it will cause serious trouble between you and the general," Mrs. Cortlandt assured Garavel. "Ramon should be able to effect peace, no matter what happens."

"Ah, I am not so sure that there will be a marriage between Gertrudis and him."

"Is she growing rebellious?" Cortlandt inquired. "If I were you, then, I wouldn't force her. A loveless marriage is a tragic thing."

His wife nodded her agreement.

"Not exactly rebellious. She would do whatever I asked regardless of her own feelings, for that is the way we Spaniards bring up our daughters, but she is cold to Ramon, and he, I believe, is suspicious of my intentions toward his father. Therefore the situation is strained. With Gertrudis I cannot be severe, but unless it becomes necessary to make conditions with my old friend, Alfarez, I should prefer to let the girl have her own way."

It was about this time, perhaps two weeks after Kirk had replied to his father's letter, that Runnels called him in one day to ask:

"Do you know a man named Clifford?"

"No."

"He dropped in this morning, claiming to be a newspaper man from the States; wanted to know all about everything on the canal and—the usual thing. He didn't talk like a writer, though. I thought you might know him. He asked about you."

"Me?" Kirk pricked up his ears.

"I gathered the impression he was trying to pump me." Runnels eyed his subordinate shrewdly. "I boosted you."

"Is he short and thick set?"

"No; tall and thin." As Kirk merely looked at him in a puzzled way, he continued: "I suppose we're all suspicious down here, there's so much of that sort of thing. If he has anything on you"—

"He's got nothing on me."

"I'm glad of that. You're the best man I have, and that shakeup I told you about is coming off sooner than I expected. I'd hate to have anything happen to you. Do you think you could hold down my job?"

"What? Do you really mean it?"

"I do."

"It goes without saying that I'd like to be master of transportation, but not until you're through."

"Well, the old man has had another row with Colonel Jolson and may not wait for his vacation to quit. I'm promised the vacancy."

"Then you have seen the colonel?"

"No, but I have seen Mrs. Cortlandt. I felt I had a right to ask something from her in return for what I did for you. I know that sounds rotten, but you'll understand how it is. Colonel Jolson wants his brother-in-law, Blakeley, to have the place, but I'm entitled to it, and she has promised to fix it for me. If I go up you go too. That's why I was worried when this Clifford party appeared."

"There is something, I suppose, I ought to tell you, although it doesn't amount to much. I was mixed up in a scrape the night I left New York. A plain clothes man happened to get his head under a falling bottle and nearly died from the effects."

"This Clifford party is stopping at the Hotel Central. Better look him over."

"I will," said Kirk, feeling more concern than he cared to show, but his apprehension turned out to be quite unfounded. On inspection Clifford proved to bear no resemblance whatever to Williams, nor did he seem to have any concealed design. He was a good sort, apparently, with a knack of making himself agreeable, and in the weeks that followed he and Kirk became quite friendly. Meanwhile, no word had come from Senor Garavel, and Kirk was beginning to fret. But just as he had reached the limit of his patience he received a note which transported him with joy.

Senor Andres Garavel, he read, would be in the city on the following Tuesday evening, and would be pleased to have him call.

Even with his recent experiences of Spanish etiquette Kirk hardly realized the extent of the concession that had been made to him. He knew nothing of the tears, the pleadings and the spirited championship of his cause that had overborne the last parental objection. It was lucky for him that Chiquita was a spoiled child and Garavel a very Americanized Spaniard. However, as it was, he went nearly mad with delight and had hard work to refrain from shaving himself twice that Tuesday evening, so overcareful was he about his toilet, yet his excitement was as nothing compared to that of Allan, who looked on with admiration tempered by anxious criticism.

"It will be a grand wedding, sar," he exclaimed. "H'Allan will be there for giving you away."

