ANGELES POSTAL DEPARTMENT MOVES INTO NEW BUILDING

Installation of Modern Equipment Makes Local Quarters Best Second Class Office in Washington, Says Postmaster.

The installation of modern equipment in the new post office building is nearly completed, and Postmaster Fisher and his force will move into their new home on Oak street as soon as possible during the coming week. Mr. Fisher says that this will be the finest second class office in the state when finished. All the material, with the exception of two roller-top desks and some chairs, is made of steel with an imitation mahogany finish.

The front and one side of the building contain several large plate glass windows to admit a sufficient amount of light, the lack of which was one of the bad features about the old quarters. A double door entrance is in the middle of the building, and to the left is the postmaster's private room with its fixtures and a large three-combination safe made to order.

To the rear of this room is a caged space with three windows in the partition. One is for money orders, another for postal savings and the third for parcel post. The general delivery window is just beyond. All the private boxes face the street and are in nine sections, each of which contains five horizontal rows of small boxes, two of medium size and a single row of large ones. Below these is a space for packages. There are 737 boxes of the small size, 180 of the medium and 48 of the largest, a total of 965 which is about 400 more than there are in the old office.

None of the boxes are opened with keys but by a combination which is thrown off when the door is closed. All of the distributing tables, newspaper cases and lockers in the clerks' department, are of steel. It will be necessary to have extra help after the change is made, and Mr. Fisher has already applied for an additional clerk. Miss Athelene Fisher, who obtained the highest rateing in the civil service examination for clerks held last spring, will be employed as a sub until she receives her regular appointment from government officials.

Mr. Fisher said Wednesday forenoon that there was a $2,000 increase in business at the local office during the past year and that the citizens are entitled to free delivery by carrier. The only thing that prevents such delivery now is a government ruling which requires a sidewalk on at least one side of every street in the district, and until the people and the city council provide sidewalks, everyone must go to the post office for his mail.

If possible, Mr. Morse and Mr. Fisher will arrange to throw the new building open for inspection by the public the day before it is occupied. A notice to that effect will be posted in the old building if such a decision is reached. There will be no change in the hours of service after the new system is in operation.

A delightful evening's entertainment was furnished about forty young people Wednesday when Ed Abbott entertained with a box party at the Dream to see John Barrymore in "An American Citizen." After the movies the party adjourned to the Olympic Hotel and enjoyed the remainder of the evening dancing. Mrs. Chas. Tucker acted as chaperone and her little daughters served punch.

THE WARREN MORSE BLOCK

Foundation Going in for Two Story Concrete Building 50 by 140.

Work has just been started on the construction of the foundation for the two-story building to be erected by Warren Morse on the northwest corner of Laurel and First streets. The excavators made fine headway during the past ten days and succeeded in raising the grade of the alley between Front and First streets several feet.

The specifications call for a two-story building 50 feet wide and 140 feet long made of reinforced concrete thruout. Provisions have been made for five stores and a bank on the main floor, the corner facing both streets being occupied by the bank. There will be an entire glass front on each street, and the entrance to the stairway will be in the middle of the building off Laurel street and will be between the bank and the first store.

The bank will contain a reception room, a directors room, a cashier's room, a safety deposit vault, a room for vault patrons, a lobby and working space. There will be a single vault in the basement and a double one on the main floor. The plans for the second floor have not arrived as yet. Architects Kingsley & Kuhn of the Empire building, Seattle, have provided for a double galvanized iron cornice.

CHIPPEWA EXCURSION TO BELLINGHAM THE 25TH

The Chippewa will run on an excursion from Port Angeles to Bellingham on Saturday, July 25th. The boat will leave at 8:30 a. m. and is scheduled to arrive at Anacortes at 12 o'clock and at Bellingham an hour later. It will return at 6:00 p. m. and will reach Anacortes at 7 o'clock and Port Angeles at 11 o'clock. Round trip tickets are sold at $1 and half fare tickets at 50 cents.

RAILROAD COMPANY WOULD EVADE TIME-LIMIT PROVISION

New Ordinance Combining Old Franchises Found to Conceal the Traditional Nigger. Reminds Oldtimers of Days of the P.A.E.

Messrs. Shields and Fisher were absent at Tuesday's council meeting. Because of this fact and the fact that Mr. Fleming did not feel sufficiently well acquainted with the provisions of the grant, the franchise to the railroad company for a ferry slip failed to get the necesary five votes, and was defeated on final passage. The franchise committee had recommended its passage.

Railroad Franchise Laid Over.

The franchise committee reported adversely to the proposed new ordinance to the railroad company which seeks to place the present grant in one new ordinance and incidently seeks an extension of time in which to complete work. Mr. Bigelow in giving the report of the committee that it do not pass in its present form stated, that Mr. Shank had simply notified council at his conference with them all that was wanted in the new grant was a consolidation of the provisions of the old grants, whereas there are several material changes in the new ordinance. The old ordinance recites that the road shall be built thru Clallam and Jefferson counties to a transcontinental connection by January 14, 1914. The new grant does not state any day of completion. Upon motion of Mr. Dustman, the other member of the committee, consideration of the ordinance went over for one week, and Mr. Shank was ordered notified of the report of the committee.

Third St. Extension Nearly Completed

A. L. Johnson & Co. asked 10 days additional time in which to complete contract in district 10, Third street extended. City attorney held that to grant any extensions without consent of bonding company would invalidate bond. It happened that the specifications call for completion ten days later than the contract hence no additional time was necessary.

City Attorney Smith reported in regard to petition to stop grade work at Vine street, giving it as his emphatic opinion that city had no power in the matter, that to attempt to stop work now would not only invalidate the contract, but also the bonds of the district. The report was adopted.

A letter was read from the Chase Eng. Co. in regard to the contract for building the sub-station, in which Mr. Chase alleges that the extras in the building were ordered by city and payable by city, not him, also that delay was caused by city's failure to furnish juice; that he offered to come here and get plant started if furnished transportation and was therefore not liable for any moneys paid others for starting up the plant. Referred to city attorney for report.

Insufficient Equipment for City Team.

Mr. Wilcox stated that he had been watching the city team at work with insufficient equipment and moved that 100 feet of ½ inch cable and some blocks be purchased. Dustman protested against the street department getting too active for awhile, stating that there is a big demand for light extensions, but his department had ceased all new work until city could find itself financially, and that other departments should do the same The motion died by mutual consent, Dustman alone voting.

Mr. Wilcox also brought up the matter of sending the fire chief to Victoria in September where all the chiefs of the coast will discuss methods of preventing fires and of putting them out after being started. Referred.

No Privileges Granted Saloons.

Messrs. Mettler and Pollanz of the Angeles Bar asked privilege of repapering their saloon room on Sunday, agreeing that no one should be served with liquor during the operation. Council held that no special privileges should be granted, and the request was turned down by unanimous vote.

Mr. Fleming of the cemetery committee stated that there was still some wood on the cemetery tract and Mr. Pabst offered $75 for same. Mr. Dustman thought city should get $100, and clerk was authorized to sell same for $100.

H. D. Kyle, inventor of the "Kyle Kottage" asked privilege of erecting

Frank C. Teck

Frank C. Teck, a newspaper man and publicity expert who is to succeed W. S. Pearce the first of next month as secretary of the Port Angeles Commercial Club, arrived in town Wednesday morning on the Sioux. He is a member of the Seattle Press Club annual outing committee and has already begun to arrange for that organization to come here on an excursion on Sunday August 9th. A crowd of about 1,200 made the trip to Anacortes last year.

Mr. Teck was for four years secretary of the Bellingham Chamber of Commerce and has had many years of experience in the newspaper, magazine and publicity fields. The citizens of this rapidly developing town extend to him a hearty welcome and assure him of their united support in placing Port Angeles among the leading cities on the sound.

GERMAN PICNIC.

The German Ladies will give a picnic at 14th and Valley streets, Sunday, July 19th. Ice cream and lunch served. All are welcome.

GAME LOST BY WEAK INFIELD

Reardon Twirls Winning Ball, but Wild Heaves and Poor Support Give Game to Jaffe Nine.

Yes, Agnes, 'twas a sad affair. Some say that a dark, cross-eyed man with a scar on his right cheek cut the safety ropes and let the baloon escape, while others claim that some careless person dropped a lighted cigarette into the box of fireworks, and the explosion occurred Sunday afternoon. Anyway, the Port Angeles infield went up in the air during the fifth inning of the game with the Jaffe team of Seattle, and when last sighted the players were soaring near the crater of Popocatapetl. The score stood 6 to 2 in favor of Jaffe when the crowd went home, but a late report has arrived saying that the visitors ran the count up to eight.

It was a terrible shock to local fandom afer that double victory of last week, especially as everything started out so lovely in the first inning, and the opposing pitcher was little and appeared easy pickings His name is Rounds, and he was invincible thru the whole nine of them —rounds, you know. Hereafter, any man with a round handle to his cognomen who tries to enter this city could be sand-bagged.

Mr. Rounds allowed but two measly singles after the second inning. He also starred at bat, making two hits out of four times up. But at that, our Pete put it all over Mr. Rounds and had all four corners nailed down. Reardon did all the real playing for the home team. With perfect support he would have scored a shutout and would have won the game, as Angeles made one earned run while the Jaffe players scored none.

Pete whiffed 15 of the Seattle batters and made two of the five hits obtained off Rounds' delivery. One of the bingles was good for two bases. A noticable feature was the fact that none of the Angeles outfielders caught a fly ball. Pete struck out three successive batters in the second frame, and Rounds repeated the stunt in the sixth.

The first run of the afternoon was made by the locals in the first round. Best hit the first pitched ball safely inside of third base and stole second. He reached third on an error by Rounds and scored when Bayton singled after two were down. That was the only earned run of the game, and by perfect playing on both sides the score would have been 1 to 0.

The Seattle players made four runs in the fifth after two were gone with a man on first. Chapman threw wild to first in trying to retire the next batter, and the next two came thru with hits. Chapman uncorked another wild heave on the next play, but the runner was caught later at third. Another run was made in the following inning on two errors, a sacrifice and two hits.

Angeles put its second tally across in the last half of the fifth on a pass and two singles. The fans back of

ODD FELLOWS INSTALLATION.

The following officers were installed Monday night by the Odd Fellows to serve the coming six months:

Noble Grand, A. J. Cosser; Vice Grand, O. D. Burgman; secretary, F. H. Cooper; treasurer, E. A. Prickett; financial secretary, John Rychmer; chaplain, E. H. Finch; warden, Tristen Ball; conductor, J. O. Johnson; R. S. N. G., Chas. Bork; L. S. N. G., J. E. Bigelow; R. S. V. G., P. J. Wold; L. S. N. G., C. E. Gordon; R. S. S., Orson Boyd; L. S. S., Earnest O'Brien; I. guard, J. D. McRoberts; O. guard, W. Lawson. Past Grand, P. F. Harley.

The Odd Fellows initiate a class of ten next Monday night. Sequim lodge will attend and a social time will follow.

Mrs. Curtis, who pleased so many by her lecture on Lohengrin, will lecture on "The Return of Peter Grim," at Parish hall on Friday evening, July 17th, 1914, under the auspices of the Musical Club. Tickets thirty-five cents.

BEGIN WORK ON FIRST STREET AS FRONT NEARS COMPLETION

Sluicing Will Begin on First Street as Soon as Traffic is Transferred to Front Street; Business Houses Make Changes.

The Front street regrade has been advanced in the past week to such a point that the sluicing will be finished within a few days and work will be started on the grading of First street. The contractors have been filling in the street above the main sewer and have brought the block east of Lincoln nearly to the required level. By the end of next week a permanent and gradual grade will be established on Front street, and planking will be laid immediately from Lincoln to Peabody street.

Workmen have begun to finish laying the planks on all streets where the fill has been completed. Posts have been set and the erection of bulkheads started on First street near the city hall that the sluicing may be under operation there as soon as traffic can be transferred to Front street. The First street work is expected to be finished much sooner than the one now nearing completion, as the fill and the cut are not so great.

