GLINES OFFERS PRIZES

Winnipeg, Oct. 9th.
Frank C. Teck,
Sec'y Commercial Club.

Pleased to notice enthusiastic manner in which all are combining in city and country to make first Clallam County Fair a success. United efforts generally bring results. Sorry I cannot be there. Will give two special prizes, ten dollars for first and five dollars for second for best school exhibit.

G. A. GLINES

The idea of a Clallam County Fair and Industrial Exhibit to be given chiefly for the purpose of assembling exhibits for the San Francisco Exposition, has been received with enthusiasm on every hand, exhibitors vying with committeemen in their efforts for the complete and unqualified success of the exhibition, which opens in the opera house this morning.

The hall has been lavishly decorated, ample room for the fruit, vegetable and grain exhibit being provided in 4 ft. wide tables arranged in the form of a hollow square around the central sections of seats, while the flower show on the stage will take on a pyramidal form enclosing the speakers' stand with a floral wall. The city schools exhibit of drawings and manual training work is in position on and along the east wall, while the opposite side of the hall has been arranged for private exhibitions of scarcely less interest.

The exhibits, which are numerous and exceptionally good, will be judged by the State Horticultural Inspectors, F. N. Rhodes and Henry Huff. Both gentlemen will also deliver addresses on topics of interest to the fruit grower and rancher, as also will Donald McInnes, president of the State Dairymen's Association, and J. M. Grant and Mrs. C. L. Haggard of Sequim. Stereoptican views of the county, depicting its resources and scenery, will be given both evenings. A special feature will be a display of the registered Holstein cattle recently purchased for the county farm by the board of commissioners.

NEW HIGHWAY MEANS "UNITY"

Celebration at Sequim of Completion of Olympic Way a Red Letter Day for the County.

Had the subject "What the Olympic Highway Means to Clallam County" been proposed in the form of a riddle, I believe any one of us would have thought it over and then said, "I give it up," said Dr. D. H. Craig, president of the Angeles Commercial Club, in responding to Sequim's invitation to address those attending the Olympic Highway celebration, held at that place Saturday.

"I don't believe any of us know. We haven't the least idea what this highway will mean, eventually," continued the Doctor. "The first idea would be that of unity—social unity. It means we will be able to live together like a united family. We cannot consider questions in the future, as we have in the past, from the standpoint of an individual farmer and community, but the centers must take into consideration the effect of any act upon the county as a whole. It means we can work together, each community aiding all other communities of the peninsula.

"A short time ago we were told by Governor Lister that in order to build up our city we must build up our country districts. The Olympic Highway means the birth recently of a distinctive effort in Port Angeles in the matter of bringing Clallam county together, all having become firmly convinced that the best way to advance the development of Port Angeles is to advance the development of all districts in the county.

"It means that the people of the state will now learn the possibilities of our county. There are thousands of summer tourists. Auto touring is a peculiar form of recreation in that the more you do the more you want to do. In no other way can one acquire so intimate a knowledge of the country. You'll find people who have gone along our shores in steamers and having seen something of our woods, mountains and scenery, believe this is a very picturesque country, but that's about all. Unfortunately every town on the shores of sound and straits shows its worst aspect from the water front. Tourists will now ride through the center of the county and become familiar with its great resources, its unrivaled climate and its grand beauty, with the result that we will get a large number of extremely desirable settlers for at least a portion of each year."

Evidently President Craig, who is a pleasing matter-of-fact speaker, had given his subject considerable thought, for he referred briefly to many possibilities before closing his address with a plea for the building and maintenance of first class side roads to connect with the Highway itself.

Jefferson People Had Cold Feet.

The good roads meeting held in the Sequim opera house, was to have been in the nature of a joint celebration by the people of Clallam and Jefferson counies, but it had rained the night before and the people of Jefferson, whose portion of the Olympic Highway is not, perhaps, all that it might have been, were afraid to undertake the trip, being represented only by L. D. McArdle of Quilcene, state representative, who was on the program for an address on the History of the Olympic Highway.

The state was represented by Lieut. Governor Hart, and Port Angeles by Pres. Craig and Hon. Wm.

SIOUX FLOATED AND BACK ON THE RUN

The steamer Sioux, which ran on a sand bar at the end of Dungeness spit early last week, was floated Monday morning at 11:30, being pulled off by three powerful tugs after a channel had been cut, two dredges working thereon all day Saturday and Sunday. Shortly after her second launching she left for Seattle under her own steam, and after a thorough overhauling was back on the Angeles run again yesterday.

BIG BROTHER MOVEMENT

New Idea in Development of Valuable Citizens Discussed at Parent-Teachers' Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Parent-Teacher's Association was held in the H. S. auditorium Monday evening and a most excellent program given. After the singing of America, Miss Pazandak opened the program with a report of her work as domestic science instructor. Her plan of instruction as outlined must surely bring good results and the girls are all taking great interest in the course. At the close of the meeting the domestic science department was thrown open for inspection. Everything was in apple pie order, which shows that the girls are receiving instructions in more ways than one. The hope soon to be able to serve some little luncheons all cooked and prepared by themselves. Economy in cooking and marketing is one of the things Miss Pazadak is striving to impress upon her girls.

