TWO BLOCKS ON LAUREL

Lewis Levy and Warren Morse Will Start Concrete Buildings Within Thirty Days.

Lewis Levy announced this week the completion of plans for the construction of a two story and basement concrete building, 50 by 50, on the south end of his lot, corner Front and Laurel. He expects that work will be commenced thereon by the first of the month. Mr. Levy says that already he has had numerous applications from business firms wanting to rent.

The Warren Morse block, to be built of concrete, one story and basement, will cover the entire fifty-foot lot at northwest corner of Laurel and First, running back to the alley. His plans call for two store rooms facing on First, each 25 by 60, and four stores on Laurel, each 20 by 50. The Trust and Savings Bank, which secured the loan for Mr. Morse, will occupy the corner store room. Mr. Morse has had several applications for the next room but has not leased it as yet. He expects to begin work within a month and to have the building completed within some sixty days thereafter.

August Olson had the misfortune to have his leg broken in two places at a camp near Lake Crescent, where he was working. He is at the General Hospital, Dr. McGillivray bringing him in Tuesday night. The accident was caused by a blast, Olson being about 1,000 feet away and presumably perfectly safe. He saw the rock coming his way but a large log prevented him from getting out of danger.

FOUND DEAD IN HIS BED

Sam Wing, Chinese Laundryman, Bade Friends Farewell in Note and Took One Last Shot.

Sam Wing, for many years the proprietor of the Chinese laundry in Angeles, was found dead in his bed Monday afternoon. As it was known that he had had some trouble over a laundry bill Saturday evening. reports were circulated saying that his death was due to the rough handling he had received. For this reason an autopsy was held Tuesday morning at Fulmer's Undertaking parlors, all the doctors agreeing that death was not due to violence, but might have been the result of a number of other causes, as the lungs and kidneys were both found diseased. Sam Wing's uncle and cousin from Port Townsend arrived Tuesday and were perfectly satisfied with the verdict of the doctors, as was also Lum Sue, who says Wing has been in poor health for some time and was planning on coming out to stay awhile with him on the farm to rest up. The quarrel he got into occurred about six o'clock Saturday evening and he was seen on the street about nine that evening and again he next day and from a reliable e we learn that at 1:30 Monday ing a passerby heard talking sounds of some one moving nd in the building where he . The marshal was notified lay afternoon that he had not seen around and goods delivered still at the door, so he made an tigation and found Wing lying d as though peacefully sleeping, his hands folded across his t, showing that he had died out a struggle. Besides a little y he had a sixty-five dollar k, a good talking machine, a watch and of course he owned laundry. His relatives will either l a man down to run it or will it. They requested that there no funeral services so he was ried Wednesday afternoon.

WILL HOLD LOTS FOR FEDERAL BUILDING SITE

The Treasury department has ruled that it will hold Block 32 and collect ground rent from private parties thereon, issuing revocable licenses for municipal buildings.

This while a decision against the City, Dr. F. S. Lewis, and others claiming rights thereon, does not change the status of affairs; the Treasury department has simply decided against them in their appeal. Lots 2, 3, 4, 5, 17, 18, 19, and 20 have already been sold by the government to private parties. The remainder of the block will be reserved for Federal building purposes.

FIRST STEAMER IN FOR LUMBER NEXT WEEK

The Antiope, one of the big ocean freighters belonging to the Chas.Nelson Co., will arrive next week to take on the first load of lumber from the Earles saw mill. This will, indeed, be a welcome sight to Port Angeles people.

ORDERS LOGGING FLATS

Milwaukee Places Order in Tacoma for 300 Steel Bunks for Use in Flats at Port Angeles.

Despite the fact that it is very near the end of the company's fiscal year, when most railroads are holding back on expenses, the Milwaukee has placed contracts in Tacoma and vicinity during the past few weeks valued at between $200,000 and $300,000. The contracts have been for supplies of various sorts, including lumber.

Most recent of the road's large contracts by which a Tacoma firm profited especially was the contract let last week to the Puget Sound Iron & Steel company for 300 turtleback steel bunks, to be used in the 150 logging flats now being built by the railroad in its Tacoma shops. This contract was valued at about $20,000. The flats are chiefly for the new Port Angeles line on the Olympic peninsula. About 40 miles of the road's track is laid from Port Angeles, and a logging train service will be established this summer as soon as the cars are ready. Construction on the road will continue in the meantime.

Altogether the Milwaukee has let contracts to mills in Tacoma and vicinity for 1,000,000 feet of lumber in the last 30 days. This includes a large and costly order for cresoted ties placed with the St. Paul & Tacoma Lumber Company, and ties, bridge material, heavy timbers, sidings, etc.

The fiscal year of both the Milwaukee and Northern Pacific lines ends June 30th, and ordinarily it is never the policy of a road to let large contracts near the end of the fiscal term. Railroad men here, however, believe that with the beginning of the new year July 1st, provided general business conditions show signs of improvement, the railroads will loosen up considerably on the buying of supplies and construction material in the Northwest.

The last meeting of the Parent-Teachers Association will be held in the H. S. auditorium next Monday evening and all parents and interested friends are urged to attend. Mrs. Nailor, the president, will give a report of the Parent-Teachers convention, she also has information to give in regard to the Domestic Science courses in the Olympia, Seattle and Tacoma Schools, all of which she investigated. Other important matters, such as the playground movement, will be brought up for discussion, so a large attendance is requested.

P. J. Wold, exalted ruler of the P. A. lodge, went up to the dedication of the new Elk's Hall in Seattle Wednesday; Mr. and Mrs. Lanthorn went Thursday and Mr. Luppen goes to-day, and possibly others will join him. A special rate of $2.70 for the round trip is made from Angeles.

ENTERTAINED BROTHERHOOD

Mr. Christensen's Talk on Hawaii Pronounced Best of the Entire Winter's "Course."

The Brotherhood of the Congregational church held their last meeting of the year Monday evening with a large attendance, principally due to the announcement that J. P. Christensen would be the speaker of the evening, having for his subject facts of interest in connection with his winter's sojourn in the Hawaiian Islands, the Paradise of the Pacific. After a short humorous introductory, Mr. Christensen gave some very interesting data in regard to the formation, geography and history of the Islands, showing he had made a thorough study of the subject while enjoying his vacation. That he had quite lost his heart in this delightful land of song and flowers, with its kindly, hospitable natives, was evident all thru his talk. One fact in regard to the people of this country which had impressed him strongly, was that it was only a little over a hundred years ago that they were the most war-like kind of barbarians, and today, thru the efforts of the missionaries, and christianity, they are as peaceable and gentle a race of people as one could imagine. The audience all regretted that business matters absorbed so much of the time that Mr. Christensen cut his talk short, but another pleasant evening with him is anticipated as he has an unlimited fund of information, and a most delightful and entertaining manner of giving it to others.

A number of matters came up for discussion at the close of dinner, among other things the play-ground proposition and the library. Mr. Cosser, the secretary, read a lengthy epistle from Mr. Anderson, the young man who had charge of the playgrounds last year, giving many valuable suggestions in regard to the work this year. After some discussion as to whether it would be best to ask either the Parent-Teachers Association or the school board to take over the control of the play-ground movement for the summer, it was finally decided to leave it in the hands of the same committee who had it in charge last year. Dr. Hyde reported the sum of thirty-three dollars to the credit of the Association in the bank, which will be a little nucleus with which to start the summers' work. Dr. Hyde then stated that a request had come from the Women's Auxiliary that the money pledged some time ago by the members of the Brotherhood for the purpose of buying a library site, be collected and turned over to the ladies to assist in paying off the $750 assessment on their library lot, donated to them by C. J. Farmer. Several members present expressed themselves willing to pay what they had subscribed for that purpose, and R. D. Willson reported that the largest subscriber, Mr. Russell of Pittsburg, had already forwarded this amount. To expedite matters the following committee was appointed to see the various subscribers and collect: Dr. McGillivary, Sam Lutz and A. J. Cosser.

G. V. Smith reported a movement afoot to build a home for the Commercial Club, containing also a room for the Womens Auxiliary and a public rest room and information bureau. The Brotherhood endorsed the movement and the president appointed a committee to confer with the Commercial Club and Women's Auxiliary in regard to the matter. A number of very pleasing musical selections were given during the evening. An organ solo by Mrs. Stephen Smith, a vocal duet by Mrs. Luppen and Mrs. Stoval and a vocal solo by Mrs. Luppen, with a violin obligato by Miss MacMillen and Mrs. Smith accompanist. After a rising vote of thanks to the speaker of the evening and to the Ladies Aid for their excellent chicken dinner, the meeting adjourned for the summer vacation.

Mr. McNally, the young man who was so severely injured last Friday while assisting in tearing down the old laundry building, is reported as doing very nicely at the Taylor Hospital. He had his left leg and right arm broken, besides several ribs.

THE COUNTY SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

The County Sunday School convention held in the city Saturday and Sunday, May 16 and 17, was well attended by the Methodist and Congregational churches. The churches were closed and the meetings were held at the High School Auditorium.

Mrs. Pratt, secretary of the International Sunday School Association of eastern Washington, was ably assisted by Rev. Eckles and his wife, of Port Townsend. Mr. Pratt is an expert in handling Sunday School conventions and brought to us the latest things in Sunday School work. Rev. Eckles is pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Port Townsend. Mrs. Eckles is an interesting and skillful worker among the juniors.