With the opening of the traffic on Front street, practically all of the stores, markets, hotels and other buildings on the main thoroughfare will have been raised to a level with the sidewalk. The Clallam County Bank building will reach its normal height by the end of the week, and jacks will be placed under the Lutz brick block early next week. When this is raised there will be no stores on the south side of the street below level.

The Morse Block has been altered during the past few days so that the main entrance may not appear to lead into a basement. The stock has been moved up to the balcony, which will encircle the first floor, and as soon as the new floor is in, it will have to be moved again.

The Trust and Savings Bank, which occupied the store room facing Laurel street, has been moved to the building beyond until a satisfactory location can be obtained

The one story building under construction by Abbott & Day north of the Merchants Hotel is rapidly nearing completion and presents a fine appearance for its size.

WORLD FILM PRODUCTIONS AT THE DREAM FRIDAYS

The management of the Dream announces that hereafter the first show will begin at 7:30 sharp instead of at 7 o'clock and that the second performance will start at 9 o'clock. The only two evenings of the week on which twenty-cent admissions will be charged are Wednesday, when the Famous Player pictures are shown, and Friday when the World Film Corporation productions are presented.

Laura Sawyer will appear next Wednesday in two three-reel features, "The Daughter of the Hills", a romance of ancient Rome, and "An Hour Before Dawn," a thrilling detective story. "The Price of Treachery" in five superb reels will be a headliner for Friday's bill.

MILITIAMEN RETURNING

The cruiser Milwaukee, with the Oregon and Washington naval militia aboard, is expected to arrive from Honolulu tomorrow for target practice. Visitors will doubtless be welcomed Sunday afternoon, target practice being indulged in Monday and Tuesday, in the lower bay and straits.

CIVIL ENGINEER MEETS DEATH IN PECULIAR MANNER

While walking on the railroad trestle near the brewery Monday afternoon, George West, a civil engineer employed by the Chicago, Milwaukee and Puget Sound Railway, dropped between two ties into three feet of water and was found dead when taken out a few moments later. The exact cause of the death is not known. Those at a distance who saw West fall said that he appeared to stumble, but physicians believe that he was overcome by heart failure.

It was at first supposed that West had drowned, and since he had been in the water but a few minutes an effort was made to restore life by artificial respiration. The body was removed to the Fulmer Undertaking parlors, where it was found that the neck was broken. In falling between the ties, West probably struck his head against one of them.

All of West's relatives are in Europe, so a member of the Renton lodge of Odd Fellows, which West joined while living in that town, came here Tuesday and took the body to Renton on the following day for burial.

WM. STOVAL ANSWERS CALL

Prominent Citizen Employed by the Lacy Timber Interests Dies Monday in West End.

The sad news of the sudden death of Mr. William A. Stoval at his home in the West End of the county Monday night, came as a great shock to his many friends and acquaintances. It was just a week to the hour of his death at nine o'clock Monday evening that he had been joined his wife and daughters, who had gone for their annual summer vacation with him in the country, the two boys having gone out a couple of weeks previous. The beautiful home the Lacy Co. had just completed for Mr. Stoval and his family, and in which he had taken such pride and pleasure and had worked so hard, was all furnished and ready for them to enjoy. It was with happy thoughts of the pleasant summer before them that they all gathered round the big fire place Sunday evening listening to the stories Mr. Stoval had to tell and having a merry time, little thinking how soon it was all to end. Shortly after they had retired at 11 o'clock, he was taken violently ill with terrible pains in his heart and was in great distress from then until death relived him. The Forks doctor was with him until the last. Dr. McGillivray, one of his closest friends, was called but could not reach him in time, receiving word of his death while on the way. Mr. Stoval had not been a well man for some time but would not give up, as it was such a busy season of the year and so many things to demand his attention and care.

The remains were brought to Port Angeles Tuesday night and funeral services were conducted from the family residence at 2:30 Wednesday afternoon by the Rev. Stephen Smith

NEWS FROM THE STATE CAPITOL

Olympia, July 15.—Conservative estimates in the fruit crop report just issued by Assistant Commissioner T. O. Morrison of the department of agriculture show an expectation of 16,500 cars of fruit for shipment this year, against 11,271 last year and 15,055 in 1912. Increase is expected over last year's production in all of the fruit districts of the state, but only in the Wenatchee valley and Ferry-Stevens county districts is an increase expected over 1912. The largest increase will be in the Wenatchee valley where it is expected that 6,800 cars of fruit will be shipped against 4,972 last year and 4,912 in 1912.

"In western Washington," says the report, "the number of canneries greatly exceed those of Eastern Washington, even though the bulk of the fruit crop is produced in Eastern Washington, only two canneries being reported from the east side of the state. Estimate is placed upon the Sumner and Puyallup canneries, the largest in the state, as having an output this year of 470 cars of canned goods. The prune crop for Clarke county is estimated at 1,500,000 pounds, and the berry product of the island districts is placed at 240 cars. Anthracnose of berry canes is considered the most serious pest to the berry interests, upon which the experiment station at Puyallup is now working and on which it shortly expects to have a control measure.

The filing of nine petitions carrying with them initiative bills seeking places on the ballot at the fall electons has imposed a huge task on the secretary of state's office. Since the filing of the bills Secretary Howell has had at work a force of chekers which has increased from a few until it is now more than 150 and is being worked in three-hour shifts. This force has compiled from the petitions a card index of qualified voters which is being used in a recheck of the petitions for duplicate names. It is necessary also to scan the signatures carefully to eliminate such as are improperly filled out or improperly certified by officials. Because of the fact that Washington is having her first experience with initiative legislation many slips have been made whch are likely to endanger some of the bills. When it is considered that there are nine petitions and that the number of names runs from about 32,000 in the case of one of the measures up to 112,000 to 114,000 in the case of the prohibition bill, some idea may be had of the stupendous character of the task. Secretary Howell feels confident, however, that the big job will be complete well within the statutory time and the successful petitions certified for a place on the ballot. The prohibition bill, which was the first filed and the first checked, was expected to be complete early this week.

In compliance with a request of Governor Lister the United States Department of Agriculture has appointed W. S. Ballard of Watsonville, California, plant pathologist in the Department, to cooperate with the State Department of Agriculture in combating the ravages of the fire blight in Washington orchards. Mr. Ballard left Watsonville immediately upon being notified by wire of his appointment. He arrived in Seattle Sunday, July 12, and there was joined by T. O. Morrison, assistant commissioner of agriculture and head of the horticultural division. Mr. Ballard and Mr. Morrison proceeded at once to the Yakima valley, where on Monday they began lectures and field demonstrations in co-operation with the field inspectors and the district fruit growers' organizations. Their tour will include all the principle fruit growing districts and Mr. Ballard, who is an expert of high rank on tree diseases, will remain several weeks in the state.

The office of the state superintendent of public instruction has announced a change in the subject for high school debates for the ensuing year from the question of the segregation of state and local revenues to single tax. The new question is stated as follows:

"Resolved, that all revenues for local purposes in the state of Washington should be raised by a tax levied on land values only. Constitutionality granted."

The term "local purposes" is to be understood as including all political sub-divisions of the state,—the county, municipality, school district, road distrct, and port dstrict.

The state tax commission is now engaged in a series of tax hearings in various cities in the state during which testimony is being taken on actual transfer values of property. More than 4,000 witnesses have been summoned and hearings will be held in all parts of the state for the purpose of obtaining values to be used by the state board of equalization in equalizing the valuations to be fixed by the county boards. Record is made of the actual sale value of specific pieces of property in each county; these values are compared with the assessments later made by the county for the purpose of discovering the ratio of taxation in that county. The state board can then inform the counties upon what valuation the state levy must be based in each county. The tax board does not hear individual complaints on assessments or taxes.

CANNING IMMATURE SALMON

L. H. Darwin, state fish commissioner, and Dr. H. T. Graves, head of the state agricultural department, passed thru Port Angeles last Friday enroute for Neah Bay to investigate the catching and canning of immature salmon. It has been reported to the officials that salmon that are still feeding are being caught outside the straits and brought to several canneries on the Sound to be packed.

The canners recently promised to desist from the practice, but it is understood that two are still using immature fish. On the theory that they are unfit for food, the state agricultural department is endeavoring to prevent the canning of such fish, while Mr. Darwin desires to stop fishermen from throwing overboard thousands of salmon which the purchasing canner feels unable to handle, or which cannot be delivered before they spoil.

WEST END MAIL CONTRACTS

The Clallam Bay-Forks-Mora mail contract has been let to the former contractors at $3,000 for first-class mail and $1.45 per hundred pounds on all other mail. With the improvement of the roads and consequent development of the country, this mail route becomes one of the most important of the rural routes in the state. The Clallam-Ozette route has been discontinued, no one being found willing to handle the twice-a-week service, including the parcel post business, over a pony trail, at a price the department would consider paying.

Those who have everything going out and nothing coming in, soon won't have anything going out or coming in. Deposit part of your pay-check each week with the Port Angeles Trust & Savings Bank so that you will always have money to draw on when you want it.

State fish commissioner reports $14,752,652 as the annual product of the state according to his report just out for 1913.

A car of cherries from Cashmere brought $2,615 in Philadelphia.

THE CURSE OF PORT ANGELES

Unimproved Streets and Lack of Shade Trees Give Intending Settler Poor Impression.

The wretched condition of most of the streets and walks in the residence part of our city has been emphatically impressed upon the attention of the writer the past two weeks, by remaks of visitors in our city which makes one wonder how many of our visitors are similarly impressed and if it wouldn't be time and money well invested to make some attempt to improve present conditions?

For two years under the supervision of the Women's Auxiliary to the Commercial Club, assisted by the city council, a clean-up day was held and a great deal of good accomplished. The women and children in many localities got out and worked hard, but in only one or two districts was it reported that so much as one man turned out to help. This was discouraging, and this year the women refused to again undertake the work, particularly so, when the council twice turned down their petition to have the cows restricted from the business and more populous residence districts. A great argument in favor of the cows running at large has been that they kept us from being overrun with weeds and tall grass. You, who have put forth this argument take a stroll about the city and count the thistle plants alone. There are whole streets lined with them, besides fields of them in some districts. What does this say for the enterprise and progressiveness of our city?

Mrs. William Bell, who was a guest in the city last week, said, 'Why, your residence streets are no better than they were twenty years ago. What have you been doing? Such a condition couldn't exist in an Oregon town. The city authorities would cut down the weeds and you would pay the bill. Furthermore the women would camp on the trail of the councilmen until they compelled them to pass the necessary ordinance for the beautifying of the city." Mrs. Bell is a prominent club woman and civic worker in Roseburg, Oregon, but says she still looks forward to making Angeles her future home, but not while we have brakes instead of shade trees and roses. People out here from the East last summer were heard to remark "Yes, the scenery and climate of Port Angeles is delightful but why don't you have shade trees and pretty streets?" The town has an unkempt shiftless appearance as though no one took an interest and it makes us home sick." Someone replied, "Well, you would be surprised if you knew all the work the women of Port Angeles have done and are willing to do now, but it is utterly useless to set out shade trees or attempt parking strips while the cows browse in front of your door and reach over the fences to nibble at your choice rose bushes and flowers."

City authorities do not realize that Port Angeles might be made the summer resort of thousands of people, who would be attracted by its beauty and cheer in addition to other natural advantages.

"Sire," said Baron Hausman to Napoleon 3rd, defending his plans for widening the streets and planting trees in Paris, "if we make Paris the most beautiful, healthful and attractive city in the world it will be visited by the wealthy classes of all nations, and the money they spend will amply repay the present cost." What would happen if the people of Port Angeles would line their streets with trees and make their garish thoroughfares bowers of attractiveness! It is said: that the best citizen of the city is the tree. It means homeyness, delight to the eye, warmth to the heart.

Let all public spirited citizens destroy within the next two weeks all the thistles in their immediate neighborhood, before the seeds are again scattered to the four winds, and let the council and mayor take some action on what is to be done about the others; always remembering that it is little use to pass ordinances or laws unless we see that they are enforced.

Perhaps our God somewhere has made a thing
More admirable to see
Than a majestic tree;
But if He has, I think it grows
Around heaven, by the stream that flows
Where whiter souls than ours sing.