The residence of Senor Garavel is considered one of the show places of Panama. It is of Spanish architecture, built of brick and stucco and embellished with highly ornamental iron balconies. It stands upon a corner overlooking one of the several public squares, guarded from the street by a breast high stone wall crowned with a stout iron fence. Diagonally opposite and running the full length of the block is a huge weather stained cathedral, and fronting upon the intersecting street is a tiny shrine with an image of the Madonna smiling downward. At night its bright radiance illumines the darkness round about and lends the spot a certain sanctity.

An Indian woman, clad in barbarous colors, her bare feet incased in sandals, admitted him, and the banker himself met him in the hall. He led the way into a great barren parlor, where, to Kirk's embarrassment, he found quite a company gathered. His host formally presented him to them, one after another. There were Senor Pedro Garavel, a brother of Andres; Senora Garavel, his wife, who was fat and short of wind; the two Misses Garavel, their daughters; then a little wrinkled, brown old lady in stiff black silk who spoke no English. Kirk gathered that she was somebody's aunt or grandmother. Last of all, Gertrudis came shyly forward and put her hand in his, then glided back to a seat behind the old lady. Just as they were seating themselves another member of the family appeared—this time a second cousin from Guatemala. Like the grandmother, he was as ignorant of English as Kirk was of Spanish, but he had a pair of frightfully intense black eyes with which he devoured the American.

CHAPTER XVIII.

A Challenge and a Confession.

IT was very trying to be the target of so many glances. Instead of resuming their conversation the entire assemblage of Garavels waited calmly for their caller to begin, and he realized in a panic that he was expected to make conversation. He cast about madly for a topic.

His host helped him to get started, and he did fairly well until one of the Misses Garavel began to translate his remarks to the old lady and the ferocious cousin from Guatemala. As their replies were not rendered into English, he was left stranded. He knew that his whole salvation lay in properly impressing his auditors, so he began again and floundered through a painful monologue.

The night suddenly turned off sweltering hot, perspiration began to trickle down his brow, his collar became a tourniquet, and he cast appealing glances at the silent figure hidden demurely behind the rustly old lady in the black harness. The look of mingled pity and understanding she gave him somewhat revived his fainting spirit, and he determined to stick it out until the family were ready to retire and allow him a word with her alone. But idle hope! Gradually it dawned upon him that they had no such intention.

By now his collar had given up the struggle and lain limply down to rest. The whole experience was hideous, yet he understood quite well that these people were not making sport of him. All this was only a part of their foreign customs. They were gentlefolk, reared to a different code from his—that was all—and since he had elected to come among them he could only suffer and be strong.

What he ever talked about during that evening he never quite remembered. When it came time to leave he expected at least to be allowed a farewell word or two with Gertrudis, but instead he was bowed out as ceremoniously as he had been bowed in and, finding himself at last in the open, sighed with relief. He felt like a paroled prisoner, but he thought of the girl's glance of sympathy and was instantly consoled. He crossed slowly to the plaza, pausing a moment for a good night look at the house, then, as he turned, he caught a glimpse of a figure slinking into the shadows of the side street and smiled indulgently. Evidently Allan had been unable to resist the temptation to follow him. But when he had reached his quarters he was surprised to find the boy there ahead of him.

"How did you beat me home?" he inquired.

"I have been waiting h'impatiently ever since you went out. To be sure, I have had one little dream"—

"Didn't you follow me to the Garavels'?"

"Oh, boss! Never would I do such."

Seeing that the negro was honest, Kirk decided that somebody had been spying upon him, but the matter was of so little consequence that he dismissed it from his mind.

Although Runnels had spoken with confidence of the coming shakeup in the railroad organization, it was not without a certain surprise that he awoke one morning to find himself actively in charge of the entire system. He lost no time in sending for Kirk, who took the news of their joint advancement with characteristic equanimity.

"Now, there is nothing cinched yet, understand," the acting superintendent cautioned him. "We're all on probation, but if we make good I think we'll stick."

"I'll do my best to fill your shoes."