The subject of the Big Brother movement was introduced by Mr. Andy Severyns who has given it considerable time and thought and has followed carefully its progress in Seattle. He was listened to with a great deal of interest. He stated that the movement was instituted for the purpose of giving the youth a good example to follow, enabling him to build up an ideal for himself and form a definite idea of development in both physical and mental faculties. The scientific investigation

JOHN HALLAHAN FOR COUNTY TREASURER

The best and only way to judge a man's ability, fitness, honesty and qualifications to serve the people in public office, is by his past record.

John Hallahan, candidate for County Treasurer on the Democratic ticket, has made good as County Assessor. He entered that office at a time when there was not a record of any kind in the office save a city and a county map.

By diligent application, honest endeavor, perseverance and hard work, Mr. Hallahan has built up the records until now the office has the reputation and is spoken of by state officials and others, as one of the most complete in the state.

When campaigning for the office of assessor Mr. Hallahan made but one promise to the people, and that was, the cruising of the timber. He felt that all the timber in the county was not on the tax rolls. He also felt that the amount carried on the rolls was not charged in the same proportion to farm property, and city and town lots.

That Mr. Hallahan made good his promise and kept faith with the people of the county is shown by the result.

What is the result? After making a thorough cruise of the county, 2,500,000,000 feet of timber was gained over and above the amount formerly charged, and is now added to the tax rolls.

Nearly 2,000,000,000 feet of this was added to the tax rolls two years ago and the balance this year.

This amount of timber assessed (for instance) at 50 cents per thousand would increase the assessment $1,250,000.00 and figured at 30 mills on the dollar would increase the tax $37,500.00 in one year.

The entire cost of this cruise, when the clerical work is completed, will not be to exceed $60,000.00. Therefore the 2,000,000,000 feet added to the rolls two years ago has nearly paid for the entire cost of the cruise, leaving this added amount of timber a clear gain for all time in the future; in other words the amount of timber gained as a result of the cruise has paid for the entire cost of cruising and will remain a county asset for taxation for a long term of years in the future, while if the cruise had not been made this amount of timber would escape taxation for all time in the future as it has done in the past.

A further gain will be the section plats prepared to show the amount of timber by ten acre tracts on each section, also showing all hills, gulches, creeks, slopes, roads, kind of soil, etc., etc. This record will be perpetual.

A card index of the city has also been prepared, minimizing the possibilities of errors in assessment and bringing about equality.

A plat book has likewise been added showing all metes and bounds descriptions.

A complete abstract of all lands and city lots has been added, giving the names of the owners and descriptions of their property.

All of the foregoing and many other minor additions have been made to the office records in excess of the regular duties of making the assessment, writing up the tax rolls and extending the taxes levied by the board.

In the year 1911 when Mr. Hallahan first assumed charge of the office, the timber lands of the county were assessed at $5,699,885.00. This year the assessment on timber lands is $10,062,205.00 which goes to show that the assessment on timber lands has been nearly doubled, or raised from five to ten million dollars.

At the last session of the Equalization Board, no one protested against the assessment except the large holders of timber and a few of the smaller ones.

The tenor of the protest follows: 'We submit that none of the first class timber should be assessed at to exceed 50 cents per thousand and none of the second class timber to exceed 25 cents per thousand.

"We submit that you should raise the general valuation of agricultural lands and city and town lots and each class of personal property."

After reading this protest it is evident that the timber men want their timber assessment cut down and all other classes of property raised up.

In order to do this, they must control at least three members of the Equalization Board, which consists of three commissioners, the assessor, and the treasurer.

There are many evidences to show that they do not want Mr. Hallahan as treasurer and a member of the Equalization Board. He has doubled their assessment during his term as assessor. He is tecnically familiar with the assessment rolls. He is too familiar with the timber records which he has built up. His influence on the Equalization Board would be too great and above all he cannot be handled.

Every influence, every subterfuge, every strategy known to the skilled politician is, and will be used to prevent him being elected treasurer and a member of the Equalization Board.

Too often snares and pitfalls are prepared and set to catch unsuspecting and well meaning people; very often they are persuaded, even against their better judgment, to do things, to vote for candidates which they are afterwards sorry for, after having discovered the deceit.

Don't be deceived by designing individuals who either have an ax to grind themselves, or are themselves the hirelings of some timber corporation.

Vote for John Hallahan for treasurer. His name will be found on the Democratic ticket.

Wonder if the Club women of the city, who propose to extend an invitation to all the candidates to attend a public meeting and express their views on state and local issues, will expect to hear where we all stand on prohibition?

O. W. BURDICK HAS PASSED AWAY

Ozias W. Burdick passed peacefully away at his home on 10th and Chase streets, Monday, at 11 o'clock a. m., at the ripe old age of 82 years, 10 months and 10 days.