The addresses were all exceptionally good and added new life and enthusiasm for the work. Mr. Pratt's closing address was one of the best we have heard on Sunday school work.

Four special pieces, together with a chorus choir led by Mr. McCarty, furnished the music for the convention. The fine music was no small factor in making the convention a success.

The free use of the telephone in Professor Failor's home had something to do in keeping the work in line.

At the last service a County Sunday School Association was formed with the following officers: Mr. F. McCarty, President; Mr. Laurence of Sequim, 1st vice-president; Mr. Miller of Port Crescent, 2nd vice-president; Mr. George Lotzgesell of Dungeness, 3rd vice-president; Mr. Phillips of the new bank, secretary and treasurer.

NEW LIGHT REGULATIONS

Ordinance Introduced Providing Separate and Sliding Scales for Light, Power and Heat.

An odinance was presented by Councilman Dustman Tuesday night regulating the use and sale of electrity in the city, establishing rules, and fixing rates for power and light. The ordinance was prepared by expert Godfrey. It provides that hereafter parties desiring electric current for any purpose make written application therefor, specifying the purpose and describing premises; where applicant is not owner of premises he shall deposit two months' rental with the application, and sign a contract for one year's service; application must all be made for additional service; all charges shall be a lien against the premises; all contracts shall continue in effect 30 days after notice to city to disconnect; all charges shall be payable by the 15th of each succeeding month, and if not paid before the 20th shall be subject to being cut off; if paid as required 10% rebate will be allowed; 50c will be charged for reconnecting; $1 will be charged for testing meters, to be refunded if found incorrect; marshal shall have enforcement of ordinance and rules; any person mutilating any property of city plant or violating ordinance shall be fined $100; a supt. of electrical service shall be employed to manage said service.

The light and power rates were proposed as follows:

LIGHTING

First 50 k w hours 10c per hour; second 50, 9c; third 50, 8c; fourth 50, 7c; fifth 50, 6c; and all over this amount 5c. Minimum charge $1 per month.

POWER

First 50 k w hours 5c per hour; second 50, 4½c; next 100, 4c; next 100, 3½c; next 500, 2½c. Minimum charge $1 per month.

HEAT AND COOKING

First 100 k w hours 5c per hour; next 100, 4½c; next 100 4c; all over 3½c.

The ordinance was read twice and referred to light and ordinance committees and city attorney, who were to have a conference with Mr. Godfrey on Wednesday to settle definitely these or like rates.

TRESTLE FILL ON LINCOLN

Believed Changed Plans Will Permit of Improvement Being Made. K Street Still Kicking.

All members of the city council except Wilcox were present at Tuesday's nights council meeting. Mostly routine work was transacted.

Special committee appointed to act with the city engineer in the matter of the improvement of Lincoln street south to the Boulevard, reported recommending that the dirt fill be done away with and a trestle fill be made instead. The cost can thus be cut to $22,000 which will make the improvement possible under the assessed valuation of the district of $28,000. The report was adopted upon a motion of Dustman, and later in the evening Shields presented a Resolution of Intention to improve said street from Third to Broadway by clearing, grubbing, grading, bulkhead, drains, culverts, walks, planking, etc., as per specifications on file in the clerk's office. The time of hearing was fixed for Tuesday, June 9, when the engineer will present all data and objections will be heard. The Resolution was adopted with the understanding that the property owners interested pay all preliminary expenses.

The special committee named to meet with the Commercial Club relative to the "spit" lease reported that they would meet on Wednesday, there being no Club meeting last week.

Special committee named to get a definite proposition from the county commissioners relative to the removal of the jail, reported that the chairman of the Board had asked that the matter be taken up at the next meeting of the Board in June.

City Attorney Smith reported that the Governor would hear briefs on the necessity of special session on the 25th of May, and presented a resolution authorizing him to submit a brief in behalf of this city. Resolution was adopted upon motion of Shields.

H. J. Deitz was given permission to blast stumps in alley between 6th and 7th streets on Vine.

Request of the People's Wharf Co. for permission to erect and maintain steel tank for sale of distillate on wharf just west of present gasoline tank now in position was granted upon motion of Dustman.

Fowler asked that alley in Block 345 between Oak and Cherry south of 11th be opened, same being obstructed by fence. St. Supt. was instructed to notify parties to remove obstruction.

Shields of ordinance committee, stated that those desiring the improvement of K and 8th streets had so far paid all preliminary expenses relative to the improvement of the district and were now desirous of proceeding further. He introduced ordinance for the improvement of these streets in the usual form as per specifications on file. K street from the north line of Third street north up the hill to Sixteenth street; Eighth street from C to M streets. The cost of the K street improvement will be assessed against an enlarged district bounded by M street on west, Sixteenth on south, H street on east and Sampson tract and First street on north. The eighth street improvement will bee assessed against the abutting property to the middle of the block on each side. The ordinances were read twice and referred to ordinance committee and city attorney.

The city electrician asked for two barrels of insulators and other material and same was ordered.

Transcript of judgment Klipsun Lumber Co. vs. Young & Denio and the city, demanding payment was read and referred to the city attorney for report at next meeting.

Dustman called up the matter of the county expending a certain portion of the city allotment of collections within the city limits. The Commissioners were anxious to get the road east of the city in better shape, and just now men were available for the work. All the city would have to do would be to have its engineer give the street lines. He moved that permission be given to have the work done under the direction of the road supervisor and that the engineer be directed to give the necessary lines. Seconded by Shields and carried.

$253.05 was ordered returned to the Railroad Avenue Development League, out of the funds of Special District No. 11, reimbursement of funds paid for preliminary work.

City Attorney Smith attempted to confer with the council relative to the payment of the balance due Mr. Morse on condemnation of his building for street purposes, and as to procedure in the trial or hearing on the special assessment which comes up before the Superior Court June 4. They would not hear him on the ground that the council has nothing to do with this hearing. The city still owes Mr. Morse $2,800 on this contract and some question arose as to some change in proceedure and as to whether city was get back some part of the original $6,800 allowed.

Fleming brought up the question of providing work for local men on street work stating that the provision is in all contracts that preference be given local men where practicable, but that local men are having a hard time to get recognition. He moved that the city attorney bring in a report as to whether some of this

SHIELDS' CONCRETE STORE

Work Will Be Begun at Once with Expectation that It Will Be Ready in Sixty Days.

Bids have been called, to be in June 8th, for the building of a two story concrete block, 25 by 80, on the Shields property next to the Merchants Hotel on Front street. It is expected the building can be completed within sixty days; Ed Shields says they have not decided, as yet, what they will do for a place in which to do business in the interim.

Work was commenced yesterday by a large force of men on the Merchants Hotel building, making a full story of the second floor with a square roof instead of the old gothic affair. Owing to the short time lease under which Messrs. Day & Abbott are working, this will be the best they can do with the corner, but on the west lots a concrete building 50 by 80 will be erected in connection with the Shields building, the upper floor of which will also be used by the Merchants, giving a total of fifty-one rooms, all of which will be provided with hot and cold water, steam heat and telephone, making a modern hotel.

A sea wall 15 feet high by 75 feet long will be built across the rear of the lots.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE TO SELECT COURT HOUSE SITE

For the purpose of considering and deciding upon the location of the new court house, Chairman Hansen of the Board of Commissioners and Auditor McLaughlin have requested some twenty-five citizens to act as an Advisory Committee, meeting Tuesday next, at 10 a.m., in the court room.

The committee as selected is believed to be fairly representative of the entire county and at the same time to include none of those owning property in the vicinity, whose opinions might be biased by their financial interests. It includes Judge Ralston, all elective county officers, the five newspaper men, in Angeles and Sequim, J. A. Adams, C. F. Seal, J. M. Grant, Tom Knoph, Al. Fairservice, Geo. Lamb, S. J. Lutz, J. P. Christensen, and Willis Chambers.

The commissioners, it is understood, are not in favor of buying a new site, as the block deeded the county by the government for court house purposes cannot, under the terms of the grant, be sold. They favor a business building of moderate cost, sufficient for the needs of the present, leaving to future generations the pleasure of building the customary ornamental affair of pressed brick and cut stone. Such a build-

NEWS FROM THE STATE CAPITOL

Operations of New Minimum Wage Law Creating a Great Deal of Interest Thruout State.

Olympia, Wash., May19.—The display of live fish from the lakes, streams and ocean waters of Washington to be shown at the state fair at North Yakima this year under the direction of L. H. Darwin, state fish commissioner, promises to be the most interesting non-competitive display exhibited.

Since the opening of the new state aquarium in Seattle it has been the mecca of thousands of children, and of even as many men and women who never before have had an opportunity to see the different species of fish found in Washington waters. A large part of this aquarium, including all portions which have attracted special attenion, will be moved to North Yakima, and next year will be taken to the Panama Exposition in San Francisco.

Not only will the different specimens found in the waters of this state be shown, but the different products of the industry and the life history of such prominent members of the finny tribe as salmon and trout will be exhibited in every stage from the egg to its final consumption. Specimens of deer, birds and game of the forest will also be on exhinition and the sportsman whose interest has hitherto been neglected at the state fair will be provided with a mecca at which he can indulge his fancy to the utmost.

Unusual interest is attaching at present to the operations of the new minimum wage law.