"And I have the inside track on Blakeley, in spite of Colonel Jolson, so I'm not alarmed. The break came sooner than I expected, and now that we chaps are in control it's the chance of our lifetimes."

Kirk nodded. "You're entitled to all you get, but I've never quite understood how I managed to forge ahead so fast. I've been mighty lucky."

"You don't really call it luck, do you?" Runnels looked at him curiously.

"I'm not conceited enough to think I'm a downright genius."

"Why, the Cortlandts engineered everything. It was they who arranged your promotion to the office in the first place, and they're behind this last affair. They have stood back of you at every step and, incidentally, back of me and the other boys."

"When you say 'they' you of course mean 'she.'"

"Of course. One has to recognize him, though, as the head of the family. And he really did have a part in it too. At least if he had been against us we never would have won."

"I'd like to show the Cortlandts that we appreciate what they've done, but we can't openly thank her without humiliating him. I'd like to give him something."

"Suppose we give him a quiet little supper some night and tell him frankly how grateful we are. He's the sort to appreciate a thing like that, and it would be a delicate way of thanking his wife too."

"Good! I'll speak to the other fellows, and now the acting master of transportation is going to shake with the new acting superintendent and wish him every success."

Runnels grasped the outstretched hand.

"Say, Anthony," he said, "we're young and we have a start. I have what you lack, and you have what I lack. If we stick together, we'll own a railroad some day. Is it a go?"

"You bet!"

With a warm glow in his breast the new master of transportation plunged into his duties. He really was making a success, it seemed, although it was a bit disappointing to learn that he owed so much of it to Edith Cortlandt. But this last advancement, too, was very timely, for it would surely have its effect upon Andres Garavel.

But his new work brought new troubles and worries. He began to sleep shorter hours; he concentrated with every atom of determination in him; he drove himself with an iron hand. He attacked his task from every angle, and with his fine constitution and unbounded youthful energy he covered an amazing quantity of work. He covered it so well, moreover, that Runnels complimented him.

This stress of labor served one purpose for which he was very grateful; it separated him from Edith Cortlandt and took his mind from that occurrence in the jungle.

Soon after his promotion he received from Andres Garavel a warmly worded note of congratulation, and some few days later an invitation to dine, which he accepted eagerly.

The dinner proved to be another disappointing ordeal, for again he was allowed no opportunity of speaking with Gertrudis and had to content himself with feasting his eyes upon her. But, although the family were present en masse, as on the former occasion, they unbent to a surprising degree, and he found them truly gracious and delightful.

Later in the evening he found himself alone with Chiquita and the old Spanish lady, and, knowing that the latter could not understand a word of his tongue, he addressed himself to the girl with some degree of naturalness.

"I was sorry for you the last time, senor," she said, in reply to his half humorous complaint, "and yet it was funny; you were so frightened."

"It was my first memorial service. I thought I was going to see you alone."

"Oh, that is never allowed."

"Never? How am I going to ask you to marry me?"

Miss Garavel hid her blushing face behind her fan. "Indeed! You seem capable of asking that absurd question under any circumstances."

"I wish you would straighten me out on some of your customs."

She gave him an odd look, smiling timidly.

"As for tonight, do you attribute any meaning to my father's request that you dine with us?"

"Of course. It means I wasn't blackballed at the first meeting, I suppose."

She blushed delightfully again. "Since you are so ignorant of our ways you should inquire at your earliest convenience. I would advise you, perhaps, to learn Spanish."

"Will you teach me? I'll come every evening."

She did not answer, for the old lady began to show curiosity, and a conversation in Spanish ensued which Kirk could not follow. He departed with a feeling of exaltation. Beyond doubt his suit was progressing—slowly, perhaps, but still progressing.

His understanding of Spanish customs received a considerable enlargement on the following day, when he met Ramon Alfarez outside the railroad office. Ramon had evidently waited purposely for him, and now began to voice a protest in the greatest excitement.