Who plants a tree, he is akin to God.
In this impatient age
Where quick rewards engage
The fevered service of the crowd
In reverent wisdom he is bowed
And hides his distant purpose in the clod.

The blessed man that plants a long-lived tree
That shall grow nobly on
When he is dead and gone,
He seems to me to love his kind
With true sincerity of mind;
He seems to love his fellows yet to be.

Above his grave the suns shall flush
and fade,
The seasons come and go,
And storms shall drive and blow;
But sun and rain, that from his tomb
Efface his name, renew the bloom
And glory of this monument he made.

ATTENTION, DELEGATES.

The Seattle Federation of Women's Clubs, thru Miss Bessie L. Winsor, chairman of transportation, has arranged for special train, via the Northern Pacific railway, to the Washington State Federation of Womens Clubs annual convention at Raymond. All delegates and alternates from surrounding towns are invited to join the party, thus affording opportunity for acquaintance and sociability. The train will leave Seattle at 8 a. m. Monday, July 20th. Kent, Tacoma, Auburn and Puyallup delegations will join, and delegates from east of the mountains on the Northern Pacific may join the excursion at either Seattle, Auburn or Tacoma, whichever place guarantees the best connection. The Northern Pacific will have the best accommodations possible. Special diners will be placed on this "special" and every delegate will arrive happy and refreshed at Raymond at 2:40 p. m. On this all-daylight trip the scenery may be enjoyed all the way.

The opening session of the Washington State Federation of Women's Clubs at Raymond will be held Monday evening, July 20th, at 8 p. m. Governor Lister will speak at this meeting.

The Executive Board meeting will be held in the afternoon of Monday and the first all-day session will be on Tuesday morning at 9 a. m.

Many of the Angeles club women have been desirous of knowing just what the trip to Raymond would cost so we give the following information:

The round-trip ticket from Seattle to delegates and visitors alike will be $5.95. You will pay full fare going or $4.45 taking a receipt therefor, which, when signed by the corresponding secretary at Raymond will entitle the holder to one-third fare returning of $1.50. The first train for Raymond will be at 8 a. m. Monday morning and the next at 4:15 p. m.

NOT FOR WOMEN

President Wilson's recent refusal to lend his influence to secure the passage of the pending suffrage amendment to the United States Constitution is a keen disappointment to a large body of American women. The action of the General Federation of Women's Clubs at the Chicago Biennial edorsing suffrage, encouraged the hope that the President would see the handwriting on the wall and gladly change his heretofore unfavorable attitude on the measure. So another large delegation of women, representing every state in the Union, made a pilgrimage to Washington and presented the chief executive withanother mammoth petition.

This effort, however, met with the same fate that was accorded all former movements of like nature. The President refused the request on the ground that it was a matter for the states to settle rather than one of naional legislation. He also explained that he, as head of the Democratic party, could not commit himself because of the fact that the Baltimore platform was silent on that subject. When an attempt was made to argue the matter, the President terminated the interview by abruptly leaving the room.

There is a current feeling that the propsed amendment is doomed to failure. The administration is against it, which, of course, simply reflects the attitude of the entire Democratic party. Evidently the "New Freedom" is not for the women of the land.

Within the week 12 towns have applied for Farmer's Institutes for the coming season. Commercial Clubs, Farmers' Unions, Granges and others desiring Farmers' Institutes the coming fall and winter should address at once the Extension Department, State College.

A crank comes forward with the proposition that the ex-presidents be made salaried advisers to their successors. What would it amount to,—would any president accept the advice of another who did not agree with his policies?

first base began to do some real rooting in the last of the seventh, and it looked as though there would be some scoring, but the fielders gathered in all the long drives. Chapman was safe when the first basemen dropped the ball. Rounds became rattled, and made a wild pitch and passed Johnson, who was sent in to run for Logerloff in the fifth. Reardon and Best sent long flies to the outfield, and Erb popped up to Taylor.

The visitors rang the bell three more times in the ninth on three errors, three stolen bases and a hit. The usual wrangle was staged in the first half of the fifth spasm when Chapman pulled off his second overthrow to Reilly. When the first baseman recovered the ball, he repeated the trick in throwing to second. There seemed to be a dispute as to whether Reilly was entitled to be credited with an overthrow after one had been made already on the same play. The difficulty was solved when it was learned that Chapman had reserved all rights on the art of overthrowing.

The management expects a much better game when Port Townsend comes to play next Sunday. Fans should forget the ungentlemenly behavior of the other afternoon, and turn out with regular support and pep, for accidents will happen, you know. The score:

Resolution No. 22

Be it resolved by the City Council of the City of Port Angeles:

1. That it is the intention of the City Council, to improve Peabody street, from south line of Victoria street to North line of Broadway, in the City of Port Angeles, by the construction of a bridge across Peabody gulch or Creek on Peabody street between Second and Fourth streets, the same to be constructed of trestle work, piling or concrete piers, planking and asphalt roadway covering thereon, said bridge to be thirty-two (32) feet in width, and to construct on Peabody and Seventh street, a wooden bridge or culvert, and doing such other work as may be necessary in connection therewith, all in accordance with plans to be prepared by City Engineer.

2. That it is proposed to create an enlarged district to pay the whole or such portion of the cost and expense of such improvement as shall be chargeable against the property within the district. The boundaries of such enlarged district are hereby specified and described as follows, to-wit: On the East, it is bounded by the West side of Albert street from Victoria street to Broadway; on the South, by the north line of Broadway from east line of Chase street to west line of Albert street; on the West by the east line of Chase street from the South line of Victoria street to Broadway, and on the North, by the South line of Victoria street from the east line of Chase street to the West line of Albert street.

3. That there be assessed against that portion of the property within such enlarged district lying between the termini ofPeabody street which is proposed to be improved back from the marginal lines thereof to the middle of the block on each side thereof, in the mode prescribed in Section 13, of Chapter 98 of the Session Laws of the State of Washington for 1911, forty per cent of the cost and expense of such improvement, and that such portion of the remainder of such cost and expense as may not be borne by any general fund, be distributed and assessed against all the property included in the remainder of such enlarged district, in accordance with special benefits.

4. That all persons who may desire to object thereto are hereby notified to appear and present such objections at a meeting of the City Council to be held in the Council Chamber in the City Hall, in the City of Port Angeles, at 8 o'clock, p. m. on the 21st day of July, 1914, which time and place is hereby fixed for hearing all matters relating to said proposed improvement and all objections thereto, and for determining the method of payment for said improvements.

5. That the City Engineer shall submit to the City Council, at or prior to said date, all data and information required by law to be submitted.

6. That the cost and expense of said improvement be borne by and assessed against property liable therefor, as required by law.

Passed by the City Council this 23rd day of June, 1914, and signed by the Mayor in open session.

HORACE WHITE,
Mayor.

a one story, flat roof building 10x52 at Third and Oak streets, same to cost $200, and to be sanitary and well finished.

Cost 25 Cents to Tag a Cow.

Clerk notified council that cow tags were here. He was directed to charge 25c each for them when giving them out with permits.

Hans L. Walby asked privilege of remodeling and reroofing with flat roof, the old building at SE corner of Front and Vine street under the bluff. Bigelow opposed as a violation of the ordinance. Wilcox thought as one could hardly look in any direction where ordinance is not broken, it is hardly right to draw a line here. The building is such an eyesore, that any repairs would be for the better. Bigelow insisted that the ordinance be lived up to or repealed. Dustman moved that request be refered to Fire, Light and Water Committee for report next meeting, which motion carried.

An ordinance was introduced by Mr. Wilcox providing for the licensing of engineers within the city, and for the inspection and licensing of boilers. The ordinance was read twice and referred.

The finance committee having failed to pass on the bills referred, same were gone over by council and most of them approved and allowed.

Mr. Bigelow called attention to the bad condition of Pine street and asked that city team be put at work there for a time. He stated that the county had spent good money in fixing up the road south to Little river, and was of the opinion that this road would be used as much as the other if fixed right in town. Referred to street committee for report.

Mr. Wilcox moved that the mayor's appointment of Roy Woods as new janitor be confirmed. Woods, it will be remembered, was to get $60 per month to do janitor work, care for fire apparatus and be stationed at hall to take out auto truck any hour of the day or night. He was a member of the Los Angeles department for five years, but was recently hurt. Hence his willingness to work so cheaply. It developed that he had a wife and child, and council did not feel like fitting up rooms for them at city hall. Mr. Wilcox withdrew his motion and the appointment was left in the air.

Mr. Fowler called attention to bad crossings over railroad on old cemetery road, same very dangerous; also leak in water main at Third and Tumwater. Referred to engineer and street superintendent to investigate and notify parties to remedy.

Council then adjourned.

NOTICE TO COW OWNERS.

Notice is hereby given that cow tags can be obtained at the office of the City Clerk by paying for the cost of the tag which is twenty-five cents. Tags must be on all cows running at large within the City Limits, or otherwise they will be impounded.

BURGLAR GIVES GOOD IMITATION OF HEIFER

A. D. Wolverton was unceremoniously awakened at 4 o'clock Saturday morning by a noise downstairs which he says he believed at the time was Bigelow's heifer. Not wishing to be considered unsociable b ythe poor creature, Wolverton rolled out of bed, put on his collar and tie and descended the staircase to entertain his guest. He expected to find the heifer admiring the fine variety of flowers and vegetables in the garden, but when he opened the back door, the visitor was not to be seen.

As he started back, Wolverton heard something at thewindow screen Peeking under the curtain, which was raised a few inches, he was able to distinguish the features of a man. He grabbed a stove poker and chased the would-be burglar into the alley, but thought it unwise to pursue further since he was handicapped by being garbed in a collar and tie.

Wolverton says that he could not swear whether the man was a burglar or a gum-shoe detective, but since the distinction is so immaterial he speaks of his ex-host as being a burglar. He is somewhat mystified as to the noiseless flight and concludes that the stranger must be in the habit of making calls wearing rubbers instead of shoes. The thief appeared to be ashamed of his poor job because he ran with his arm over his face. He dropped his hat, but it was uninhabited and contained nothing that might be used as a clue.

It is a puzzle to Wolverton why the visitor did not enter the door, as it always had been unlocked. He says that with two autos and other evidences of prosperity, his home seems to be an excellent place for operations, but declares that any man who has ever owned an automobile would have known differently.

AT THE FIRST M. E. CHURCH, SUNDAY.

The Rev. G. M. Frame, pastor of Asbury Methodist Church, Seattle, and formerly pastor here, will preach Sunday morning at 11 a. m. and at 8 o'clock in the evening. The choir will sing an Anthem at the morning service. Frank McCarty and wife will sing at the evening service.

AT THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Sunday morning the subject of the sermon will be: "Removing the Barriers." In the evening: "Naaman the Leper." At the morning service, the annual offering for the Temperance Board will be taken. Last Sunday evening an audience of 80 was present to hear Elder E. L. Campbell, who goes to Korea this fall.

BAPTIST CHURCH.

The Baptist Church will have services next Sunday in the building formerly occupied by the Apostolic Faith congregation, corner Fourth and Albert, as follows: 10 a. m. Sunday School, 11 a. m. preaching, 8 p. m. preaching. A cordial invitation to attend these services is extended to all.

MRS. JOHN D. CLARK

Mrs. Nellie Clark wife of Mr. John D. Clark, proprietor of Clark's Tavern, was found dead in bed early Wednesday morning, having evidently passed quietly away in her sleep, of heart disease. Her death was a great shock to her husband, family and friends. The deceased lady came here from Everett, one year ago, and except for what seemed a slight illness in April last, enjoyed excellent health until the end came quite unexpectedly, causing intense grief to her relatives and friends. Mrs. Reardon, Mrs. Clark's mother, who had lived with her daughter until last December was absent at Duluth, Minnesota, visiting another daughter, received the sad intelligence by telegraph and immediately started for Port Angeles arriving here on Sunday morning. The funeral which took place from the Queen of Angeles Catholic Church, on Monday at 9:00 a. m. was largely attended by mourners and sympathizing friends. A Requiem Mass was celebrated and a touching sermon preached by Rev. Father Alberts. The choir sang, "Yes Heaven is the Prize," Nearer my God to Thee" and other sacred hymns.