More than a month ago three departmen store proprietors, three saleswomen and three representatives of the public met in the formal conference prescribed by law, and agreed unanimously that $10 a week was the proper minimum wage for women employed in mercantile establishments. This recommendation was adopted by the industrial welfare commission and the new law will become effective June 27

Last week three manufacturers, three girls employed in factories of various kinds and three representatives of the public, met and reached unanimous decision that $8.90 was the proper minimum wage for female factory employes. This recommendation will be considered by the welfare commission June 2, but it is probable that it will be adopted since the decision was unanimous. For many reasons the necessary expenses of a girl employed in factories are less than those of the saleswoman in a department or other store.

After the factory conference had been held, three laundry proprietors, three laundry girls and three new representatives of the public met and endeavored to agree on a minimum wage for laundry workers. The employers and the two men representing the public, the Rev. R. H. McGinnis, of Tacoma, and Judge F. M. Day, of Bellingham, voted for an $8.50 minimum, which was strongly opposed, as insufficient, by the three laundry workers and by Mrs. R. C. McCreedie, of Sunnyside, prominent clubwoman. This made the vote five to four for $8:50, with the five men lined up against the four women.

There seemed to the industral welfare commision no valid reason why the laundry wage should be lower than that in a factory, as the work is heavier, while the laundries, often being shut down for periods ranging from a half day upwards each week, would in any event, in this manner reduce the wages of many girls below the figure decided on as the minimum. For these reasons, and because the five to four vote failed to indicate a substantial agreement on the part of the conference, the welfare commission rejected the recommendations of the $8.50 wage and will call a new conference.

Twenty girl pupils at the state school for the deaf at Vancouver gave the best kind of evidence of the efficiency of the domestic science department of the institution to members of the state board of control on a recent trip of inspection, when they appeared before them garbed in dainty, stylish and fetching dresses made by themselves at a maximum cost of not more than one dollar.

The girls had each earned this dollar during the past month thru little extra work around the school, either in serving on the tables or helping in the kitchen, had purchased the material themselves and then, after designing the dresses, had finished them without advice from their teacher. They did the work at the request of the teacher to demonstrate to the board of control that they were being taught useful things at the school.

During the recent western conference of governors at Denver, it was proposed that the federal government be asked to set aside 10 per cent of all unappropriated public lands in each state for reclamation purposes and that 5 per cent of such lands be set aside for the construction of roads.

Since his return to the state from Denver, Governor Lister has had figures prepared showing how much land within the State of ashington would be available should action along the lines indicated be taken by congress. The figures are interesting as emphasizing the vast extent of the public domain within the state. They show that on July 1, 1913, there were 1,750,208 acres of unappropriated lands, lying outside the forest reserves. Of this amount 1,079,957 acres were surveyed and 670,251 acres were unsurveyed. The bulk of the land is embraced in four counties: Kittitas, 345,000 acres; Yakima, 348, 500 acres; Stevens, 139,351 acres; Okanogan, 193,420 acres.

At the last available report there were 11,684,360 acres of unappropriated lands within the forest reserves, and there has been little change since this report was made on June 30, 1912. The Mount Olympus National Monument, which is under the jurisdiction of the agricultural department, also comprises 608, 480 acres.

It will be seen from the figures that should congress set aside 5 and 10 per cent, respectively, of all the unappropriated public lands in the state, both inside and outside the reserves, a very considerable body of land would become available for road construction and reclamation purposes. Setting aside 5 and 10 per cent, respectively, of the unappropriated lands outside the reserves would make available comparatively small areas for the purposes in question, amounting approximately to 83,000 and 175,000 acres, respectively.

All three members of the state board of tax commissioners will have prominent places on the program of the state taxation conference at the University of Washington, Seattle, on May 27-28-29. The subjects assigned to them are:

"The Work of the State Tax Commission," C. R. Jackson;

The State's Natural Resources as a Factor in the Reduction of Taxes," T. E. Skaggs.

SEATTLE AND NORTHWEST

Seattle, May 19.—The Employers' Association of Washington, comprising practically every large and small manufacturer of the state, has issued the following public statement:

"Washington's first use, as a state, of 'direct legislation'—the Initiative and the Referendum, will take place at the elections to be held thruout the commonwealth on November 4th, this year.

"This program includes eleven initiative and two referendum measures, together with one constitutional amendment.

"The average citizen of the state has little, if any, knowledge of these matters. His vote on them must necessarily be unintelligent unless he shall bestir himself at once and give the proposed laws, on which he is to legislate, most careful study.

"Every one of the measures put forward will vitally affect the prosperity of the state. From a strictly dollar-and-cents point of view, the prudent business man cannot afford any delay in familiarizing himself with the contents of the measures.

"Then, with the realization of the economic evils they would bring about, he must evert his every power and influence for their defeat.

"The, time is short; immediate action is imperative."

The scattering of a barrel of money about the down town streets of Tacoma will be one of the big features of the Montamara Festo street entertainment on the afternoon of July 2, the opening day of Tacoma's summer festival. A real, big barrel of pennies, brand new, too, will be placed on an automobile and driven down the main streets and handfuls of the pennies will be thrown into the crowds.

Seattle was last week selected for the 1915 meeting of the Imperial Council, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, the entertainment of whom is regarded by cities as one of the greatest convention honors that can be given by the country's big organizations.

Friday, May 22, will be observed thruout the State of Washington as Good Roads Day, a proclamation to this effect having been issued by Governor Lister. Plans have been made all over the state for its observance and in many places various organizations have planned to do some actual construction work on the roads. Governor Lister will personally ride from Blaine to Olympia, 181 miles, over the Pacific Highway, and will either drag or supervise the dragging of the whole of this road with one of the King split-log drags.

Realizing that the University of Washington has desperate need for more buildings and mindful of the difficulty in securing additional appropriations from the legislature to enable the institution to keep up with its growth, Acting President Henry Landes will present to the Board of Regents at its next meeting a plan for the bonding of the ten-acre tract in the heart of Seattle to an amount of several hundred thousand dollars to provide a building fund. The interest on the bonds would be met by the present annual income of $40,000 from the tract, which is now held by the Metropolitan Building Company under a 40 year lease, with the surplus going into a sinking fund to pay off the principal. President Landes says that the land owned in the State of Washington by the University will in a decade bring in sufficient income to take care of its expenses without additional burden on the taxpayers by direct appropriation.

The West End was connected with Port Angeles by telephone last week. Although this line has been installed for a number of years it gets out of order during the winter months and every spring the timber companies employ a number of men to repair the line between Lacy farm at Beaver and Fairholme. This line is used for quick communication with Angeles in case of forest fires in the companies vast holdings of timber. Aside from keeping the telephone, the companies keep a crew of men of which each has his own "beat" to patrol daily. These men take charge of the patrol about June 1st and continue until the rainy season starts in the fall. The state has a patrol also and every citizen is requested to report all facts that may lead to a forest fire to headquarters. The results of these precautions can plainly be seen as in the last five years no forest fires of any consequence have resulted, as was the case frequently during earlier years.

TO KILL DANDELIONS.

Now is the season of the year to swat the dandelion. Since it is easy to kill them off it is a shame to allow these pests to take possession of the lawns and kill the grass. Last year we killed hundreds of dandelions in a very simple and easy manner. This spring we are killing those donated by our neighbors who allowed theirs to go to seed last year. The remedy is so simple and easy of application that there is no reason why all should not get rid of the dandelions. To each gallon of water, put one to two pounds of sulphate of iron, stir thoroughly and let it stand for six hours. A cheap sulphate of iron, suitable for the purpose can be purchased at the hardware store for a cent a pound.

If the dandelions are not very thick they can be killed by spraying them with this mixture. If you have many of them, take a common sprinkler and kill them by wholesale soaking them with this mixture. Do not be afraid of hurting the grass. We can give you positive assurance that the grass will not be harmed. It will do your heart good to see the dandelions wither and die, becoming black as though burned. Try it and be happy.

MEMORIAL DAY OBSERVANCE

Memorial Day this year comes Saturday, May30th, one week from tomorrow. Pacific Post and Corps will observe the day as usual. The exercises of the day will be of a quiet reverential nature. People thruout the country are becoming more and more impressed with the thought that this is no time for boisterous celebration, but a time when with all solemnity we should turn our thoughts toward the memory and upon the deeds of those whose graves we adorn and to the cause which demanded the surrender of so many lives. It should be a time of thankfulness that so many of the fast dwindling army are yet left to enjoy with us the fruits of their labor in the dark days of the 60s.

Here in Port Angeles the people have not in the past, more especially in the near past, taken the interest they should in the proper observance of the day. Public memorial services were discontinued at the opera house because of the lack of attendance by the people. The Post became tired of renting the hall and having the address delivered to empty seats, and the services have been held in their Lincoln Memorial hall, corner Fifth and Peabody streets. Last year Memorial services were held in the auditorium of the new school building, but the attendance was so small the Post decided to return to Memorial Hall, where the services will be held this year.

In all parts of the country, east, west, north and south, the people take a deep interest in the exercises of the day. The beautiful custom of going to the cemeteries with reverence and the placing of fragrant flowers on the graves of loved ones, has become almost universal. The graves of all are remembered, those of the citizen as well as those of the soldier and because of the generosity of the people there is no lack of teams and autos to carry the decrepit old soldiers and their wives to and from the cemeteries.