"You 'ave insolt me," he cried furiously, "and now you 'ave the insolence to interfere in my affairs." He paused dramatically. "Make it yourself ready to fight on tomorrow."

"What's the use of putting it off? I couldn't make your weight in that time. I'll do it now, if you say."

"No, no! Onderstan' we shall fight like gentlemen. I shall keel you with any weapon you prefer."

"By Jove!" Kirk exclaimed in amazement. "This is a challenge. You want to fight a duel! Why, this reads like a book!" He began to laugh, at which Ramon became white and calm. "Listen," Kirk went on, "I'll tell you what we'll do; we'll fight with fire hose again. I suppose you want satisfaction for that ducking."

"I prefer to shoot you, senor," the other declared quietly. "Those marriage shall never occur until first I walk upon your dead body. As matter of honor I offer you this opportunity biffore it is too late. All Panama is speaking of those engagements to Senorita Garavel. Come, then, must I insolt you further?"

Young Washington's Behavior Rules

[A rimed version of those he put in his copybook when he was fourteen years old.]

[Copyright, 1914, by American Press Association.]

Wear not your clothes foul, ripped or dusty.
Speak not when others speak.
At times when you should hold your peace
To talk you must not seek.
Walk not when others would stop walking.
Pay men no compliment
In flattery, yet honest praise
Bestow with good intent.
In time of mirth be never doleful
In what you have to say.
Whene'er your mouth is full of meat
Your speech you must delay.
In company read not your letters
Except in case of need,
And then ask leave of every one
Ere you the letters read.
When some one in the room is writing
You must not then come near
To read his lines, unless he bids,
Nor with him interfere.

Two Stories of Washington

Edward Everett Hale's Characteristic Anecdotes of the Great General.

Before his death the late Edward Everett Hale prepared for the Outlook Magazine a series of papers entitled "Memories of a Hundred Years." Naturally they were not all his own memories, but included those of his father and other intimates. In one installment he told these two stories of Washington:

"An old parishioner of mine once told me that the day when Washington entered Boston in triumph—that is, on the 17th of March, 1776—he took up his headquarters at the best public house in Boston, which was at the head of State street, until then called King street. According to my old friend's account, General Howe had occupied the same inn. The mother of my informant was the daughter of the keeper of the inn and was a little girl playing about the house. Of course, interested in all that passed, Washington, with his usual kindness to children, called the child to him and said: 'You have seen the soldiers on both sides. Which do you like best?' The little girl could not tell a lie any more than he could, and with a childish frankness she said she liked the redcoats best. Washington laughed, according to my friend's story, and said to her, 'Yes, my dear, the redcoats do look the best, but it takes the ragged boys to do the fighting.' This is one of many well authenticated anecdotes which disprove the old demigod theory that Washington never smiled.

"YES, MY DEAR, THE REDCOATS DO LOOK THE BEST, BUT IT TAKES THE RAGGED BOYS TO DO THE FIGHTING."

"When I was in college Jared Sparks, always a near friend, was lecturing on American history. I stopped after the lecture to ask him some question, and he told me this story of the battle of Princeton. I dare not call it my personal touch with the Revolution, but it removes me from it by only one gap. Sparks told me of the Massachusetts officer, whose name he did not give me, who was at Princeton on the day of the battle. There is a certain bridge, which the well informed reader will remember, which it was important to destroy. Washington instructed this Massachusetts captain to take a file of men and destroy the bridge. The captain touched his hat and said, 'Are there enough men?' and Washington said, 'Enough to be cut to pieces.' This gentleman told Dr. Sparks afterward that as he went back to his men he pinched his cheeks for fear that they should see that he was pale, and they destroyed the bridge."

The board entered into a contract with Dunn & Hogan for the construction of that section of the bonded road from Sequim to Blyn.