To her bereaved husband and son she has left tender and sacred memories of her beautiful life which will accompany them like unto a benediction.

Mrs. Clark was a member of the Catholic Social Club which attended the ceremony in a body and as the members filed by the bier each member laid on the coffin a flower typical of the grief they had sustained in the loss of one so universally respected and beloved. Friends and relatives attended from Everett andSeattle as well as from Port Angeles. The altar was draped in black and the service was of the most impressive and solemn character. After the funeral service the many beautiful wreaths and bouquets of flowers that had been sent by kind friends were placed in the hearse and the remains were taken aboard the Sioux for Everett where they were interred in the cemetery.

It is seldom that Port Angeles has been called on to say farawell to one who was so noted for her good deeds, her charitable heart and her lovely disposition which endeared her to all who knew her.

Mr. Clark, his son, and Mrs. Clark's mother, have the sympathy of the entire community, where they have hosts of friends in their great bereavement.

A CARD OF THANKS

To those friends who manifested their sympathy with us in our recent bereavement, with their kind assistance and by the presentation of floral offerings, we beg to return our grateful and heartfelt thanks.

SPECIAL MEETING OF WOMEN'S AUXILIARY

Three years ago this summer, in response to an invitation from the Civic Club of Port Townsend, twenty ladies from the Auxiliary to the Port Angeles Commercial Club went to Townsend to spend the day in Chetzemoka Park, and a most delightful day it was. The Auxiliary ladies would like to return the hospitality extended to them at that time and find that Thursday, July 30, would be a convenient date for the Port Townsend ladies to come here. A meeting to make arrangements is thus called for Monday, July 20, at the Commercial Club room at 3:30 p. m. All members of the Auxiliary are requested to be present especially those who were entertained in Townsend. By order of the President.

Mrs. Anna McNeil, for the past two years the efficient and successful milliner for the Leader Department Store, returned Monday from a few days outing at the lakes. She then went on to Seattle to work in Staadecker & Co.s large wholesale millinery house until the first of September, when she will return with the handsomest stock of millinery for the Leader, ever bro't to Angeles. During the next six weeks she will be privileged to work under the best millinery artists sent out from New York and Chicago and so will not only have the opportunity of seeing the newest and most up-to-date styles of fall and winter millinery, but will learn how to produce the same results.

Mrs. McNeil considers herself fortunate in having this opportunity as the large wholesale houses are not accepting only a comparatively small number of outside trimmers and only those they consider the most competent. Mrs. McNeil's many friends and patrons will be glad to know she is again to be in charge of the millinery department of the Leader Store after September first.

Silverware, Cut Glass Silver Deposit Ware, Mantel Clocks at Cost Prices

Schaible & Hutchinson, the oldest established jewelry firm in the city, announced this week that their big reduction sale which has been running for a number of weeks will end Saturday, July 18, so it behooves all those who wish to take advantage of these extremely low prices to do their shopping this week. There is a limited number of the silver deposit ware pieces left which will be closed out at cost; also a line of silver dessert and soup spoons at cost prices. These will all be on display in our window this week with prices plainly marked on each. Our one-third reduction on all silverware except Community, and on all our handsome stock of cut glass and mantel clocks will continue thru this week. This will be a fine time to secure a few Christmas gifts to lay away until needed, as you can never buy cheaper. It is a pleasure to show our goods, so come in whether you care to buy or not. We wish to thank the public for the splendid patronage we have received ever since our sale began and hope to see many more taking advantage of the great bargains we are offering for this closing week of our sale.

You may compromise on many things in life but you cannot compromise on matters pertaining to safety for your funds. Citizens National Bank is the only national bank in the county and you know what national banks are.

THE CONVICTS' HONOR CAMP

Governor Lister Has Solved Problem of Providing Another Chance for State's Wards.

The following article by David Erwin in the Tacoma Tribune follows a visit to the road camp on Hood's Canal and deals with the humanitarian rather than the economic advantages of convict labor on the public highways.

"When Governor Lister announced last fall that he was going to follow the example of Governor West of Oregon and establish an "honor camp" for state convicts, he made the old timers sit up and take notice. The idea was new, it had up to that time proved nothing more than an experiment, and everyone was more or less skeptical about it.

There is no good reason for that skepticism. Nearly everyone has born and bred in them the feeling that a convict is a man to be guarded with men, guns, bars and walls. The idea of turning a lot of convicts loose on a road, giving them the unrestrained freedom of camp and watching them no more than are any gangs of workmen was enough to make men with the old school idea of convict management shake their heads in doubt. They doubted it then and do even now, almost a year since the camp was started. They cannnot understand how it is that these convicts can work unguarded.

But regardless of the "hows" and "whys" of the doubters the honor camp on Hood's canal that Governor Lister established last fall has proven a success. It is working wonders for the men and no one, be he the most skeptical, or conservative on earth, can doubt that the camp is a fine thing if he spent a few hours there with the men. The first thing that impresses the visitor to that camp is that the men do not look or act like convicts.

When the steamer Potlatch slid into the little bay at Lilliwaup the day I visited the camp, an old dory, propelled by a red-headed, sunburned, good natured Irishman, met it.

"Can you show me the convict's honor camp?" I asked him.

"Shure, and ye're headin' straight for it," he answered with a grin, 'I'm one of the bunch."

That made me open my eyes.

As the boat grated on the shore I saw the camp. It is tucked into the woods in a little bay in a place that would reform the worst man on earth. Every breath of that air up there is a tonic, and every look over the blue water of Hood's canal and to the snow-clad Olympics towering in the back is an inspiration to better thinking and living. The camp is one of the cleanest, most comfortable and sanitary in the state. The bunks are of iron and they're good to sleep in. The cook-house and dining room is clean and the bread that cook makes is as good as the kind that mother used to make.

On down the road about a mile I came across four men working on a culvert. They were healthy, well fed, contented looking men dressed in ordinary working clothes.

"Where are the convicts working?' I asked them.

They looked at me and then laughed.

"Here's four of them," answered one of the men. And I got my first inkling of what the honor camp was doing for the convicts. No one would ever have picked those four men out to be convicts.

One of them was a forger, another an absconder, the third had nearly killed a man in a fight and the fourth had stabbed the man who stole his sweetheart. Two years ago they would have been working in the jute mills at Walla Walla.

"You fellows don't look like convicts," I said.

"No, and we don't feel like convicts," was the reply of the forger. "This is the finest thing that was ever done for a convict. The boss and the rest of the gang is on down the road farther; go and talk to him."

Half a mile farther I came across the boss and others. There were about 20 of them, and they were working on a stretch of the state highway that, when completed, will make a fine road from Tacoma to Port Townsend. The road skirts the canal nearly all the way, and, flanked as it is by the water on one side and the Olympics on the other, will be one of the finest automobile roads in the state when finished.

W. S. Powell of Spokane is superintendent of the camp. He was as much of a surprise as were the four men I first met. He is a kind-faced, good natured man of about fifty, and looks not at all like a convict herder. But when he gave an order in a gentle tone of voice the men jumped to his bidding with a willing promptness that would make a section foreman green with envy.

He laughed when he saw the look of wonder on my face.

"Seems sort of funny to handle convicts this way," he said with a laugh, "I guess it does look strange to you. It certainly was hard for me to get used to it. Those men look like this was going to do them good, don't they? Talk to them and find out what they think about it."

I went down the line and talked to the men. They all showed a willingness to talk; showed none of the sullen, half cowed attitude of the average convict. From one and all came the same answers when I asked them what they thought of the camp. One middle aged man, a pickpocket, just about stated the whole thing.

"You see it's this way. First we get out here in the open, we work hard, get good air and sunshine and in a month we feel like new men. With that feeling comes a change in our point of view. We actually forget that we are convicts. It's hard to remember that you are one when you live like that. After you forget that you're serving time you're going to look ahead and soon, maybe we don't know it ourselves, but it's true, soon, we're feeling, thinking and living just like any workmen. You can see for yourself that when we leave, feeling like that, that we're bound to be better off than if we had been in Walla Walla. Put a man in prison, surround him with walls and bars, dress him in stripes and guard him with guns and that man can't help getting that sullen, down-hearted feeling and look. Everything he does, everything he looks at reminds him that he's a convict. When he leaves the prison he still feels that way, and when he walks the street he can't help feeling that every one knows he is an ex-convict. That's the reason we men up here know this is the finest thing that could be done for us. And then that 50 cents a day we get helps a lot. Most of us serve six or eight months and we leave with $50 to $75. With that money, and with that feeling of freedom and independence that this life gives us, we can go out and start all over again. This camp is a Godsend to us men and we know and appreciate it."

He voiced the sentiment of all. They spoke of the days at Walla Walla, of the daily grind at the jute mills, of the bars and walls, the guards and guns or the look-step to work in the morning and the lock-step back to their cells at night and then invariably added 'that's how it was down there. You see how it is here.'

I stayed with Powell and the men all day. They work hard and conscientiously and take pride in their work. He watches them much less than the average foreman watches his men.

"The work goes on whether I'm here or not," he said. "I've been here since the first of the year and I am of the firm opinion that this is the best thing ever done for convicts. I'll admit that I was very much puzzled when I first came here, and didn't think much of the idea, but I have changed my mind, and the men have made me change it. The main reason that it works so well is that they realize that it is working wonders for them, and the other reason is that there's a lot of good in everyone, convicts and all, and that if you give a man half a chance he'll make good. This camp gives them the chance and they're making good."

Twelve hours spent with the men in and around camp failed to reveal anything that needed changing or any kickers. The men have good quarters and they are fed well. They work eight hours and never on Sunday. When their day's work is over they are free to do what they wish. Powell has laid down no rules for them. They can go to Hoodsport, and he has even let two of them go to Seattle for two days. There's good fishing around the camp, lots of clams and oysters on the beach, and the crab bing is good. They have two row boats and they're also pretty strong for swimming. The state furnished them with good books and magazines, and altogether their camp at night is as cheerful a construction camp as can be found in the state. They enter into their sports and recreations boyishly and whole heartedly, and it is the whole hearted enjoyment that reflects, more than anything else, the good that the camp is doing for them, shows that their point of view on life is changed.

When the boatman rowed me out that night to meet the steamer the men were all bunched up on the beach enjoying themselves. The blacksmith, a highwayman, was seated on a keg under a tree fiddling "The Arkansas Traveler." Two of the men were stamping out an Irish jig. And as the steamer rounded the bend of the bay I heard the fiddler starting on"Turkey in the Straw,' and everyone of those convicts were patting their hands and laughing at the two dancers. Convicts? No, healthy, happy contented men and they'll be out in the world in a few months making their way ahead in the world with you and your neighbors."

Surprising Cure of Stomach Trouble

When you have trouble with your stomach or chronic constipation, don't imagine that your case is beyond help just because your doctor fails to give relief. Mrs. G. Stengle. Plainfield. N. J.. writes. "For over a month past I have been troubled with my somach. Eevrything I ate upset it terribly. One of Chamberlain's advertising booklets came to me. After reading a few letters from people had been cured by Chamberlain's Tablets. I decided to try them. I have taken nearly three-fourths of a package of them and can now eat almost everything that I want. For sale by all dealers.

UP from the valley below came the throb of war drums, the faint rattle of shots and the distant cries of painted horsemen charging. From my hard won vantage on the ridge I had an unobstructed view of the encampment, a great circle of tepees and tents three miles in circumference, cradled in a sag of the timberless hills.

Five thousand Sioux were here in all their martial splendor, painted and decked and trapped for war, living anew their tales of might and repeating in mimicry their greatest battles. Five days the feasting had continued. Five mornings had I been awakened at dawn to see a thousand ochered, feathered horsemen pour out of the gullies upon the camp, their horses rearing and plunging, their rifles snapping and spitting, while the valley rocked to their battlecries and to the answering clamor of the army which met them. The odors of a savage people had begun to pall on me, the sound of a strange language had begun to annoy me, and I longed for another white man or a word in my own tongue. Next to my tent was another one which had been erected during my absence, and through the flap was thrust the head of my friend, the government doctor.