We wonder if our merchants and business men generally realize the large amount of mony that pours into their coffers monthly since the dollar-a-day pension has become a reality. Most of the old pensioners are poor men and spend their money at home; our business men and commercial bodies should take a greater measure of interest in the proper observance of the day.

The benefits of an honest government were recently shown at Vera Cruz, Mexico. As soon as General Funston took possession with American troops and established a civil government, he assured the citizens they could proceed with their business just the same as ever and they would be protected in all of their rights. At first they were skeptical. They could not believe that foreign'ers could come in and take possession without looting. Finally confidence returned, the stores re-opened and the citizens started to do business. Now they frankly admit that they are enjoying greater freedom from apprehension, more personal liberty and a larger measure of prosperity, owing to the influx of American money, than they have known for years. Many even say that they would cheerfully subscribe to any policy of the United States that would insure them a continuance of the present conditions and the extension of the conditions to the rest of the public. Wherever Uncle Sam makes acquaintances he makes friends.

Rev. Wood Stewart of the Church of Epiphany, Seattle, preached a most excellent sermon in St. Andrews' Sunday from a text taken from the book of Hebrews, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today and forever." The learned and eloquent speaker dwelt upon the constant change in this life. Babylon had crumbled to dust, two thousand years had wrought many changes, generations had come and gone, and many other changes were still to come. The Mountain that was God would crumble to dust and be leveled to the ground. All change, and the message the speaker would bring to the people was to be prepared for that change when it came to them.

That chickens come home to roost is a well known fact. The Arabs say that curses do the same, and there are times when this also sems true. Thruout the country there are annually more labor troubles in the mines than in any other industry. Do the corporations who operate the mines realize that they are largely responsible for these frequent upheavals? Years ago they began importing the scum of Europe for labor in the mines, men who were not educated and had none of the higher ambitions of manhood. They were brought here because they would accept a low wage, with the result that a condition has been built up that causes fret and worry. The chickens have come home to roost in Colorado.

The idea of building a club room to serve jointly for the Commercial Club and the Auxiliary, which grew out of the proposal of the Ideal Cement Block Co. to put up a small exhibition building without cost to the city, became too top heavy and collapsed at the meeting of the club Wednesday evening.

Considerable excitement was aroused in Victoria this week over the discovery that John R. Early, the leper at Diamond Point station. had escaped and was supposed to be in Victoria from which place he would try to make his escape. Officials are busily engaged in trying to find him.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has upheld the Milwaukee and other railroads in making higher charges on shingles from Port Angeles and Port Crescent than from Port Blakely and Eagle Harbor, maintaining the latter are practically Seattle harbor points.

According to the Nashville Tennesseean, the Indians have a custom that when an orator speaks he shall hold up one foot and when he gets tired and puts it down the speech ends automatically. We would cheerfully recommend this custom to some of our people in Port Angeles.

The bonds for the street improvements arrived Thursday morning and Mayor White has his hands full getting them all signed as there are about 2000.

STATE PARENT-TEACHERS AN INTERESTING MEETING

Mrs. Madge Nailor returned Wednesday from her attendance at the Mothers' Congress and Parent-Teachers Association in Olympia where she went as a delegate from the Angeles Parent-Teachers Association. She comes home full of enthusiasm and good ideas and reports a busy but delightful time. Over two hundred delegates were in attendance and the ladies of Olympia threw open their homes and took in the delegates, making their stay very pleasant. As it was necessary to crowd about a week's work into a three days session, the meetings were called at 8:00 a. m. and closed at 5:30 p. m. Many interesting reports were read and discussed and a resolution endorsing the state-wide prohibition movement was passed. While all the mothers there were in favor of prohibition, some objected to this convention taking any action as they considered it a political issue. The papers immediately took it up and said that they had hard work to get the resolution passed as so many were against the prohibition movement. We were glad to get the correct version from Mrs. Nailor. On Wednesday evening Governor and Mrs. Lister held a reception in honor of the visiting delegates at the Governor's mansion. It was a very brilliant affair. A thunder and lightning storm was in progress all evening which did not mar the pleasure in the least but rather enhanced it. The Governor remarked that they should feel honored as no other convention meeting in the city had ever been given such a grand electrical display.

State Superintendent, Mrs. Preston, attended the sessions of the convention and gave a strong talk on the necessity of raising the salary of our county superintendents, if we wanted to bring our rural schools up to the standard the present progressive times demanded. She told Mrs. Nailor how delighted she was with her recent visit to Port Angeles and complimented our schools and particularly the manual training department.

During one session of the convention the president announced that they would now hear from "the only woman director of city schools in the state, Mrs. McQuesten of Tacoma." We imagine Mrs. Nailor rather nervously awaited for her to finish her address, when she arose to announce that she was a women director from Port Angeles, also president of the Parent-Teachers Association. She was loudly applauded and was proud to tell of the splendid condition of the Angeles schools, which she found compared very favorably with other schools of the state, judging from the reports given, and were far ahead of them in some particulars.

The necessity of medical inspection of schools was strongly urged. The next state convention will be held in Spokane in 1915. Mrs. C. E. Beach of Olympia was elected president and will make a splendid worker as she is very enthusiastic as well as capable. While in Olympia Mrs. Nailor was delightfully entertained by the FitzHenrys and Miss Laura Troy and mother, formerly of Port Angeles. At the close of the session Friday, she was invited to be the guest of Mrs. McQuesten, the lady director at Tacoma, and with her visited the Tacoma schools and took in the beauties of the city in a delightful auto ride.

Olympic-Leader,
Port Angeles, Wash.
To the Editor:

It may be of interest to you to know that we have selected Mr. J. W. Failor of the Port Angeles High School to teach Geography, Arithmetic, Physics and Algebra at our Puyallup Summer Session. We have selected Mr. Failor from a great number of science teachers because we believe he is making a successful effort to vitalize his subjects by connecting them with the work of the community and the life of his pupils. This is what we are doing in our Puyallup Summer Session—making education practical and of use to the great mass of the people.

Health a Factor in Success.

The largest factor contributing to a man's success is undoubtedly health. It has been observed that a man is seldom sick when his bowels are regular—he is never well when they are constipated. From page 1.

street work cannot be done by city by day's labor. Carried. Attorney Smith stated that he had spoken to Mr. Wiley in regard to this phase of the contract and was assured that local men would be put on whenever possible. His company had men, however, who had been in their employ for as long as nine years and these he wished to retain.

Fisher called attention to bad condition of Fourth and Fifth streets between Oak and Cherry, and asked that the street committee be asked to report as to probable cost of repairing same and to report at next meeting. So ordered.

Sub-station bills came in for some discussion here. The Olympic Power Co. had a bill for $148 for work in originally getting the station in shape; now Godfrey and men put in a bill for $281.64. Mr. Godfrey explained that the station was in a horrible shape and necessitated considerable change. He thought it would now pass any inspection. Additional work done by Power Co. and by him he thought was 25% new work and 75% due to contractor's mistakes, hence 75% of these claims should be charged to Chase Eng. Co.

Council adjournd.

Say You Mr. Speculator

Port Angeles real estate has quadrupled in value in the last two years because a railroad was coming.

Now then

If values increased at the prospects of a railroad YOU ought to be able to figure a much larger increase in values in the next year when the railroad will be here—and operating.

We think

Now is the time for you to get in on the ground floor and get yours. This may be your one great opportunity. Think it over. If you cannot come, write us.

THE BALD HEADS OF 1914.

"You are old, Father William," the young man said,
"And your grandchildren number a score;
Yet whenever they strike up those cabaret tunes
I notice you're out on the floor."

"In my youth," Father William replied to his son,
"I should never have done such a thing;
But now that old age has quite softened my brain—
Why, a toe with the wildest I fling.'

"You are old," quoth the youth; "but, aside from the fact
That you've proven yourself for some trotter—
Not counting how you, with your years, are so skilled—
Do you think that such conduct is proper?"

"I have stood here and listened as long as I will
To your questions," his father retorted;
"If I stay any longer I'll miss half the fun."
And away to the dance he cavorted.

MODERN UNIVERSITY JOINS BIG BUSINESS CLASS

Aside from its importance as a seat of learning, a modern state university is a business institution, an industrial plant, if you will, of no small proportions. The University of Washington, for example, has a population of 3,000 students; employs nearly 400 men and women, most of them home owners, has an annual payroll of a third of a million dollars, spends $78,000 a year for equipment, and owns $10,000,000 worth of property.

In the matter of salaries, the University of Washington pays more for the teaching of English than for any other subject. More than $12,000 is expended on this corps of instructors; chemistry is second in the salary list, at $18,000; mathematics third, at $16,100, and civil engineering fourth at $15,000. It is not that the teachers of these subjects receive higher salaries than other instructors and professors, but there are so many students taking these courses that a larger teaching staff is required in these studies.

For equipment last year, the chemistry department spent $6,800; mines, $5,000; physics, $4,500; mechanics, $3,000; electricals, $4,000; German, $625; home economics, $2,600; botany and civil engineering, $2,400 each; philosophy and psychology, $2,100; forestry, marine station, music, and zoology, $2,000 each; mathematics, $1,800; English, $2,175; library, history, geology, physical training, $1,500 each; political science, $1,400; education, $1,300; military training and printing, $1,000 each; French and Italian, $725; astronomy, $550; journalism, public speaking, Scandinavian, and the pure food laboratory, $500 each; oriental languages, $425; Spanish, $325; Latin, $313; Greek, $313, and instruments, $2,500. In the buying of these supplies, the busar employs the competitive bid system.