The Board took up the matter of the petition of Edwin Pettett et al for a road beginning at Groveland Avenue and Fourth street in the town of Dungeness and running thence in a general northeasterly direction following as nearly as convenient the old county road formerly located there, crossing the Borwn's creek at the old Davis dike and running to the northwest corner of the R. M. Wood farm at the beach; thence northeast to deep water, and ordered the Engineer to examine and report upon said proposed road.

The board then adjourned until Thursday, April 9, 1914 at 8:00 a. m.

Thursday, April 9, 1914 at 8:00 a. m.

The board met pursuant to adjournment, all members being present, and arrangements having been made to meet the board of county commissioners of Jefferson county on the road at the line between the two counties, they proceeded by automobile to keep such appointment.

The board duly met the Jefferson county board, and without any difficulty reached an agreement as to the location of the Clallam-Jefferson road where it crosses the line and the general route of same leading up to said crossing point.

Upon its return, the board adjourned until Friday, April 10, 1914 at 9:00 a. m.

The board approved the final estimate of the County Engineer on Permanent Highway No. 2 in the sum of $3564.80, and accepted said road.

The board then adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas, a contract was entered into on August 2, 1913, for the construction of two and one half miles of permanent highway, known as Permanent Highway No. 2, Clallam county, Washington, by and between Chas Fitzgerald, Amore Myers and Geo Myers and the board of county commissioners of Clallam county and

"Be it resolved that said contractors be allowed the sum of $540.40 in payment in full for said extra yardage."

The board then approved a bill covering the above amount, and ordered same forwarded to the State Highway Commissioner for his approval.

Ordinance No. 442.

An ordinance granting to the Angeles Telephone and Telegraph Company, its successors or assigns, the right and privilege to use the streets, alleys and all other public highways within the City of Port Angeles, Washington, for the purpose of erecting and constructing, maintaining and operating a telephone and telegraph system in said City of Port Angeles, Washington.

The City Council of said City of Port Angeles, do ordain as follows:

Section1.—That the Angeles Telephone and Telegraph Company of Port Angeles, Washington, its successors, or assigns hereinafter referred to as grantees are hereby granted, for the period of thirty years, the right, privilege, franchise to erect and maintain poles with the necessary supports, cross arms, fixtures, and to string wires and cables thereon, and to construct underground conduits, together with the necessary manholes and other appliances, and to lay and strech wires and cables therein and along, over upon, under and across the streets, alleys and all other public highways of the City of Port Angeles for the transmission of sound signals, conversation, and electricity, and to construct, equip, maintain and operate a telephone and telegraph business in said City of Port Angeles subject, however, to the terms, conditions, covenants and provisions in this ordinance contained.

Section 2.—That all conducts shall be laid in conformity with such reasonable regulations as the City Council may by ordinance prescribe for conduits of similar character and all excavations for constructing or maintaining such conduits shall be done in compliance with the ordinance of the City of Port Angeles which may be in force at the time of the performance of the work, and in such a manner as to not unnecessarily interfere with the free use of the streets, alleys or public highways by the public, save and except such temporary interference as may be necessary to the prosecution of the work.

Section 3.—Whenever it shall become necessary in the erection of such telephone or telegraph poles to dig into or in any manner interfere with any public street, alley or other public highway in the City of Port Angeles, the said grantee, its successors or assigns, shall, without any delay, put such street or alley in as good condition as it was before it was broken up, dug up, or disturbed.

Section 4.—That all poles erected under this franchise shall be erected in a neat and workmanlike manner; shall be of such size and set in the ground to such a depth as to make them safe and free from all danger of leaning or falling; they shall also be placed as may hereafter be designated by the City Council or City Engineer of said City.

Section 5.—That at no time during the erection of said poles, or any work thereon, or on said lines, shall the grantee, its successors or assigns, or its employes leave any poles on the ground in such a manner as to interfere with public travel, and in the digging of such holes for the erecting of such pole lines, the grantee, its successors or assigns, shall take all necessary precautions to guard the same in such a manner that damage or injury will not arise by reason thereof; said grantee, its successors or assigns, shall be liable for damages which may be caused by reason of any injury sustained through its carelessness or neglect.