"Gee, I'm glad to see you!" I said as I shook his hand. "I'm as lonesome as a deaf mute at a song recital."

"What's the matter? Won't the Indians talk to you?"

"I guess they would if they could, but they can't. Out of these 5,000 Sioux I haven't found one who can understand a word I say, and I've tried some 4,980 of them."

The old gentleman laughed.

"Your government schools have gone back in the betting with me, doc. You must keep your graduates under lock and key."

"They can all speak English if they want to—that is, the younger ones can. Some few of the old people are too proud to try, but the others can talk as well as we can until they forget."

"Do you mean to say these aborigines have been fooling me? I don't believe it," said I. "There is one that can't talk English, and I'll make a bet on it." I indicated a passing brave with an eagle feather headdress reaching far down his naked legs. He was a magnificent animal—young, lithe and as tall and straight as a sapling—and was decked from head to feet in his gorgeous panoply. "I've tried him twice, and he simply doesn't understand."

My friend called to the warrior:

"Hey, Tom! Come here a minute." The Indian came, and the doctor continued:

"When do you hold the horse races, Thomas?"

"Tomorrow, 4 o'clock, unless it rains," said the fellow.

"Are you going to ride?"

"No. My race horse is sick."

As the ocher daubed figure vanished into the dusk the old man turned to me, saying:

"Yale."

"What?"

"Yale; B. A. He's a graduate."

"Impossible!" I declared. "Why, I could hardly understand him. He talks like a foreigner or as if he was just learning the language."

"Exactly. That halting unfamiliarity with English marks the death and decay of his learning. In three years more he'll be an Indian again through and through. Oh, the reservation is full of fellows like that." The doctor continued, with a sigh: "It's a melancholy acknowledgment to make, but our work seems to count for nearly nothing. It's their blood.

"I've heard a graduating class read theses from a platform, sing cantatas in chorus and deliver orations. Then I have seen those same young fellows three months later squatting in tepees, grunting in their native tongues and eating with their fingers.

"Some years ago I felt I was well on my way to success, for I found a youth who offered every promise of great manhood. I studied him until I knew his every trait and his every strength. He did not seem to have any weakness. I raised him under my own supervision into a tall, straight fellow as handsome as figured bronze and with a mind far in advance of his people and his years. He had the best blood of the nation in him, being the son of a war chief, and they called him Thomas Running Elk. He was educated at the agency school under me, and he went through his college course like a stag at the head of a great herd, a silent, dignified, shadowy figure, unapproachable and mysterious to his fellow students. In all things he e. ...ed, but he was best perhaps in athletics, the credit for which I also took, feeling a godlike satisfaction in my work.

"News came to me of his victories on track and field and gridiron, for his professors kept me posted, being likewise interested in my experiment, but as for him he never wrote. It was not his nature, nor did he communicate with his people.

"It was in my protege's senior year that the great thing entered his life, the thing I had craftily built upon from the start and had well nigh despaired of. The girl entered, but instead of Running Elk being drawn to the woman, as I had planned, the woman went to him.

"You've heard of old Henry Harman? Yes, the railroad king. It was his daughter Alicia.

"In order to understand the story you'll have to know something about old Henry and believe in heredity, as I do. He is a self made man. He came into the middle west as a poor boy and by force of his indomitable pluck, ability and doggedness became a captain of industry. He is the same now as when he was a section boss, and his daughter Alicia is another Henry Harman feminized. Her mother was a pampered child of Fifth avenue, born to money and a slave to her own whims, and Alicia grew up more effectively spoiled than her mother, combining the traits of both parents.

"Well, when I got a panicky letter from one of Running Elk's professors, coupling her name vaguely with that of my Indian, I wavered in my determination to see this experiment out. But the mind of the analyst is unsentimental, and one who sets out to untangle the skein of the gods must pay the price, so I waited.

"As if fate had really taken a part in the affair, I found a long distance call from old Henry Harman when I returned to my hotel. He had wired me here at the agency and, finding I was in Washington, had called me from New York. He didn't tell me much over the phone, except that he must see me at once, and as my work was finished I took the train in the morning, going straight to his office.

"'Doc, I'm in an awful hole,' he declared, 'and you're the only man who can pull me out. It's about Alicia and that savage of yours.'

"'I know something about it,' said I, 'and I feel rather to blame, for it was I who sent him to college.'

"'I won't be defied by my own flesh and blood! I won't! I won't! I'm the master of my own family! Why, the thing's so absurd it's almost unbelievable, and yet it's terrible—terrible! Heavens! What would her mother say if she were alive?'

"'Have you talked with Alicia?'

"'Not with her, to her. She's like a mule. Yes, sir, just like a mule. I never saw such a will in a woman. I—I've fought her until I'm as weak as a cat. I don't know where she got her temper!' He collapsed feebly, and I had to smile, for there's only one thing strong and stubborn enough to overcome a Harman's resistance, and that is a Harman's desire.

"'What does she say?' My interest in the affair was increasing.

"'Nothing, except to agree that I'm right in the abstract and then to inform me that the abstract problems go to pieces once in awhile. She says this—this Galloping Moose, this yelping ghost dancer of yours, is the only real man she ever met.'

"'What does he have to say?'

"'Humph!' grunted Harman. 'All he does is to listen.'

"'How old is Alicia?'

"'Nineteen. Oh, I've hurled that at her, too, but she says she'll wait! You know she has her own money from her mother.'

"'Does Running Elk come to your house?'

"At this my old friend roared so fiercely that I hastened to say: 'I'll see him at once. I have more influence than anybody else with him.'

"'I hope you can show him how impossible, how criminal it is to ruin my girl's life. Yes, and mine too. Suppose the yellow papers got hold of this thing!' Harman shuddered. 'Doc, I love that girl so well I'd kill her with my own hands rather than face her disgrace and see her ridiculed.

"'She could marry a duke if one happened to come along, and I'd buy her one, too, if she wanted him, but I won't stand for this dirty, low browed Injun.'

"'He's not dirty,' I declared, 'and he's not as low browed as some degenerate foreigner you'd be glad to pick out for her.'

"'Well, he's an Injun,' retorted Harman, 'an' it'll come out on him. We've both seen 'em tried. They all drop back where they started from. You know that as well as I do.'

"'I don't know it,' said I, thinking of my experiment, which had gone so badly askew, 'but we've got to put a stop to this affair in one way or another. I'll see the young man right away.'

"'Tomorrow is Thanksgiving,' said Henry. 'Wait over and go up with us and see the Yale-Princeton football game. I understand Running Elk plays fullback. We'll pick you up at your hotel in the morning and drive up in the car. It's the big game of the year, and you'll enjoy it. I don't expect to, however.'

"You have seen similar games, so there is no need of my describing this one, even if I could. As it was my first experience it impressed me greatly. When the teams appeared I recognized Running Elk at a distance, as did the hordes of madmen behind us, and I began to understand what the old man in the seat next mine was combating.

"A dancing dervish in front of the grand stand said something through a megaphone, then waved a cane, whereupon a tremendous barking 'Rah! Rah! Rah!' broke out, ending with my Sioux boy's name. They bellowed and rioted over him until I wished that the old chief back in Dakota were there to see his son and witness the honor he had won among the whites.

"Quite as impressive to me as this demonstration was the deathlike silence which settled when the teams scattered out in readiness. Princeton kicked off, and the ball sailed high and far. As it settled in its downward flight I saw a lithe, gaunt shadow of a man racing toward it and recognized my boy. I had lost his position for the moment, but I knew that hungry, predatory stride which devoured the fleeting yards as if he were a thing of the wind. He was off with the ball in the hollow of his arm, back into the heart of his enemies, dodging, darting, leaping, twisting, always advancing. They tore his interference from him, and yet he penetrated their ranks like an elusive, quivering beam of light which none of them might lay hands upon. He was running free when tackled, and his assailant launched himself with such savage violence that the sound of their impact came to us distinctly. As he fell I heard Alicia Harman gasp as if some hand had been removed from her throat. And then the crowd gave tongue.

"From that time on to the finish of the game my eyes seldom left Running Elk and then only to shoot quick glances at my companions.

"Although the skill of the young Sioux overtopped that of all the others, the opposing team played as one man, as a wonderful, well oiled piece of machinery, and they scored. All through the first half Yale struggled to retaliate, but at the intermission had not succeeded.

"In the second half of the game the son of a Sioux chief led the men of Eli as Hannibal led his Carthaginian cohorts up to the gates of Rome with the same irresistible progress, showing withal the military genius of a Chief Joseph. He was indefatigable, magnificent, and he tied the score.

"It was a grand exhibition of coolness and courage, for he was everywhere, always alert and ready, and it was he who won the game finally.

"There came some sort of fumble, too fast for the eye to follow, and then the ball rolled out of the scrimmage. Before we knew what had happened Running Elk was away with it, a scattered field ahead of him.

"I dare say you have heard about that run, for it occurred in the last three minutes of play and is famous in football annals to this day. It was a spectacular thing, apparently devised by fate to make more difficult the labors of old Henry and me. Every living soul on those high banked bleachers was on his feet at the finish, a senseless, screaming demon. I saw Alicia straining forward, her face like chalk, her very lips blanched, her whole high strung body a-quiver. Her eyes were distended, and in them I saw a look which told me that this was no mere childish whim, that this was more than the animal call of youth and sex. Running Elk had become a fetich to her.

"The father must likewise have recognized this, for as we passed out he stammered into my ear:

"'You see, Doc, the girl's mad. It's awful—awful! I don't know what to do!'

"The press had separated her from us a bit, so I answered: 'Get her away, quick, no matter how or where! Use force if you have to, but get her away and keep her away. I'll see him tonight.'

"'I guess it's our only chance,' mumbled the old fellow. 'I'll kidnap her and take her to Europe. It's awful!'

"I didn't go back to the city with them, but said goodby at the running board of their machine, finding next morning that the father had taken my advice and that they had sailed unexpectedly for an indefinite stay abroad.

"I spent that evening with Running Elk, who seemed glad to see me. He asked all about his people, told me of his progress and spoke lightly of his victory that day. Sound him as I would, I could elicit no mention of Alicia Harman's name. He wasn't much of a talker anyhow, and at last I was forced to bring up the subject myself, whereupon the silence of his forefathers fell upon him, and all he did was listen. I told him forcibly that any thoughts of her were ridiculous and impossible.

"'Why?' said he.

"I told him a thousand reasons why, recounted them cruelly, unfeelingly, but he made no sign to me. As a matter of fact, I don't think he understood them any more than he understood the affair itself. He appeared to be blinded and confused by the splendor of it all. She was so glorious, so different, so mysterious to him that he had lost all perspective. Recognizing this, I descended to material things which I knew he could grasp.

"'I paid for your education,' said I, 'and it is almost over with. In a few months you'll be turned out to make your living, and then you'll encounter this race prejudice I speak of in a way to affect your stomach and your body. You're a poor man, Running Elk, and you've got to earn your way. Your blood will bar you from a good many means of doing it, and when your color begins to affect your earning capacity you'll have all you can do to take care of yourself alone. Life isn't played on a gridiron, and the first thing you've got to do is make a man of yourself. You've got no right to fill your head with insane fancies of this sort.'

"'Yes, sir,' said he. And that was about all I could get out of him. His reticence was very annoying.

"I didn't see him again for two years. I had barely reached the reservation when the stage from the railroad brought two women, two strange women, who came straight to my office—Alicia Harman and her French maid.

"Well, I was fairly knocked endwise. But she was as well poised and self contained as on that Thanksgiving morning in New York when she and old Henry had picked me up in their automobile—a trifle more stunning and a bit more determined perhaps. Oh, she was a splendid creature, in the first glory of her womanhood, a perfectly groomed, pulsating, spoiled goddess. She greeted me graciously, with that queenly air of all great ladies.

"'Where is your father?' I asked as I laid off her dust coat.

"'He is in New York,' said she. 'I am traveling alone.'

"'Why have you come out here, Alicia?' I inquired slowly, being far more ill at ease than she.