Besides expenses like these, other state universities generally have construction of new buildings going on, involving the expenditure of large sums. The University of Washington has no construction projects under way and has no money for new buildings.

COUNCIL OF INDIANS REFUSE LAND ALLOTMENT

Several hundred Indians and their descendants, from various parts of Puget Sound, in council at Jamestown on Tuesday refused to enroll their names for an allotment of land in the Quinault reservation on the terms offered by the government.

The department ruled that under the act of Congress disposing of the Quinault reservation the "fish eating' tribes of Puget Sound or descendants were entitled to 80 acres to each claimant, provided the claimant went onto the reservation to live, title to pass to him or his heirs after 20 years residence and all timber and minerals on the reservation to be reserved by the government. The Jamestown council unanimously rejected the government terms and will demand that the allotments be unconditionally deeded by the government free of all restrictions. They claim this by right of treaty and say that the proposed division is unfair and unjust. It would result in compelling many of the claimants to give up their citizenship and go back into bondage as wards of the government.

Dr. McChesney, supervisor of the Indian service was sent out from Washington, D. C. and was present at the Jamestown council to take a census of the Puget Sound tribal members and to get all claimants for allotments enrolled. All of the claimants present at the Jamestown council, refused to enroll for allotments under the terms proposed by the government.—Sequim Press.

MOTHERS' CONGRESS

The Washington branch of the National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teachers Association, previous to adjournment of the fourth annual convention, adopted a resolution reaffirming its indorsement of statewide prohibition.

Resolutions were adopted providing for shorted days for primary grades, free supplies to pupils covering required subjects, introduction of agriculture in the schools, including kindergarden pupils in the enumeration for purposes of school fund apportionment, and compulsory attendance up to 16 years of age, or thru ten grades.

A resolution was adopted indorsing the recommendation of Supt. Josephine Preston that county superintendents be given higher salaries, and endorsing her work for rural school extension. A resolution was adopted urging continued activity toward world peace and indorsing the work of present and past leaders in this movement.

Thruout April, under all the strain of threatened war, the bearing of the American people was one everywhere to awaken admiration. A few disreputable newspapers shrieked and screamed; but nowhere else was there anything except sobriety, thoughtfulnss and self-restraint. The Companion believes that the people will continue to hold that fine attitude, and that if the nation has ultimately to set the house of Mexico in order, it will do it with gravity and seriousness, and a deep sense of duty. Surely, the thought of Memorial Day, now so near, is not one to awaken any frivolous enthusiasm for war. The many, many graves, the crippled veterans, the sacred rites at the cemeteries will remind us what war is, and make us resolve that it shall be waged only for the noblest ends and in the spirit of self-sacrifice.—Youths' Companion.

The United States Express company decided to go out of business on account of the parcel post. On the other hand the Adams company started in at the reduced rates for more business and during the last six months of last year, did a business of $18,468,644 as against a yearly business of $32,000,000 the year before. What is true of the Adams is probably true of the other express companies, which shows there is room for both the express companies and the parcel post. The result of the cheapening of express rates has been the transfer of a large number of articles from slow freight to quicker methods.

Resolution No. 21

Be it resolved by the City Council of the City of Port Angeles:

(1) That it is the intention of the City Council to order the improvement of Lincoln Street from the north line of Third Street to Broadway, by clearing, grubbing, filling, piling, grading, constructing culverts, drains, side-walks, crossings, curbings, trestle work, retaining walls, bulkheads, and doing such other work as may be necessary in connection therewith, all in accordance with plans to be prepared by the city engineer.

(2) That all persons who may desire to object thereto are hereby notified to appear and present such objections at a meeting of the City Council to be held in the Council Chamber in the City Hall in the City of Port Angeles,, Washington, at 8 o'clock p. m., on the 9th day of June, 1914, which time and place is hereby fixed for hearing all matters relating to said proposed improvement, and all objections thereto, and for determining the method of payment for said improvemet.

(3) That the City Engineer shall submit to the City Council, at or prior to said date, all data and information required by law to be submitted.

(4) That the cost and expense of said improvement shall be borne by and assessed against the property liable therefor, as provided by law.

Passed by the City Council this 19th day of May, 1914, and signed by the Mayor.

HORACE WHITE,
Mayor.

A treaty is pending with Colombia with a clause that calls for a payment of $25,000,000 for building the canal on territory that once belonged to that country. The United States acquired the right to build the canal from Panama and to give up this sum to Colombia seems foolish. There is another clause that will allow the Colombian government to send her ships of war, in case of war, thru the canal free of charge. The canal will do more for Colombia than anything else that could possibly happen in a hundred years. It begins to look as though if there was any failure in the present administration the department of state is the most signal and lamentable.

"But it is not true," maintained the girl sharply, and her eyes were as steady as altar flames. "Take me to him, please. I must go at once to the carcel."

But he only answered her with a stare of amazement. "Go!" he murmured, after an instant. "Have I lost my senses?"

"Yes, I must go, for he is my husband. We were wed last night."

"Mother of God!" the banker ejaculated hoarsely, and sank into the seat from which he had arisen. Ramon was staring from one to the other, his head turning jerkily.

"Oh, yes! The judge from Colon married us during the dance. I would have liked a church wedding, but that will come later. The Senor Ronnels and his wife were there also, and they will tell you. It made me very happy." Her face was transfigured by a look that left the two men no choice but to believe.

"A civil marriage!" stammered Ramon.

"A civil marriage, indeed!" said Garavel in a choking voice. "So that is where you were when I believed you to be dancing! But I will not have it, understand! You are betrothed. You have given your word to Ramon."

"Ah, but I never loved him. You compelled me to consent because you said you could not be president unless I married him. And that was not so. Ramon deceived you. Now it is all right. You will be president, and I can be happy."

Ramon's suspicion kindled on the instant. He turned upon the banker. "So I begin to see! That was a trick, then, to betray my father."

"But wait!" Gertrudis exclaimed sharply. "Did you not trick us also? Did you not use the general, your father, to make me give up the man I love? Which of us, then, is the better?"

Andres Garavel spoke threateningly, menacingly, to his daughter.

"It was no marriage, and it will not stand. I will have it annulled. The man was a criminal, a fugitive, even when he forced you to marry"—

"No, no! You cannot do that. It was I who asked him to marry me." The girl lied tremulously, panic stricken at the threat. "Before God, I am his wife!" she maintained. "And if this marriage has a flaw then I will stand beside the prison gates and remarry him as he comes forth."

"He will not come forth," Ramon declared harshly.

"Oh, yes! And now will you take me to him?"

"No!" her father bellowed. "You are my daughter, you are under my roof, and here you shall stay until you give up this madness and this man. I forbid you to go near him. Come! Do you promise?" She inclined her dark head. "I must learn more of this affair at once. You will find your senses, miss, or if you do not you will spend your life in meditation and prayer—that much I promise you."

"I do not wish to enter a convent," she said, with white lips. "I wish to be happy. When Keerk is free I shall go to him. Now, if you please, I—think I shall go away." She turned and went out of the big high ceilinged room, and not until she had reached the hall did her feet waver or her head droop.

County Treasurer.

Proceedings of Board of Clallam County Commissioners

Tuesday, May 5th, 1914 at 9:00 a. m.

The board met pursuant to adjournment, all members being present.

Minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

At 10 o'clock, the board proceeded to open bids for the graveling of that portion of the Beaver-Lake Crescent road from stations 202 to 300, finding same as follows:

Louis Hahn agreed to gravel road at the rate of 90 cents per cubic yard for gravel, and Alston Fairservice and R. O. Wahlgren and Henry Dorst each bid 85 cents.

The board deeming the above bids to be too high, rejected all bids.

The board adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas, the following numbered county general fund warrants, to-wit: No. 665, issued Jan 25, 1895, for $17.00 and No. 945, issued May 7, 1895 for $100,00 were on or about Dec. 8, 1897 ordered cancelled by the then board of county commissioners based upon a report of one Douglas Young, who was employed to expert the county books; and which order was made without notice to, or hearing by the owners and holders of them, and

"Whereas, litigation over the payment of some of such has been had in our courts and litgaton threatens over the payment of the warrants herein mentioned, and

"Whereas, the county treasurer has been offered a settlement by the owners and holders of them whereby they wil accept the face of them together with one-half of the accrued interest, and

"Whereas, it is the judgment of the board that it is for the best interests of Clallam county that the offer be accepted, and that no further litigation be had concerning them:

"Therefore be it resolved, that the said order hertofore made by the former board of county commissioners in so far as it effects the within described county general fund warrants be and the same is hereby revoked and the county treasurer be authorized to redeem the said warrants by the payment of their face and one-half of the accrued interest."

The board approved the bond of the Webster Publishing Co., and entered into a contract with said company to do the county printing for the year beginning July 1, 1914 and ending June 30, 1915.

The board also approved the bond of David Govan on his contract for building a section of the Beaver-Lake Crescent road: and the bond of Dunn & Hogan on their contract for building the road from Sequim to Blyn.

The Auditor was instructed to call for bids for the clearing, grubbing, grading and bridging of 3.40 miles of highway from Blyn to the Jefferson county line, beginning at station 375 and ending at station 555.