Section 6.—The telephone system to be operated and maintained under this franchise shall be the same as that now being used by the said grantee, together with such extensions and improvements as may be necessary for good and efficient service, and this franchise is to be substituted in lieu of the present franchise. And said grantee agrees to start within sixty days re-constructing the present telephone plant and to make all lines within the City limits full metallic, and to install, as soon as a new central building can reasonably be completed, a standard multiple central energy switchboard of a sufficient ultimate capacity to handle the business of a city of ten thousand people.

Section 7.—That said grantee, its successors or assigns, shall pay annually to said City of Port Angeles, two per cent per annum of the gross earnings derived from the rental of telephone instruments installed and operated in the City of Port Angeles, such settlement shall be made on or before the fifteenth day of January in each and every year, and any accredited officer of said City, authorized by the City Council of said City, shall, upon demand, have the right to examine and inspect the books of the holder of this franchise for the purpose of ascertaining the gross earnings of said telephone and telegraph system for any year; in the event that said accredited officer of said City and the representive of the holder of this franchise cannot agree as to the amount of said earning, the two shall select a third person and said three persons shall constitute a board of arbitration, and their final decision as to the amount of said earnings shall be final and no appeal shall lie therefrom. On failure of said grantee, its successors or assigns, to comply with the conditions contained in this Ordinance, all rights and privileges granted by this Ordinance shall utterly cease and become forfeited, null and void.

Section 8.—That whenever said grantee, its successors or assigns, shall cease to operate said telephone system, within the said City of Port Angeles, and shall cease to use the poles and lines herein provided for in the operation of said telephone system, then the said grantee, its successors and assigns, shall remove said poles and lines from the streets, alleys, and all other public highways of said City within sixty days from the date that said grantee, its successors or assigns, cease to use and operate said lines.

Section 9.—That said grantee, its successors or assigns, shall at any time after the acceptance of this franchise, furnish and install without cost to the City of Port Angeles, for municipal purposes only, upon receipt of thirty day's notice in writing, any number of telephones, not exceeding four in such building or buildings as may be designated by the City Council, and maintain and keep the same in repair, without cost to said City, and shall furnish free telephone service and connections within the said City during the life of this franchise, through such telephones so furnished as aforesaid.

Section 10.—That said grantee shall file an acceptance of this franchise in writing with the City Clerk of said City of Port Angeles within thirty days from the date of this Ordinance and if acceptance is not filed as aforesaid, then this Ordinance shall be null and void.

Section 11.—That this Ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage, approval and filing in the office of the City Clerk, and of written acceptance of said grantee as provided herein, and from and after five days from and after the date of the last publication of this Ordinance.

THE EASTER SERVICES

Banks of ferns, intermingled with daffodils and hyacinths, gave a pleasing effect to the pulpit and altar, while a white cross pointing upward to a beautiful, yellow star constantly reminded one of Death and the Resurrection. The children's voices, sweet and clear, were appreciated by all. The songs by the choir and the sermon by Dr. Heath were impressive and appropriate.

IN THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.

The services for Holy Thursday, Good Friday, and Holy Saturday were performed according to the Church's beautiful ritual every morning at eight o'clock amid a throng of faithful worshippers.Easter Sunday was a fitting climax to the expressive ceremonies of Holy Week. Two masses were read on Easter Sunday, one at 8 and the other at 10 o'clock, the latter being a High Mass, and the music rendered was a composition in honor of St. Vincent, arranged for four voices. On this day the new Liszt organ was used for the first time. The well trained choir accompanied by the melodious strains of the organ made the Easter Alleluias sound more joyous than ever. The sermon at the High Mass was preached by the pastor, Rev. Albert Erkins, taking as his theme, "The Loyalty to Christ."