"'Do you need to ask?' she answered. 'I respected father's wishes when I was in my minority. I traveled and studied and did all the tiresome things he wished me to as long as he had the right to ask them of me. But when I became my own mistress I took my full freedom. He made his life to suit himself, and I am very sorry I cannot build mine to suit him. But we don't seem to see things the same, and I dare say he has accepted the inevitable.'

"'Then you consider this inevitable?'

"She lifted her dainty brows. 'Inevitable is not a good word. I wish it. I have wished it from the first. I have never ceased to wish it for an instant. I feel I must have it. Therefore, to all intents and purposes, it is inevitable, I suppose.'

"'You have—er—been in communication with'—

"'Never. Father did not wish it.'

"'Then how did you know he is here?'

"'He wrote me when he left Yale that he was coming here. I have heard nothing since. He is here, is he not?'

"'So I believe. I haven't seen him yet. You know I've been away myself.'

"'Will you take me to him at once? If you are too busy I will ask'—

"'Very well,' said I. 'We'll drive out to the encampment.' And I telephoned for my buckboard.

"There was little said on our fifteen mile drive, for I was apprehensive, and she was oddly torn between fear and exultation. We left the French maid behind. I don't know that any woman ever went to her lover under stranger circumstances or in greater perturbation than did this girl, behind whom lay the selfishness of spoiled womanhood and a generation of unrestraint.

"It was well along in the evening when we came over the ridge and saw the encampment below us. You can imagine the fairy picture it made, with its myriad of winking fires, the soft effulgence of a thousand glowing tents and the wonderful magic of the night over all. As we drew nearer the unusual sounds of a strange merrymaking came to us, the soft thudding of drums, the weird melody of the dances, the stir and confusion of dense animal life. In the daylight it would have been picturesque, but under the wizard hand of the darkness it became ten times more so.

"When I finally tied my horses and led the girl into the heart of it I think she became a bit frightened, for these Indians were the Sioux of a bygone day, all barbaric and primitive in habit and dress and coloring—an atavistic race which had shaken off some threescore years, or some thirtyscore for all we knew.

"I guided her through the tangle of canvas habitations, through glaring fire lit circles and through black voids, where we stumbled and felt our way, rubbing shoulders with fierce warriors or sullen squaws. At every group I asked for Running Elk, but he was one of the shifting thousands, and nobody knew his whereabouts.

"At one time we came upon a sight I would gladly have spared her, the spectacle of some wrinkled hags strangling a dog. The girl at my side stifled a cry at the vision.

"'What are they doing?' she gasped.

"'Preparing the feast,' I told her.

"'Do they—really'—

"'Yes,' said I. 'They eat them. Come!' I tried to force her onward, but she would not stir until the sacrifice had been dragged to the flames, where other carcasses were singeing among the pots and kettles. From every side came the smell of cooking mingled with the odor of burning hair and flesh. I could hear Miss Harman panting as we went on.

"After an endless search, during which we circled half the great hoop, we came upon the trail of our man and were directed to a nearby tepee. I lifted the flap and peered within, clearing a view for Miss Harman.

"We beheld a circle of half naked braves in full regalia, squatting haunch to haunch, listening to a story teller. In front of them was a confusion of blackened pails and vessels filled with something steaming, into which they dipped their naked fingers. Their faces were streaked and foul with traces of the dish; the air of the place was dead and reeking from their breaths. My eyes were slower than Alicia's, and so I did not distinguish our quarry at first, although a slow sigh at my ear and a convulsive clutch at my arm told me that he was there.

"And then I, too, saw him. It was he who was talking and to whom the others listened, but what a change two years had wrought! His voice was harsh; his face through the painted daubs and streaks was coarser and duller than when I knew him; his very body was more thin and shrunken than in the past.

"He finished his tale while we were staring at him, the circle broke into commendatory grunts, and he smiled in childlike satisfaction at the impression he had made. He leaned forward and, scrutinizing the litter of sooty pots, plunged his hand into the mess.

"Miss Harman stumbled back into the crowd a pace or two, and her place was taken by a squaw.

"'Running Elk!' I called over the heads of those next the entrance, and, seeing my face against the night, he arose and came out, stepping over the others.

"'How do you do?' I said. 'You haven't forgotten me, have you?'

"He towered head and shoulders above me, his feather headdress adding to his stature, the beaded patterns of his war harness bright in the light.

"'No, no! I will never forget you, doctor. You—you have been sick?' The change in his speech was as marked as in his body and habits. He halted over his words and mouthed them hesitatingly.

"'Yes, pretty sick. And you—what are you doing?'

"'I do what the rest do,' said he—'nothing. I have some horses and a few head of cattle; that is all.'

"'Are you satisfied with that sort of life?' I demanded sharply, at which he hesitated an instant before answering.

"'Yes, I am satisfied. I am an Indian.'

"'And so your education didn't do you any good after all?'

"This time he paused a long while before answering.

"'I have dreams,' said he, 'many dreams. But I am a Sioux, and you told me that dreams are out of place in an Indian, so I hope to forget them along with all the rest.'

"A woman's voice which I did not recognize called to me sharply, and as I went Running Elk bowed his head and slunk back through the tepee door into the heart of his people—into the past—and with him went my experiment. Since then I have never meddled with the gods or given them cause to laugh at me."

"What became of him?" I inquired.

"That was he I asked about the horse races, the man whom you couldn't understand, the fellow who wouldn't talk to you!" the old man answered.

"Good Lord!" said I.

"Why don't you ask about the girl?" said he. "Haven't you any sympathy for her?"

"Not much," I replied slowly, "for her course was obvious. I seem to see a more pathetic figure by far. It is that of a youth from whose eyes the bandages of tradition and training and heredity had been suddenly whipped—a youth forced out from the darkness of all the ages into a dazzling, incomprehensible world. I seem to see him, awestruck and timid, groping forward till he laid his hand upon a still more miraculous thing, but a real and tangible thing which he could understand and which made a god of him. Then I see that thing snatched away and see his only guide desert him, leaving him utterly naked and alone in the center of a universe which had no place for him. Can you wonder that he went back whence he had come, where he had fitted in, where he understood and was understood?"

"Then you don't think my experiment failed, after all?" inquired the doctor.

"You haven't proved that it did," I maintained, "for I would have done just what Running Elk did if I had been in his place, and so would you."

The old fellow looked out grimly into the night.

"Perhaps," said he.

FOREST FIRE BULLETIN

Portland, Oregon, July 3.—Two convictions in Washington for burning slash without permits from a fire warden, damage amounting to perhaps $5,000 to logs and logging equipment in the same state through fires in slashings, but no loss of green timber, is the record for June, the first month of the 1914 forest fire season, according to bulletins received from all parts of the Pacific northwest by the Western Forestry & Conservation Association.

All protective agencies were placed on the alert at the close of June by the prospect of a drying interior wind, butbut the new forecast service especially for forest fire conditions which is supplied by the U. S. Weather Bureau soon reassured them that the threatening high pressure in Western Canada had split into two areas and the danger was for a time averted. Nevertheless all patrol forces are being rapidly recruied for the season and about 2,000 men will be on duty in a few days in Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana. About 500 patrolmen are employed in these states by the timber owners' proective associations, nearly 200 by the states and the Government jointly outside the National Forests, and the others by the Forest Service within the National Forests. The British Columbia Government also has 225 men on duty.

July hazard to be guarded against, other than campfires, is reported to lie chiefly in slash burning to clear land and rights of way and in leaving fires thus started to smoulder in logs and stumps to break out later when the ineviable hot and windy weather arrives. Forest officers announce that state laws regarding burning without permit and precaution will be enforced rigidly and also warn summer camping parties to be extremely careful with campfires.

Proceedings of the Board of Clallam County Commissioners.

Monday, July 6, 1914, at 9:00 a. m.

The Board met pursuant to adjournment, all members being present.

Minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

Mr. Francis W. Grant, architect, presented his plans for the new court house to the board, and the entire day was spent in examing and discussing the same.

The board adjourned until Tuesday, July 7, 1914 at 9:00 a. m.

Tuesday, July 7, 1914 at 9:00 a. m.

The board met pursuant to adjournment, all members being present.

The auditor was instructed to publish a call for bids for the construction of a new Court House, in the County official paper and also in the "Seattle Daily Record," bids to be opened on Saturday, August 1, 1914, at 10:00 a. m.

The board ordered the auditor to issue a warrant on the Current Expense Fund in the sum of $250.00 in favor of Francis W. Grant as part payment for services rendered as architect.

The board granted the Goodyear Logging Co., a franchise to construct, maintain and operate a steam or electric logging road along Sixth street of Kellogg's Addition to the Townsite of Clallam, Clallam Bay, Washington, providing due care is taken by said company that said tracks do not interfere with the traffic of said street.

The board further granted the said Goodyear Logging Company the right to construct and operate a steam or electric logging road along and across the county road between East and West Clallam providing said company do not interfere with county traffic; and furthermore wherever it is necessary said Goodyear Logging Company must construct a new permanent road on good grades, secure right-of-way and turn the same over to the county of Clallam in place of that portion of the County road occupied by the said Goodyear Logging company and covered by this franchise. And it is also further agreed to by the said Goodyear Logging Company that whenever said Logging road ceases to be operated as such that that portion of the present county road occupied by the Goodyear Logging Company shall immediately revert to the County of Clallam, State of Washington, the same as though this franchise had never been granted.

The Board examined the following claims and ordered warrants drawn for same as follows:

On Current Expense Fund

Theodore F. Rixon, bonded road survey $160.00
F. D. Sheffield, bonded road survey 150.00
R. W. Remp, bonded road survey 125.00
Wm. E. Ritchie, bonded road survey 87.50

The board then adjurned until Wednesday, July 8, 1914, at 9:00 a.m.

Wednesday, July 8, 1914 at 9:00 a. m.

The Board met pursuant to adjournment all members being present.

The Board took up the matter of hearing on the Engineer's report on the Port Angeles-Jefferson county road, at 10 o'clock a. m., H. B. Bellis, D. D. Bellis and John Zaccardo appearing and claiming damages for the construction of said road.

After giving said claims due consideration the Board approved the Engineer's report and awarded damages as follows: H. B. Bellis, the sum of $30.00; D. D. Bellis, $30.00 and John Zaccardo, $200.00, and the Auditor was instructed to draw warrants accordingly on Road Bond Fund, district No. 1.

At his request, the Prosecuting Attorney was authorized to employ a deputy at a salary of $60.00 per month, to continue during the present stress of business in the attorney's office, warrant for said salary to be drawn on the first Monday of each month.

The Board then adjourned until Thursday, July 9, 1914, at 9:00 a. m.

Thursday July 9, 1914, at 9: a. m.

The Board met pursuant to adjurnment, all members being present.

The Board spent the day in a trip to Lake Crescent examining the survey around the Lake, and discussing plans for the operation of a ferry on said lake until such time as the road is completed, adjourning until Friday, July 10 1914, at 9:00 a. m.

The Board met pursuant to adjournment, all members being present

Bids were opened for the grading of the new court house site as follows:

A. L. Johnson & Co., bid 39 cents per cubic yard; Ferch & Gass, 35 cent; E. N. Eagle, 30 cents, and N. O. McKee 27½ cents.

The bid of N. O. McKee was acceted and he was awarded the contract.

During the afternoon the Board made a trip over the roads of the East End of the county, examining new construction work, adjourning until Sauturday, July 11, 1914 at 9:00 a. m.

Saturday, July 11, 1914, at 9 a. m.

The Board met pursuant to adjournment, all members being present.

The Board adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas, it is deemed advisable and for the best interests of Clallam County to establish, lay out and open a road beginning at or near Fairholme on the west end of Lake Crescent, thence following the north shore of said lake to Piedmont; thencecontinuing along said north shore and ending at a connection with the present County road at or near East Beach on said Lake Crescent. Said road shall be forty feet in width.

"And whereas, this Board deems and considers that the laying out and establishing of this road is a public necessity;

"Therefore be it resolved, and the County Engineer is hereby authorized and directed to make such examination of the proposed route and report on the same as isby law provided.