The board allowed the claim of A. B. Cameron in the sum of $50.00, upon Road Bond Fund, District No. 1, for right of way across the southeast quarter of sec 8-30-4, and for 10,000 yards of gravel to be taken from McDonald Creek gulch near the bridge on the bonded road, Coms. Lotzgesell and Clark voting "aye" and Commissioner Hansen voting "no."

The board adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas, it appears to this board that it is for the best interests of the county and for the public that the county of Clallam should dedicate a strip along the west side of its land owned and used as a Court-house site, to-wit: The east 220 feet of suburban lot 26 of the townsite of Port Angeles:

"It is therefore ordered that a strip of land contained within the boundaries of the lines of Lincoln street extended, from the south side of Second street to the north side of Fourth street be and hereby is dedicated to the public use for a street, and that this order be entered upon the records of this board, and that a certified copy thereof be recorded in the office of the county auditor of Clallam county, State of Washington.

The board authorized the expenditure of the sum of $750.00 from the General Road and Bridge fund within the limits of the city of Port Angeles, that amount being 15 per cent of the General Road and Bridge tax assessed within said city.

The contracting firm of Lewis, Wiley & Morse made the following proposition to the board:—

"If you will pay in full in cash assessment District No. 11, City of Pt. Angeles, in sum of $5273.44, we will rebate on contract price as per our bid at 20 cents per yard for grading the county lots, the sum of $209.73."

The board accepted said proposition, and ordered the Auditor to issue a warrant on the current expense fund to the treasurer of the city of Port Angeles in the sum of $5273.41 in payment in full of assessment on Court-house property on account of said local improvement district No. 11.

Thursday, May 7, 1914, at 9:00 a. m.

The Board met pursuant to adjournment, all members being present.

The Board instructed the Sheriff to have signs painted and placed, one at each end, of the Elwha and Dungeness River steel bridges, regulating traffic as follows:

Limiting speed of automobiles to ten miles per hour, and any kind of horse travel, to a walk; prohibiting the driving of more than ten head of stock of any kind over said bridges at one and the same time, and fixing a penalty of $100.00 for the breaking of any of these conditions.

On acount of the grading of Lincoln street, which is soon to be commenced, and the excessive cut made in front of the Court-house building, making continued occupancy of said building unsafe, on account of danger of slides, he Board was compelled to make arrangements for temporary quarters for the County offices.

After a conference with the Board of Directors of School District No. 7, an agreement was reached by which the County will use the old Central School Building, at a rental of $100 per month, until January 1, 1915, or until further arrangemens can be made.

The Board not being certain as to their authority or the legality of building a new court-house without caling an election for the purpose, sent Treasurer Babcock to Olympia o consult with the Attorney-General on the matter, and during the day discused plans and advisability of building a new court-house.

Mr. Francis W. Grant, an architect from Seattle, being present, he was asked to give his figures in case he should be hired as architect if the County is able o build at once.

The Board adjourned until Friday, May 8, 1914, at 9:00 a. m.

Friday, May 8, 1914, at 9:00 a. m.

The Board met pursuant to adjournment, all members being present.

The Board approved plans, profiles and specifications for Permanent Highway No. 3, from Station 360 to 460; Also for an additional section of said Port Angeles-Port Crescent Roard from Stations 80 to 300; and also for a pile-trestle bridge across Freshwater Creek on said Port Angeles-Port Crescent Road.

During the afternoon the Board went over the road to the Lakes, adjourning until Saturday, May 9, 1914, at 9 a. m.

Saturday, May 9, 1914, at 9:00 a. m.

The Board met pursuant to adjournment, all members being present.

Mr. A. Warren Gould, a Seattle architect, appeared before the Board, making an application for the contract as an architect for the construction of a new court-house, and submiting his terms.

Not having yet received a definite reply from the Attorney General as to the authority of the Board in building, the Board left the matter in the hands of the Auditor and the Chairman of the Board to notify Mr. Francis W. Grant of his selection as architect in case nothing occurs to prevent the County from building.

The Auditor was instructed to advertise the intention of he Board to sell the present court-house and out buildings, and to have same removed from its present site in order that same may be graded.

The Board adjourned until Monday, June 1, 1914, at 9:00 a. m.

CHAPTER XXIII.

The Crash.

KIRK had no further chance of speaking with his wife, for after the dance she was whisked away, leaving him nothing but the memory of an adoring, blissful glance as she passed. With Runnels and Cortlandt and the rest he was driven to the Hotel Central, where they found a very attractive table set in a private dining room. It was a lively party, and Kirk's secret elation enabled him to play the part of host with unforced geniality. The others joined him in a hearty effort to show their guest the high regard in which they held him, and if Cortlandt did not enjoy himself it was entirely his own fault.

Toward Kirk, however, he preserved a peculiar attitude, which only the young man's self absorption prevented him from noticing. If he had been less jubilant he must have felt the unnatural aloofness of the other man's bearing. But even had he done so he would doubtless have attributed it to Cortlandt's well recognized frigidity.

At the propitious moment Runnels, who had reluctantly agreed to share the social responsibility, made a little speech, explaining that he and his boys had been sensible from the first of their guest's interest in them and were deeply grateful for it. They now tendered him a token of their regard in a form which he could preserve.

He handed a handsome loving cup to Cortlandt, who thanked him appropriately, then waited courteously for the party to break up. But Anthony rose, saying:

"I simply have to say a word on my own account, fellows, for I owe Mr. Cortlandt more than any of you."

The object of these remarks shot a swift, questioning glance from his cold eyes and raised a hand as if to check him. But Kirk ran on unheeding:

"I want to thank him before all of you for what he has done for me personally. When I landed in Panama I got into trouble of the worst sort, and Mr. Cortlandt got me out. He was my bail bond, he put me up at his hotel, gave me clothes and paid my way until I got started. I was a stranger, mind you, but he's been just like one of my own people, and if I ever succeed in doing anything really worth while it will be due to the start he gave me."

Though the words were commonplace enough, they carried a sincere message, and Cortlandt saw by the faces about him that the others were pleased. His own gaunt features turned more sallow than ever. The memory of what he had heard on the porch of his own house a few afternoons ago, of what he had seen at other times, of his wife's telltale behavior, on this very evening, swept over him, fanning anew the sullen embers he had cherished all these months. How far would this fellow dare to go, he wondered? He dropped his eyes to hide the fury in them.

"I want to give you a little remembrance of my own." Anthony was speaking directly to him. "It isn't much, but it means a good deal to me, and I hope it will have some sort of personal association for you, Mr. Cortlandt." He drew from his pocket a plush case and took from it a very handsome thin Swiss watch with the letters "S. C." artfully enameled upon the back.

Cortlandt accepted the gift mechanically; then, as it touched his flesh, a sudden color mounted to his cheeks, only to recede, leaving them bloodless again.

"I really didn't expect this," he began slowly as he rose. "Anthony exaggerates; he is too kind. But since he has chosen to publicly call attention to our relations, I will confess that what he tells you is all true. Through my assistance—partly, at any rate—he made a man of himself. He has been welcome at my house, at my table; he has come and gone as he pleased, like one of the family, you might say. But those are little things; they count for nothing." His tone gripped his hearers, and Anthony stirred uneasily, thinking this an odd way of accepting a gift.

Unclasping his long, white fingers, Cortlandt held up the watch to public view.

"In payment for my poor friendship he has given me this magnificent thing of gold and jewels, the finest I ever saw. I never counted upon such gratitude. It is too much, and yet a man cannot refuse the gift of his friend and not seem ungracious, can he? Somewhere in the orient they have a custom of exchanging gifts. No man may accept a thing of value without making adequate return, and it has always struck me as a wise practice."

He turned full upon Kirk for the first time since he had begun speaking, and his voice rose a tone as he said, "I can't let the obligation rest entirely upon me. We have been friends, Anthony, and I am going to give you something in return which I have prized highly. It would be counted of great value by some." Once more he paused and drew his lips back in that grimace of mockery. It could no longer be termed a smile. "It is this—I am going to give you—my wife. You have had her from the first, and now she is yours."

For one frightful moment there was no sound; even the men's breathing was hushed, and they sat slack jawed, stunned, half minded to believe this some hideous, incredible jest. Cortlandt turned away gloatingly.

Kirk was the last to recover his powers, but when they did revive they came with a prodigious rush. He plunged upward out of his chair with a cry like a wounded animal, and the others rose with him. The table rocked, something smashed, a chair was hurled backward. The room broke into instant turmoil. Kirk felt hands upon him, and then went blind with fury, struggling in a passion too strong for coherent speech. He was engulfed in chaos. He felt things break beneath his touch, felt bodies give way before him.

How or when Kirk left the room he never knew. Eventually he found himself pinned in his chair, with Runnels' white face close against his own and other hands upon his arms. His first frenzy quickly gave way to a sickening horror.

"It's a lie! The man's crazy!" he cried hoarsely; then, as his companions drew away from him, he rose to his feet. "Why are you looking at me like that? I tell you it's a d——d lie! I never"—

Runnels turned to the table and with shaking hand put a glass to his lips and gulped its contents. Wade and Kimble exchanged glances, then, avoiding each other's eyes, took their hats from the hooks behind them.

"Wait! Bring him back!" Kirk mumbled. "I'll get him and make him say it's a lie." But still no one answered, no one looked at him. "God! You don't believe it?"