For the past few months a parish growth was quite evident, but the attendance at both Easter services overtaxed the trim little church beyond its seating and standing capacity.

Mrs. LaMance, National organizer for the W. C. T. U., gave three instructive and interesting talks on prohibition this week.

She has made herself thoroly familiar with conditions throughout the U. S. and can prove all her statements with facts and figures.

Wednesday evening at the Congregational church she exhibited a suitcase full of interesting souvenirs of Alaska and B. C., Thursday night she addressed an audience in Lincoln Heights church.

DONAHUE-HYNES

Beautiful Wedding at the Catholic Church Wednesday Morning.

Mae Alice Donahue and William H. Hynes were united in marriage at the Catholic church at nine o'clock Wednesday morning, April 15th, Father Albert Erkins officiating. The wedding march was beautifully rendered by Miss Mary Stockland, and a chorus of young ladies sang several appropriate selections during the ceremony. The bride was lovely in a gown of white messaline, wearing a wreath of lilies of the valley and long white veil. She carried a handsome bouquet of bridal roses. Ethel Donahue, sister of the bride, was maid of honor and looked charming in a pink messaline gown. Mike Hynes, brother of the groom, acted as best man.

After the wedding ceremony an elaborate wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride's mother. The table decorations were in yellow and white, the center piece consisting of the bride's bouquet. Covers were laid for thirty, including a number of out-of-town guests. Apple and cherry blossoms were profusely used in decorating the rooms.

Among the out-of-town guests were the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Hynes, a sister, Miss Agnes Hynes, another sister and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. Pete Doulan, a cousin, Matthew Hynes, an aunt, and a friend, Mr. Robert Case, all of Issaquah, Washington.

The bridal couple left on the afternoon boat for a short wedding trip, after which they go to Anacortes to make their home. The bride is one of Port Angeles' fairest daughters and the groom is highly spoken of by all who know him. Best wishes for their future happiness and success are expressed by a host of friends.

CITY AND PERSONAL

The members of the Catholic church are very proud of their fine new organ installed last week by Prof. Lange

Rev. T. A. Hilton will hold service at St. Andrews Episcopal church Sunday morning at the usual hour, there being no evening service.

H. C. Miller enjoyed a visit this week from his son Walter and wife of Seattle. Walter was taking pictures showing the progress of the street grading.

Warren Morse drove Steve Land's pedigree running horse down from Port Townsend this week. The horse has been in training at that place during the winter.

The Reliance brand of coffee, none better, will be served free at the Calico Ball this evening through the courtesy of the National Grocery Co., of Seattle.

Joe Hoare had a close call one day this week when out in the woods with his father assisting in falling a tree. It fell the wrong way striking the boy on the head and inflicting a severe cut.

Mr. and Mrs. Nick Jacquim of Peoria, Illinois, old time friends of the Luppens and Campbells, stopped here the first of the week, enroute home from California and other coast states.

W. I. Crawford, manager of the Gorman Cannery at Neah Bay made a flying trip to the mouth of the Straits this week; the company is getting the machinery in shape in the cannery and anticipates a large run of salmon this season.

Quite a number of citizens met in the rooms of the Commercial Club Wednesday evening endeavoring to get together sufficient support to organize a winning ball team to play this summer. The indications are favorable, the boys will meet again next Wednesday evening with the Commercial Club and organize permently.

Mrs. Wm. H. Taylor and Mrs. Frank Babcock autoed to Angeles Wednesday. They report the new Civic Club of Sequim very active in helping to clean up and beautify their little city. They had a "clean-up" day last week and accomplished a great deal, especially in improving the looks of the park, where picnics and games will be enjoyed at their annual May Day celebration. They are expecting a large crowd of Angeles people to participate in helping to make the day a success.