The Board also adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas, it is deemed advisable and for the best interests of Clallam County to establish, lay out and open a road beginning at the quarter corner between Sections 3 and 10 in Township 30 north, range 7 west, and thence running westerly to a point north of the quarter corner between Section 4 in Township 30 north, and Section 33 in Township 31 north, both in range 8 west, said point being near Joe Town on the Port Crescent-Piedmont Road, said road to be forty width in width.

And whereas, this Board deems and considers that the laying out and establishing of this road is a public necessity;

"Therefore be it resolved, and the County Engineer is hereby authorized and directed to make such examination of the proposed route and report on the same as is by law provided."

The Board entered into a contract with Sloane brothers, for the construction of a section of the Port Angeles-Port Crescent road, and approved their bond for same.

This Board approved the final estimate of the engineer on David Govan's contract for clearing and grubbing of a portion of the Beaver-Lake Crescent road, amounting to $1,795.00, and instructed the auditor to draw warrants for same on Road Bond Fund, district No. 3.

The auditor was instructed to call for bids for the construction of a section of road beginning at or near Fairholme and running along the north shore of Lake Crescent a distance of five miles, more or less.

The Board allowed the following Commissioners' claims and ordered the auditor to issue warrants for same on the Current Expense Fund:

Frank Lotgesell, 6 days salary and mileage.....$28.00
J. C. Hansen, 6 days salary and mileage..... 24.20
James F. Clarke, 6 days salary and mileage..... 41.00

The Board then adjourned until Saturday, August 1, 1914, at 9 a. m.

The difference between an automobile and an ordinary wagon or the persons who drive them, is most noticeable on the road. Whenever an automobile overtakes a pedestrian all that is noticeable is a honk or two and the pedestrian gets out of the way. When a wagon driven by a farmer comes along it generally stops and after passing the time of day the driver most always asks the walker if he does not want a lift. You may have noticed this difference.

The Abysmal Brute

By JACK LONDON

Copyright, 1913, by The Century Co.

CHAPTER VII.

SHE looked accusingly at Glendon, who immediately became awkward. To her it was delicious—a shy young man with the body of a giant who was one of the kings of bruisers and who read poetry and went to art exhibits and experimented with color photography!

Of a surety there was no abysmal brute here. His very shyness, she divined now, was due to sensitiveness and not stupidity. Shakespeare's "Sonnets!"

This was a phase that would bear investigation. But Stubener stole the opportunity away and was back chanting his everlasting statistics.

A few minutes later and most unwittingly she opened up the biggest lead of all. That first sharp attraction toward him had begun to stir again after the discovery of the "Sonnets."

The magnificent frame of his, the handsome face, the chaste lips, the clear looking eyes, the fine forehead which the short crop of blond hair did not hide, the aura of physical well being and cleanness which he seemed to emanate—all this and more that she sensed drew her as she had never been drawn by any man, and yet through her mind kept running the nasty rumors that she had heard only the day before at the Courier-Journal office.

"You were right," she said. "There is something more important to talk about. There is something in my mind I want you to reconcile for me. Do you mind?"

Pat shook his head.

"If I am frank—abominably frank? I've heard the men, sometimes, talking of particular fights and of the betting odds, and, while I gave no heed to it at the time, it seemed to me it was firmly agreed that there was a great deal of trickery and cheating connected with the sport. Now, when I look at you, for instance, I find it hard to understand how you can be a party to such cheating. I can understand your liking the sport for a sport, as well as for the money it brings you, but I can't understand"—

"There's nothing to understand," Stubener broke in, while Pat's lips were wreathed in a gentle, tolerant smile. "It's all fairy tales, this talk about faking, about fixed fights and all that rot. There's nothing to it, Miss Sangster, I assure you. And now let me tell you about how I discovered Mr. Glendon. It was a letter I got from his father"—

But Maud Sangster refused to be sidetracked, and addressed herself to Pat.

"Listen. I remember one case particularly. It was some fight that took place several months ago—I forget the contestants. One of the editors of the Courier-Journal told me he intended to make a good winning. He didn't hope; he said he intended. He said he was on the inside and was betting on the number of rounds. He told me the fight would end in the nineteenth. This was the night before.

"And the next day he triumphantly called my attention to the fact that it had ended in that very round. I didn't think anything of it one way or the other. I was not interested in prizefighting then. But I am now. At the time it seemed quite in accord with the vague conception I had about fighting. So you see it isn't all fairy tales, is it?"

"I know that fight," Glendon said. "It was Owen and Murgweather. And it did end in the nineteenth round, Sam. And she said she heard that round named the day before. How do you account for it, Sam?"

"How do you account for a man picking a lucky lottery ticket?" the manager evaded, while getting his wits together to answer. "That's the very point. Men who study form and condition and seconds and rules and such things often pick the number of rounds, just as men have been known to pick hundred to one shots in the races. And don't forget one thing, for every man that wins there's another that loses, there's another that didn't pick right. Miss Sangster, I assure you, on my honor, that faking and fixing in the fight game is—is nonexistent."

"What is your opinion, Mr. Glendon?" she asked.

"The same as mine," Stubener snatched the answer. "He knows what I say is true, every word of it. He's never fought anything but a straight fight in his life. Isn't that right, Pat?"

"Yes, it's right," Pat affirmed; and the peculiar thing to Maud Sangster was that she was convinced he spoke the truth.

She brushed her forehead with her hand, as if to rid herself of the bepuz- t that clouded her brain.

"Listen," she said. "Last night the same editor told me that your forthcoming fight was arranged to the very round in which it would end."

Stubener was verging on a panic, but Pat's speech saved him from replying.

"Then the editor lies," Pat's voice boomed now for the first time.

"He did not lie before, about that other fight," she challenged.

"What round did he say my fight with Nat Powers would end in?"

Before she could answer the manager was into the thick of it.

"Oh, rats, Pat!" he cried. "Shut up. It's only the regular run of ring rumors. Let's get on with this interview."

He was ignored by Glendon, whose eyes, bent on hers, were no longer mildly blue, but harsh and imperative.

She was sure now that she had stumbled on something tremendous, something that would explain all that had baffled her.

At the same time she thrilled to the mastery of his voice and gaze. Here was a male man who would take hold of life and shake out of it what he wanted.

"What round did the editor say?" Glendon reiterated his demand.

"For the love of Mike, Pat, stop this foolishness," Stubener broke in.

"I wish you would give me a chance to answer," Maud Sangster said.

"I guess I'm able to talk with Miss Sangster," Glendon added. "You get out, Sam. Go off and take care of that photographer."

They looked at each other for a tense, silent moment, then the manager moved slowly to the door, opened it and turned his head to listen.

"And now what round did he say?"

"I hope I haven't made a mistake," she said tremulously, "but I am very sure that he said the sixteenth round."

She saw surprise and anger leap into Glendon's face, and the anger and accusation in the glance he cast at his manager, and she knew the blow had driven home.

And there was reason for his anger. He knew he had talked it over with Stubener, and they had reached a decision to give the audience a good run for its money without unnecessarily prolonging the fight and to end it in the sixteenth.

And here was a woman from a newspaper office naming the very round.

Stubener, in the doorway, looked limp and pale, and it was evident he was holding himself together by an effort.

"I'll see you later," Pat told him. "Shut the door behind you."

The door closed and the two were left alone. Glendon did not speak.

The expression on his face was frankly one of trouble and perplexity.

"Well?" she asked.

He got up and towered above her, then sat down again, moistening his lips with his tongue.

"I'll tell you one thing," he finally said. "The fight won't end in the sixteenth round."

She did not speak, but her unconvinced and quizzical smile hurt him.

"You wait and see, Miss Sangster, and you'll see that editor man is mistaken."

"You mean the program is to be changed?" she queried audaciously.

He quivered to the cut of her words.

"I am not accustomed to lying," he said stiffly, "even to women."

"Neither have you to me, nor have you denied the program is to be changed. Perhaps, Mr. Glendon, I am stupid, but I fail to see the difference in what number the final round occurs so long as it is predetermined and known."

"I'll tell you that round, and not another soul shall know."

She shrugged her shoulders and smiled.

"It sounds to me very much like a racing tip. They are always given that way, you know. Furthermore, I am not quite stupid, and I know there is something wrong here.

"Why were you made angry by my naming the round? Why were you angry with your manager? Why did you send him from the room?"

For reply Glendon walked over to the window as if to look out, where he changed his mind and partly turned, and she knew without seeing that "I am very sure that he said the sixteenth round."

he was studying her face. He came back and sat down.

"You've said I haven't lied to you, Miss Sangster, and you were right. I haven't."

He paused, groping painfully for a correct statement of the situation.

"Now, do you think you can believe what I am going to tell you? Will you take the word of a prizefighter?"

She nodded gravely, looking him straight in the eyes and certain that what he was about to tell was the truth.

"I've always fought straight and square. I've never touched a piece of dirty money in my life nor attempted a dirty trick. Now I can go on from that. You've shaken me up pretty badly by what you told me. I don't know what to make of it. I can't pass a snap judgment on it. I don't know. But it looks bad. That's what troubles me. For, you see, Stubener and I have talked this fight over, and it was understood between us that I would end the fight in the sixteenth round. Now you bring the same word. How did that editor know? Not from me. Stubener must have let it out—unless"—

He stopped to debate the problem.

—"unless that editor is a lucky guesser. I can't make up my mind about it. I'll have to keep my eyes open and wait and learn. Every word I've given you is straight, and there's my hand on it."

Again he towered out of his chair and over to her. Her small hand was gripped in his big one as she arose to meet him, and after a fair, straight look into the eyes between them both glanced unconsciously at the clasped hands.

She felt that she had never been more aware that she was a woman. The sex emphasis of those two hands—the soft and fragile feminine and the heavy, muscular masculine—was startling. Glendon was the first to speak.

"You could be hurt so easily," he said, and at the same time she felt the firmness of his grip almost caressingly relax.

She remembered the old Prussian king's love for giants and laughed at the incongruity of the thought association as she withdrew her hand.

"I am glad you came here today," he said, then hurried on awkwardly to make an explanation when the warm light of admiration in his eyes belied.

"I mean because maybe you have opened my eyes to the crooked dealing that has been going on."

"You have surprised me," she urged. "It seemed to me that it is so generally understood that prizefighting is full of crookedness that I cannot understand how you, one of its chief exponents, could be ignorant of it. I thought as a matter of course that you would know all about it, and now you have convinced me that you never dreamed of it. You must be different from other fighters."

He nodded his head.

"That explains it, I guess. And that's what comes of keeping away from it—from the other fighters and promoters and sports. It was easy to pull the wool over my eyes. Yet it remains to be seen whether it has really been pulled over or not. You see, I am going to find out for myself."

"And change it?" she queried, rather breathlessly, convinced somehow that he could do anything he set out to accomplish.

"No; quit it," was his answer. "If it isn't straight I won't have anything more to do with it. And one thing is certain: this coming fight with Nat Powers won't end in the sixteenth round. If there is any truth in that editor's tip, they'll all be fooled. Instead of putting him out in the sixteenth, I'll let the fight run on into the twenties. You wait and see."

"And I'm not to tell the editor?"

She was on her feet now, preparing to go.

"Certainly not. If he is only guessing, let him take his chances. And if there's anything rotten about it he deserves to lose all he bets. This is to be a little secret between you and me. I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll name the round to you. I won't run it into the twenties. I'll stop Nat Powers in the eighteenth."

"And I'll not whisper it," she assured him.

"I'd like to ask you a favor," he said tentatively. "Maybe it's a big favor."

She showed her acquiescence in her face, as if it were already granted, and he went on:

"Of course I know you won't use this faking in the interview. But I want more than that. I don't want you to publish anything at all."

She gave him a quick look with her searching gray eyes, then surprised herself by her answer.

"Certainly," she said. "It will not be published. I won't write a line of it."

"I knew it," he said simply.

For the moment she was disappointed by the lack of thanks, and the next moment she was glad that he had not thanked her.

She sensed the different foundation he was building under this meeting of an hour with her, and she became daringly explorative.

"How did you know it?" she asked.

"I don't know." He shook his head. "I can't explain it. I knew it as a matter of course. Somehow it seems to me I know a lot about you and me."

"But why not publish the interview? As your manager says, it is good advertising."