"I'm going home, fellows. I'm kind of sick," Kimble said. One of the others murmured unintelligibly, and, wetting a napkin, bound up his hand, which was bleeding. They continued to watch Kirk as if fearful of some insane action, yet they refused to meet his eyes squarely. There was no sympathy in their faces.

The knowledge of what these actions meant came to him slowly. Was it possible that his friends believed this incredible accusation? As he began to collect himself he saw his plight more clearly. His first thought had been that Cortlandt was insane, but the man's actions were not those of a maniac. No! He actually believed—and these fellows also. He wanted to shout his innocence at them, to beat it into their heads.

One by one they took their hats and went out, mumbling goodnight to one another, as if intending to go home singly in order to avoid all discussion of this thing that had fallen among them. Runnels alone remained.

"You don't believe I did—that?" Anthony asked in a strained voice.

"I—I think I do." There was a miserable silence, and then: "It isn't the thing itself, you know, so much as the rotten—underhanded advantage you took. If he'd been a stranger, now—Honestly, isn't it true?"

Kirk shook his head listlessly. "I wouldn't lie to you."

Runnels drew a deep breath. "Oh, come, now, the man must have known what he was saying. Men don't do things like that on suspicion."

"He misunderstood our friendship," said Kirk heavily, then roused himself for a last plea. "Look here!" he cried. "You know Cortlandt, and you know me. The man was insanely jealous. I know it sounds weak, but it's the truth, and it's all I can say. I'll go mad if you doubt me. And tonight of all"— He broke off sharply. "My God! I'd forgotten that I'm married. Suppose Gertrudis hears of this!" Anthony seized his temples in despair.

Runnels took a sudden illogical decision. He never knew exactly what had influenced him, but his whole past knowledge surged up in him with a force that he could not resist. He laid his hand on Kirk's shoulder. "Take it easy, old man," he said. "I believe you. I've always known that they didn't get along together, although—well, I won't try to understand it. He may not do anything further, and these fellows won't mention what happened here. They can't."

"Women are apt to be jealous, aren't they, Runnels? What do you suppose she'd do?"

"Don't worry about that. I'm thinking about Cortlandt. If he finds out he's mistaken what will he do?"

"He'll have to find out. I'm going to tell him. His wife will tell him. Good God! Do you see what an awful light it puts me in? You don't doubt me, do you really, old man?"

"No, but what a night this has been! It seems a year old. Come along, now. You must get out of here. You must turn in. The waiters are wondering what this row is about. I think we'd better take a walk."

In passing through the deserted lobby of the hotel they saw Clifford idling about. But they were too much absorbed to wonder what had kept him up so late. By the clock across the plaza they saw it was two hours after midnight as they stepped into the street. Then, finding no coaches in sight, they set out to walk toward Ancon, both badly in need of the open air.

A moment later Clifford followed them, taking pains to keep at a distance.

Now that the full import of Cortlandt's accusation had sunk into his mind, Kirk lapsed into a mood of sullen bitterness. He said little, but his set face worried his companion, who was loath to bid him good night even when they were close to the Tivoli. After they had parted Runnels was upon the point of going back and offering to spend the night with him, but thought better of it.

Instead of passing through the office Kirk mounted to the porch of the Tivoli and entered his room from the outside, as he and Chiquita had done earlier that evening. He found Allan waiting and bursting with a desire to gossip, but cut him short.

"Get my street clothes. I'm going out." He tore the white tie from his throat as if it were choking him. "I've been hurt, Allan. I can't explain, for you wouldn't understand, but I've been hurt. Come along."

The negro's lips drew apart in an expression of apelike ferocity, and he began to chatter threats of vengeance, to which Kirk paid little heed. A few moments later they went out quietly, and together they took the rock road down toward the city, the one silent and desperate, the other whining like a hound nearing a scent.

* * * * * * *

Edith Cortlandt did not retire immediately upon her return from the ball. Her anger at Anthony's behavior kept her wakeful, and the night had turned off so dead and humid that sleep was in any case a doubtful possibility.

She was still sitting in her room at a late hour when she heard the outside door close and Cortlandt's footsteps mounting the stairs. She was glad he had his own room and never entered hers at such an hour, for even to talk with him in her present state of mind and body would have been more than she could bear.

She was unreasonably, annoyed therefore, when he came boldly into her chamber without even knocking.

"Rather late for good night," she said coldly.

"I've just come from Anthony's supper party."

His voice made her look round sharply. She saw that his linen, ordinarily stiff and immaculate, was sodden and crumpled, his collar limp, his forehead glistening with drops of moisture.

"What ails you, Stephen?" she cried. "Have you been drinking?"

"No. I didn't drink much. I brought you something."

He took the loving cup from its flannel bag and set it upon the table. "They gave me this.

"And this too." He tossed the watch with its enameled monogram into her lap.

"Ah! That's very handsome."

"Yes. I thought you'd like it. It's from Anthony." He laughed, then shuddered.

"Why, you seem excited over these souvenirs. You surely expected"—

He broke in—a thing he rarely did while she was speaking:

"Anthony made a speech when he gave it to me—a very nice speech, full of friendship and love and gratitude." He repeated Kirk's words as he remembered them. "What do you think of that?"

Mrs. Cortlandt's eyes widened. This was not the man she knew. At this moment he was actually insistent, almost overbearing, and he was regarding her with that same ironical sneer that had roused her anger earlier in the evening.

He began to chuckle, apparently without reason. His shoulders shook feebly at first, then more violently. His flat chest heaved, and he hiccoughed as if from physical weakness. It was alarming, and she rose, staring at him affrightedly. He continued to shudder and shake in uncontrollable hysteria, but his eyes were bright and watchful.

"Oh, I—I—took it all in—I let him p-put the noose around his own neck and tie the knot. Then I hung him." His convulsive giggling was terrible, forecasting, as it did, his immediate breakdown.

"Stephen!" she exclaimed, in a shocked tone, convinced that his mind was going. "You are ill. You need a doctor. I will call Joceel." She laid her hand on his arm. "Won't you go to your room and let me call a doctor?"

"Not yet. Wait! He told them what I had done for him. I acknowledged it all and made them hear it from my lips too. Then"— He paused, and she steeled herself to witness another spectacle of his pitiable loss of self control. But instead he grew icy and corpselike, with lips drawn back in a grin. "I played with him the way you have played with me. Think!"

Her face went suddenly ashen.

"Well, I told him before them all that I intended to give him something in return, and I did. I—gave—him—you."

"God! You didn't tell him that? You didn't say that—before those men! Oh-h!" She shrank back, drawing the gauzy silk robe closer about her breast. Then she roused to sudden action. Seizing him by the shoulders she shook him roughly with far more than her natural strength, voicing furious words which neither of them understood.

"Oh, I did it," he declared. "He's yours now. You can have him. He's been your lover"—

She flung him away from her so violently that he nearly fell.

"It's a lie! You know it's a lie!"

"It's true. I'm no fool."

She beat her hands together distractedly. "What have you done? What will those men think? Listen! You must stop them quickly. Tell them it's not so."

He seemed not to hear her. "I'm going away tomorrow," he said, "but I'll never divorce you, no matter what you do, and I won't let you divorce me either. No, no! Take him now if you want him, but you'll never be able to marry him until I'm gone. And I won't die soon—I promise you that. I'm going to live."

"You can't go"—

"There's a boat tomorrow."

"Don't you see you must stay and explain to those men? My God! They'll think you spoke the truth. They'll believe what you said."

"Of course they will," he chattered shrilly. "That's why I did it in that way. No matter what you or he or I can do or say now they'll believe it forever. It came to me like a flash of light, and I saw what it meant all in a minute. Do you understand what it means, eh? Listen! No matter how you behave they'll know. They won't say anything, but they'll know, and you can't stand that, can you?"

"You have no evidence."

"No? What about that night at Taboga? You were mad over the fellow then, but you didn't think I saw. That day I caught you together in the jungle—have you forgotten that? Didn't you think it strange that I should be the one to discover you? Oh, I pretended to be blind, but I followed you everywhere I could, and I kept my eyes open."

"You saw nothing, for there was nothing."

"I waited because I wasn't strong enough to revolt—until tonight. Oh, but tonight I was strong! Something gave me courage."

CHAPTER XXIV.

A Question and the Answer.

IN all their married life Edith Cortlandt had never known her husband to show such stubborn force. Failing to dominate him as usual, she was filled with a strange feeling of helplessness and terror.

"You had no right to accept such evidence," she stormed.

"Bah! Why try to fool me? I have your own words for it. The other afternoon I came home sick—with my head. I was on the gallery outside when you were pleading with him, and I heard it all. But he was growing tired of you. That, you know, makes it all the more effective." He smiled in an agonized fury.

"You—cur!" she cried, with the fury of one beating barehanded at a barred door. "You had no right to do such a thing even if I were guilty."

"Right. Aren't you my wife?"

The look she gave him was heavy with loathing. "That means nothing with us. I never loved you, and you know it. You never could have succeeded without me. All you have is due to me—even your reputation in the service. Your success, your influence, it is all mine. The debt is all on your side, as you and I and all the world know."

"Who made me a manikin?" he demanded, with womanish fury, a fury that had been striving for utterance these many years. I had ambitions and hopes and ability once—not much perhaps, but enough—before you married me. I was nothing great, but I was getting along. I had confidence, too, but you took it away from me. You—you absorbed me. You had your father's brain, and it was too big for me. It overshadowed mine. In a way you were a vampire, for what I had you drained me of. But tonight, when he got up before those other men and dangled my shame before my eyes, I had enough manhood left in me to strike back. Thank God for that at least! Maybe it's not too late yet for me to be a man. Maybe if I get away from you and try"— His voice died out weakly. In his face there was a miserable half gleam of hope.