Wednesday's P. I. conains an article which is of interest to the friends of Professor Ralph Lutz of the U. of W. a former Angeles boy. He now occupies the position of professor of history in the University and was treasurer of the Alumni Association. The article explains why he has handed in his resignation as treasurer and member of the executive committee; saying that he was ashamed of the character of the Washington Alumnus, the official organ of the association for the vicious policy it reveals in its unjust attacks upon members of the faculty.

WILL DISCUSS "SECOND CHANCE" PROPOSITION

"Two Salvations, but No Second Chance", is the subject of the I. B. S. A. Bible lecture to be delivered Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, in the School Auditorium, by Jas. McFarland, of Seattle.

Much interest seems to be centering in this particular lecture. The "Second Chance" proposition is a lively one and no doubt many will turn out to hear it discussed. The speaker is said to treat this subject in a very interesting manner and to leave no doubt in the minds of his hearers concerning the Plan of Salvation for the Church and the world. As usual a hearty welcome is extended to all, and no financial considerations stand in the way.

NOW WHAT DO YOU THINK OF THAT?

While the boat was at the dock Tuesday, one of the passengers who took a walk up Front street to "see the town" was evidently amazed at the activity exhibited by the contractors who are regrading our streets, for after watching them for awhile he turned to a man near him and said, "By George, you folks are going to have a town here sure. All this regrade work will be just the prelude to the arrival of the railroad and then Port Angeles will be a hum dinger." Just about that time the man to whom he had been addressing his remarks looked at him with a cold fishy eye and said, "Railroad, why 20 years ago when I first came here" —but we turned away in disgust; we did not want to hear any more, and we wondered if the hammer weilder would have to be killed in order to still his croaking voice. We believe there ought to be a place to send men who are always knocking or else it should not be a crime to throw one in the bay, with a good-sized stone, weighing about two tons, tied to his left foot. About forty fathoms would be deep enough.

NEW STEWARD IN CHARGE

Mr. Bert Jacobson is the new steward, taking the place of Charles Blom, who has been steward for the past several months and who has resigned, says the Index, published at the State Reformatory.

Mr. Jacobson has, until recently been identified with the Olympic Power Company's big project at Port Angeles and has had the supervision of three big outfits. He was formerly steward of the Soldiers Home at Orting.

Upon assuming his new duties, Mr. Jacobson said: "My one desire is to please the boys and the management alike and this ought not to be hard with the co-operation of all.

Mr. Blom has gone to Seattle where he will engage in business.

EMPLOYMENT BUREAU IN TROUBLE AGAIN

The employment bureau came in for another grilling at the council meeting Tuesday. An affidavit was read alleging that the bureau had sent a man to the Sol Duc Hot Springs with instructions that he was to get employment at $3 per day for nine hours work, six days a week. Arriving there, he was told he would have to work ten hours a day and seven days a week. He returned to Angeles and demanded his fee of $1 together with his costs to the Springs, $8, which he was refused. The case will be heard before the council next week, upon motion of Wilcox.

A GREAT INCREASE IN COURT WORK

Cases Docketed in 15 Months Nearly Equals Totals for Three Years Previous.

From the large amount of court news furnished our readers these days it must be apparent that there is a great increase in this line as well as others in Clallam County in the past year or so. The superior court docket is now working in No. 3012, and the Probate docket at No. 625, with the Tax docket in the total of 4561 cases in all since the present books were opened in August 1889, or 25 years ago. One-tenth of this total have been docketed in the last fifteen months.

The following tells the story of the decided increase as shown by the books of the Clerk of the superior court, the last fifteen months being compared with the three years previous, which were fairly good years:

Number of cases docketed during three years 1910-11-12, 492; number docketed last fifteen months, 460.

Total fees collected in Clerk's office 1910-11-12, including fines, etc., $3513.85; total fees collected last fifteen months $3479.15.

In other words, the total cases docketed and the total fees collected in this office during the past fifteen months nearly equals those totals for the three years previous to 1913.