"I know it," he answered slowly. "But I don't want to know you that way. I think it would hurt if you should publish it. I don't want to think that I knew you professionally. I'd like to remember our talk here as a talk between a man and a woman. I don't know whether you understand what I'm driving at. But it's the way I feel. I want to remember this just as a man and a woman."

HEALTH RESORT FOR OUR HOME PEOPLE

Rheumatism and Blood Disorders Fade Away While You Enjoy Life and Get Fat.

"The only trouble is, up in this mountain air, I can't get sleep enough. I go to bed at nine o'clock and sleep like a boy till breakfast time," was the way Tom Olson put it, when telling what he thought of the Olympic hot springs last Saturday. Four weeks ago Tom came into the Olympic-Leader office to see the elder Webster, who has spent some little time each year at the Sol Duc and Olympic springs, and wanted to know if the hot water was hot and would cure rheumatism. He had been unable to sleep for the previous three weeks, having to walk the floor nights. His rheumatism has not altogether disappeared, but it no longer interferes with his comfort and he will come out in a day or two, a practically well man.

There were forty-seven guests at the springs, a few strangers from Seattle, but mostly local people, all of whom were enjoying a thorough rest and getting fat.

The place has been greatly improved the past year, the street lengthened, a large addition built on the house, and new tent houses provided. A flume and penstock has been put in to furnish motive power for a small lumber mill, which they hope to have running in a few days, when with ample lumber for building it is expected the springs will assume quite a citified air. At present everything is made of shakes, and rather crude, though harmonizing with the wild surroundings. However, the beds are comfortable, the meals good, and the rates less than are charged at village hotels.

A common question is, How far? Distance on a mountain trail is only measured by hours. It took the Webster party six hours to go in, using ponies, and we spent considerable time eating lunch and picking blackberries along the way. Another party, J. P. Christensen, C. A. Bork, F. E. Ulstrom and H. Coventon walked out Saturday afternoon, leaving Angeles at one and reaching the springs in time to get a bath before supper, which, confidentially speaking, was some hike. Is the water hot? It is so hot one can't keep his feet in it till after he has been in it for half an hour, and it takes out that tired feeling like magic. What do people do? Sleep, eat and take baths. Some play solo, checkers, quoits, go fishing, or enjoy the big swimming tank, 20 feet square and 5 feet deep; others take trips to the falls or up on Crystal Ridge, quite some climb and scenery and flowers amply worth the effort—besides the snow slopes are long and the sliding good. All the springs need to make them complete, is a pavilion and hammocks over the rushing, tumbling stream, a tennis court, and perhaps golf links on the ridge. Facilities for exercise would then be such that all would be suited.

REV. SMITH A SCHOOL DIRECTOR

Rev. Stephen Smith of the Congregational church has been appointed by County Superintendent Geisness to fill the unexpired term of S. E. Stakemiller on the board of education. We feel that this a good appointment. Mr. Smith is a well educated man, and vitally interested in the success of our schools. He has the time necessary to give to school affairs and will aim to keep abreast of the times in all that pertains to school life. And best of all he will have the confidence of all the people who have had the privilege of knowing him during his five years residence in Angeles.

of the Congregational church. He spoke words of comfort and hope, paying a beautiful tribute to the manly, christian character of deceased, commenting on his cheerful, sunny disposition and unselfish devotion to his family. The hymns, "Lead Kindly Light," "Nearer, My God to Thee" and "Abide With Me" were beautifully rendered by Mrs. Luppen, Mrs. Troy and Messrs. McNutt and Sellick. Mrs. Troy also singing a solo.

The pall bearers were: S. W. Beal of Evanston, Illinois, A. Fairservice and R. H. Kidd of Clallam, Julius Kirschberg, Sam Lutz and Dr. McGillivray. The honorary pall bearers were James Clark, Chas. Snyder and Mr. Rudisile of Forks and L. M. Campbell, C. Luppen and Thos Geisness. A large concourse of friends accompanied the remains to the Ocean View Cemetery where they were laid to rest under a mound of beautiful floral offerings.

Mr. Stoval was born in Mt. Forest, Ontario, in 1866, but lived most of his life in Michigan. He came to Port Angeles in May, 1910, in the interests of the Lacy Timber Co. for whom he has worked many years, and by whom his services were greatly valued. Mr. Beal, secretary of the company, was in attendance at the funeral and in speaking to friends said it would be hard, indeed, to find a man to fill Mr. Stoval's plce, as in his death the company felt they had lost one of their most efficient and trusted employes as well as a personal friend.

Besides his wife, two sons and two daughters in Angeles, Mr. Stoval leaves to mourn his loss three brothers: Earnest E. of Alpina, Michigan, George and Harry of Hubbard Lake, Michigan.

THE TAX INJUNCTION SUIT

Judge Cochran calls our attention to the item in last week's issue in which we stated that Mr. Cochran proceeded with the argument on the motion of Clallam County for a dismissal of the tax injunction suits brought by the Timber companies against Clallam County seeking to enjoin the further payment of taxes. He says that Lawyer J. E. Frost of Seattle presented the motion to the court and argued it so far as it was heard, when the court on its own motion suggested that as the motion went to the vital points involved in the litigation that the hearing be adjourned to some future date when it could be more fully heard than he could possibly give to the hearing at that time, whereupon it was passed for further hearing at a time agreeable to all parties later in July. The county has raised some legal questions in their motion that may possibly dispose of the whole case.

LOADING FOR SAMOA.

The schooner Annie Larsen was towed into port from San Francisco on Monday forenoon by the steam schooner Rosalia Mahoney and was docked at the Earles mills, where she will load about 500,000 feet of lumber for Samoa. Three other cargoes have been sent out of this port during the past ten days, indicating that the shipping of lumber will probably be done on a large scale.

LISTER TALKS TO DEMOCRATS

Wilson Men Elect 16 Delegates to State Party Convention Held Saturday in Seattle.

Governor Earnest Lister addressed the democrats of Clallam County at the party convention Thursday forenoon in the Opera House on the success of the present administration and on the difficulty of regulating the amount of appropriations by the state legislature. He spoke of the value and importance of good roads to a community and said that he advocates putting the state road levy directly on the people.

In speaking of the national situation, Governor Lister declared that the anti-trust bill that will be passed is of such a character as to specify exactly what trusts may do and what they must not do, the decisiveness of which has been lacking in all anti-trust legislation in the past. He said that the newly organized Stop-Look-Listen league has replaced on a payroll many unemployed left-overs from old administrations who otherwise would probably have been taken in charge by the authorities for being lazy husbands..

Governor Lister said that the new currency measure is the best bill of its kind since the early history of the country. He said that more and more individuality and personality is demanded in party campaigns, and that the nation needs men of ability rather than those who can only act as critics.

The convention elected 16 delegates with a half vote each to attend the party convention to be held in Seattle on Saturday, July 18. Dr. F. S. Lewis, who presided at the meeting, appointed J. P. Christenzen and A. J. Cosser as a committee to work with himself in obtaining an official county organ for the party. Senator David Troy made a short speech regarding the spirit of the party. A movement was started by Chris Kuppler to organize a Democratic Club having a regular meeting place.

The delegates chosen are F. S. Lewis, Chris Kuppler, J. A. Adams, Ed Severyns, J. L. Keeler, Fenton Grenman, Mrs. J. A. Reeve, Mrs. J. L. Keeler, Chas. Cays, T. F. Trumbull, A. J. Cosser, I. W. Reiter, J. Donahue, W. H. Guthrie, Olaf Johnson, J. P. Christensen, J. H. McCourt and W. S. Lanthorn.

HUNT DECLARED INSANE

The city police picked up an insane man, who gave his name as George Hunt, on Monday morning and turned him over to the county authorities. He was placed in the jail with two other prisoners, whom he had "buffaloed" by evening. Hunt frequently imagines that he is communing with the spirits and accuses certain people of being the milk man who delivered milk to his wife while he was away.

A guard from Steilacoom came here Wednesday afternoon to take charge of Hunt.

LAUNCH FOR PLEASURE PARTIES

Realizing the demand for a launch suitable for picnic and sightseeing parties of all kinds. C. Winfield Harris went to Seattle last week and purchased a handsome 25 passenger launch which will be for public hire every day in the week and doubtless will do a rushing business, for launch parties promise to become more popular than mountain climbing during the warm weather.

FOR SHERIFF

I hereby announce that I will be a candidate for the nomination for sheriff on the Republican ticket, subject to the September primaries.

WEST END NEWS

The people of the West End are mourning the loss of the most respected and liked citizen in this end of the county when Mr. W. A. Stoval, manager of the Lacy farm near Beaver, suddenly passed away last Monday evening of heart failure. No one would have anticipated his early death. His family were with him during his last hours, having arrived from their "town home" about ten days ago. Funeral services were held in Port Angeles on Wednesday morning. A number of citizens from the West End going to Angeles to attend same. Mr. Stoval is survived by a wife, two daughters and two sons, and brothers in Michigan, besides hosts of friends. He took an important part in extinguishing the recent forest fires along the Soldue valley which threatened heavy losses to his timber company. He was at the head of his men early and late, working at the fire as well as managing which showed his ability and grit to win his point. He had made many plans to carry out in the future when death suddenly over took him and it seemed very sad to see him leave us so suddenly.

Mr. and Mrs. Nels Nelson from the Hoko moved into their new residence there to remain permanently.

Miss George Weldricks at Sappho, is spending a few days with her aunt, after which she will return to her home in Seattle.

WOMEN'S AUXILIARY MEETING

The regularmonthly meeting of the Women's Auxiliary to the Commercial Club was held Tuesday afternoon, most of the time being taken up with reports of committees from the Rose Show. A motion was made and carried extending a vote of thanks to all committees who contributed to the success of the Rose Show, especially to the committee in charge of the entertainment, and the judges of the flowers.

It was moved and carried that a spray of white carnations be ordered sent from Seattle as an expression of sympathy to Mrs. Stoval from the ladies of the Auxiliary.

The Club adjourned not to meet again in regular session until Sept.

FURTHER: TO MY FRIENDS, CUSTOMERS, AND PEOPLE OF PORT ANGELES

I really have to thank you all for the splendid way you rallied to my call last Tuesday and assure you that I throroughly appreciate what you have done. The stock as you all know, is getting very low compared with what I have been carrying. However, I still lack the necessary funds to make my intended trip to England, for expenses run on and bills must be paid, I must have more money and it seems the only way to get it is to keep cutting prices until they are so low that you can't help but buy.

I have been a merchant in this town for the last 15 years; you all know me and know that during that time I have served the public in that capacity as well as it is possible for an ordinary mortal man to do. Now for heaven's sake, what do you want me to do? If I have to cut again I shall do so! I know perfectly well you don't want to disappoint "the old man", who, as I remarked last week, has been trying for three long weary years to gratify this one wish, vis. "To visit the land of his birth once again before he dies." My friends I have made up my mind to go, and go I must. It is an obession now and if what the novelists say is true about hearts breaking, then mine will most surely break if this one last great wish and longing of my old heart be not granted. (You can do this for me and greatly benefit yourselves in the doing. Another thing to consider is this, who knows what I may be able to do in England to influence capital to come this way. Port Angeles, I look on as my home and I will surely come back to see you all. Capital is what Port Angeles needs and money enough to settle all my bills, pay my fare to England, and keep me there is what I need. I am not asking you for a loan or a present, I am just asking you to come and get goods you all must have at prices you will never again have the chance of getting them at. They say in classics "Comparisons are Odious," but there is nothing odious in comparing prices you are paying here with the prices you are paying elsewhere. No! I should say quite the reverse. If I cannot dispose of what I have left at the end of the week, then I shall be forced to cut again and in that event will close the store all day on Monday to do this. I know, in my heart, that none of you wish to see me lose the money for which I have worked long and honestly. Now that I have reached the winter of my life and have earned my little holiday and rest before shuffling off this mortal coil, I believe that you all would be glad to know that I was spending my last days in tolerable comfort and at peace with all. I shall be able to do this if you, my friends, will come to my aid.

I sincerely thank you again both for what you have done and are now doing to make this holiday possible for, MUSKETT,
At the Times Clothing Mart.