"I never knew you felt like that. I never knew you could feel that way," she said in a colorless voice. "But you made a terrible mistake."

"Do you mean to say you don't love him?"

"No, I have loved him for a long time. I can't remember when it began." She spoke very listlessly, looking past him as if at a long familiar picture which she was tired of contemplating. "I never knew what love was before; I never even dreamed. I'd give my life right now to undo what you have done, just for his sake, for he is innocent. Oh, don't sneer; it's true. He loves the Garavel girl and wants to marry her. I'm going to tell you the whole truth now without sparing myself. It began, I think, at Taboga, that night when he kissed me. It was the only time he ever did such a thing. It was dark, we were alone, I was frightened, and it was purely impulse on his part. But it woke me up, and all at once I knew how much he meant to me. When I discovered that he cared for that girl—well, if you overheard you must know. I frightened Garavel into dismissing him, and I set out to break him, just to show him that he needed me. Tonight he scorned me. That's the truth, Stephen. If we believed in oaths I would swear it."

"You are shielding him. You want to make me out wrong.' But she knew he knew.

"Those are the facts. Heaven knows they are bad enough, but they are by no means so bad as you thought. And I'm your wife, Stephen. That thing you did was brutal. Those men will talk. I was guilty no doubt in my thoughts, but I'm young, and you have no right to blight my life and my reputation—yes, and yours—by a thing like that. We will have to meet those men. What are you going to do?"

"I don't know," he said. "In all my life I never felt but one moment of power, and that, it seems, was false. For years I have longed to show myself a man, and now—what have I done? What have I done? I am no monster. Why couldn't you be consistent? Why did you go halfway? Why couldn't you be all good or all bad and save me this?"

"All women are half good and half bad."

"I can't blame you for not loving me, I suppose," he mumbled. "No woman of your kind could love a man like me."

"Those men!" she said in a way that made him writhe.

"Wait until I—think. I must think."

"Perhaps in the morning we can see a way out."

"That's it." He nodded. "You go to bed and I'll think. I'm trying to think now, but this heat is suffocating me and my head is tired."

Despite the breathless oppression of the night, she shivered. "I never can meet them now, and I don't see how you will dare to, knowing that you were wrong."

"Don't!" he pleaded. "The other was bad enough, but this— Tell me what to do!"

"I can't. I don't know myself. All I can see is that those men will never cease to believe, no matter what you tell them."

As she prepared for bed an hour later she heard him still stirring about in his quarters, but afterward she did not detect his cautious footsteps when he stole out of his chamber, closing the door softly behind him.

* * * * * * *

Kirk was roused from a heavy, senseless slumber the next morning by a vigorous rapping at his door. He opened the door and Runnels rushed in.

"Where did you go after I left you last night?"

"I came here, of course." As the memory of the previous night swept over Kirk he scowled.

"Did you stay here?"

"No. I went out again, and was out nearly all night trying to walk it off."

Runnels' face blanched, and he drew back.

"Then, of course, you know?"

"What?"

"About Cortlandt. He's dead!"

"Dead? When? Where? How did it happen?"

"Nobody knows just how. He was found on the sea wall near Alfarez's house, shot."

"Shot! Good Lord!"

"Did you see Cortlandt again after I left you?" Runnels swallowed hard.

Kirk whirled about and faced him. "Great heavens! No! See here, that idea is ridiculous!"

Runnels sank weakly into a chair and mopped his face. "When you said you'd gone out again it knocked me flat, understand?"

"I can prove where I was, for Allan was with me. I couldn't sleep, so I tried to walk off my excitement. No, no; I couldn't do a thing like that! I thought last night that I could, but—I couldn't, really."

"I'm afraid Wade will tell all about the party if we don't stop him."

"Then we'd better hunt him up." Kirk resumed his dressing, while Runnels consulted his watch.

"No. 5 is due in twenty minutes. We'll probably find him at the office."

Together they hastened to the railroad building, Runnels telling all he knew of the tragedy as they went along. Cortlandt's body, it seemed, had been found about daylight by a Spiggoty policeman, who had identified it. Becoming panic stricken at the importance of his discovery, he had sounded the alarm, then reported directly to the governor, whose house was close by. The whole city was alive with the news. The police were buzzing like bees. Rumors of suicide, murder, robbery, were about, but no one seemed to know anything definite.

"It was suicide," Kirk averred, with conviction. "The man was insane last night, and that accounts for what he said about me. He's been sick for a long time."

"If those boys will only keep their mouths shut," Runnels said anxiously. "There's no telling what these Spiggoties might do if they heard about that row."

"Cortlandt was an American."

"But it happened in Panama, and it would be their affair."

Although it was Sunday, the four young fellows who had taken part in the entertainment on the night before had gathered in the office and at the appearance of Runnels greeted him eagerly. Toward Kirk, however, they maintained a disheartening constraint.

The acting superintendent began to caution them tersely.

"It's a bad business," said Runnels, "and it's something I for one don't want to be mixed up in. I've heard rumors already about some sort of a quarrel at our party, so I'm afraid you fellows have been talking."

Wade acknowledged it recklessly. "Yes, I'll answer for my part, and I'm not going to make any promise of secrecy either."

Into the office behind them came Ramon Alfarez and two Panaman policemen, one evidently a sergeant.

"Eh, there you are!" Alfarez cried as he caught sight of Kirk. "You are arrest'!"

"What for?"

"Gentlemen, you will be so kind as to geeve the names, yes? The jodge will desire to make inquiries regarding those sopper to Senor Cortlan' las' night."

At that moment the building began to shake and reverberate as No. 5 rolled in from Colon, bearing John Weeks, American consul, and Mr. Williams of St. Louis in one of the forward coaches. As the two hurried out through the turnstiles they found the street blocked by a considerable crowd, evidently interested in something quite apart from the arrival of the morning train. But before they could learn the cause out from the nearby building came Ramon Alfarez, accompanied by several policemen and a group of railroad employees, among whom was Kirk Anthony.

"There he is!" wheezed the consul, clutching at his companion's arm. "Get him now before his friends."

"You are arrest'!"

Williams thrust the policemen and the curious onlookers aside and, laying hold of Anthony, cried in triumph:

"Well, Mr. Jefferson Locke, I want you."

A little man in blue uniform was attempting to take the prisoner in charge, but the detective disregarded him.

Runnels elbowed his way forward with a question.

"Oh, I've got a warrant for him," Williams declared. "What for? Well, for one thing, he embezzled $80,000, and I'm going to take him back."

"Eh? W'at is this?" Alfarez bustled into the conversation. "Embezzle? He is then a t'ief?"

"Exactly. If you're the inspector I'll ask you to make this arrest for me. I believe we're on foreign ground."

"I regret you 'ave arrive' so late," smirked Alfarez. "The gentleman is already arrest' for the murder of Senor Cortlan'. He will first answer to that, I assure you."

It was during the lunch hour that Ramon Alfarez called at the Garavel home, finding the banker and his daughter still loitering over their midday meal and discussing the topic that had electrified the whole city.

"So fine a man," the father was saying. "He was, indeed, my good friend. It is shocking."

"Yes, and to think he should have been killed in this cowardly manner!"

"Killed! Is it believed that he was murdered? Caramba! I supposed he had shot himself. That was the gossip an hour ago."

"Upon leaving the Tivoli last night Senor Cortlan' dined with six of his friends at the Central. There was drinking. The waiters have been questioned; also one of the men who was present has recounted to me what occurred. It seems that for a long time Senor Cortlan' has been jealous of his wife. Cortlan' openly accused his enemy before all the others. It was most dramatic, it was terrible! There was a scene of violence. The other man made threats."

Garavel breathed an incredulous exclamation.

"Ah, but wait! It was Senor Cortlan's best friend, too, the man for whom he had accomplished many favors, whom he accused." He noted with mingled anger and satisfaction the pallor that was creeping into the girl's cheeks. "You would never guess. It was—I hesitate, and yet you are bound to learn, my dear friends—it was this Ant'ony."

"It is a lie!" said the girl quietly. "He loved no one but me."

"Gertrudis!" The banker was shocked beyond measure at what he considered his daughter's jealousy. "Those are not nice words."

"I do not believe it."

Ramon had not counted upon such a spirit, and, his anger getting the better of him, he sneered: "I should not have spoken. I did not know you still care."

"She does not care," Garavel declared loudly.

"Ah, but I do. I love him very dearly."

The two men were upon their feet in an instant, staring at her, the elder in amazement, the younger with rage and resentment blazing from his countenance.

"Silence!" thundered the banker. "Yonder stands your affianced husband."

"It is a mistake"— she persisted gently.

"No, no, no! There is no mistake," chattered Ramon. "Those other men have told all, and your Ant'ony is now in the carcel under guard. It was I who saw to his arrest. Nor is that all. He is not at all the man he pretended to be, even his name is false. This morning there arrived an American officer of police to arrest him on other charges. He is a thief, it seems, having stolen $80,000 gold from his employers. Oh, there is no mistake. Within the hour I have been talking with this detective, and he has the papers of proof. Is not that enough?"

"It is, indeed!" gasped the father.