His death is the first link to be broken in the family circle for over fifty-six years. His was born at Westford, Chittenden county, Vermont. He was married in Sparta, Wisconsin, and moved to Plainview, Minnesota, at the beginning of the Civil War. He joined the volunteers, 1st Minnesota Battery and served eighteen months He leaves a wife and six children, Geo. L., of Oberon, North Dakota; Orlin L., Edmonton, Alberta; Ida L., of this city; Carrie L., of Salem, Oregon; Asa L., of Graham's Island, North Dakota and Usher L., of Williston, North Dakota.

He lived with his family twenty years in Minnesota, twenty years in North Dakota and came to Port Angeles twelve years ago. They celebrated their 50th anniversary at Oberon, North Dakota, at the home of their son, Geo., who, with his daughter, Maud A. Burdick, have been with him to the last. The funeral was held at the home, Wednesday, at 1:30 p. m. Service by Rev. Stephen Smith and the G. A. R's. The I. O. O. F. held their service at the grave. The Rebekah Lodge of which he was also a member sent a beautiful floral piece and a large number of the members were in attendance at the funeral.

Mr. Burdick made many friends during his residence in Port Angeles, and was highly respected by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance.

BUNGALOW INN FOOD IS GROWING POPULAR

Nestled on the small bluff, overlooking the business section of Port Angeles, lies the Bungalow Inn, so-called because of the style in which it was built. Its neatness, not only in style, but in the outlines of the Inn itself would cause even the busiest man or woman to take notice.

On entering you walk across a spacious porch, made so for accommodation. The dining room sets a striking example of what money will do when brains are the best second. The tables seat four and six respectively, the choicest linen table cloths and napkins being used and laid and folded in a way that we today call "nifty." Silver service is followed on everything except dishes, individual tea pots of silver are one of the many accommodations that could be mentioned. The whole interior of the dining room is mission style. Plenty of sunlight and fresh air, or, if you prefer, you can have as much heat as in your own dining room.

Everything in the kitchen is new and sanitary, everything in its place, even to the sugar which is kept in an airtight box, set on rollers so that it can be moved around and made dust-proof. There are so many things to see, let alone the many things to eat, that it would be best to see them yourself. The Inn is run on the Table de'Hote plan. Mr. Halberg and Mr. Slattery were surprised to see the amount of trade for the first week, of the people who were willing to walk up the zig-zag to test the fare and who are coming back every day. There are several meat orders to choose from and with the rest of the menu, sets a meal before you, for the price, that cannot be beat in Clallam county.

And in summing up the total we find that the popularity of the Inn is not only known in Port Angeles but as far as Seattle, where a gentleman of means from Chicago has offered to buy the place three times in one day. One call was answered at 11:00 o'clock at night; the gentleman was admitted to the kitchen where he as much as begged to buy the place at almost any cost.

THE BIG BROTHER MOVEMENT

and clinical classification by the juvenile court, showed that the principal cause of the delinquency of children is the inefficiency of the parent, 85 per cent of the cases bro't before the court were directly or indirectly due to parental neglect.

This is the wrong the court seeks to correct by assigning the youthful delinquent to some person of character and with deep human interests. It is for this reason that the court has appointed a person to investigate the conditions of the child's life—its environment and home influences, then to give the child a hearing. The justice is empowered to take the child from the home if necessary and to place him where he will receive the proper guidance and instruction. It is the first court ever instituted for reform and not punishment. The theory of the Big Brother movement is that the youthful malefactor is not naturally bad, but he is what other people make him and if the proper moral and intellectual influences and examples are supplied, the youth will grow and develop and become a valuable citizen.

Miss Watson then spoke on the same subject, tho' applying it in a broader sense than did Mr. Severyns. She referred to Christ as the first Big Brother, and as the one who set the example for all others to follow. Her talk was beautiful, showing her clear understanding of the girl and boy and their needs. It was truly a pity that there were not more parents present to have heard this inspiring talk. Years of experience teaching boys and girls of the adolescent age has given Miss Watson a keen insight into their lives. She realizes the absolute necessity of a mother's watchful loving care, backed up by the father's firm guidance. But alas, too often both are lacking and the child is turned adrift to find its own companions and associates outside the home. If fathers and mothers were what they ought to be, there would be no need for the Big Brother movement or juvenile courts.

Mr. Failor made an interesting talk along the same line, giving his personal experiences in dealing with the boys. He wished to see fathers making great companions of their boys, sharing their sports and games and exchanging confidences. Make yourself and the home so pleasant and attractive that the boy and girl will want to stay at home, and have their companions there.

After listening to these excellent addresses the writer looked over the audience of about fifty people and was amazed to find how few parents were interested enough in the school and their children to attend this meeting. One would think parents would grasp at the opportunity of getting in touch with the interests of their children and of hearing their views on different subjects or of expressing their own views, but no, all kinds of flimsy excuses are trumped up and while the picture shows played to full houses, the Parent-Teacher's Association goes begging for attendance. But every woman and man who attended Monday's meeting came away the better for having gone.

A very interesting report of the work of the manual training department was given by the instructor, Mr. Regnier. He said they were now hurrying the completion of some of their best pieces of work to have on exhibition at the fair this week and to send with the Clallam County exhibit to Tacoma. In speaking of the practical application of the knowledge gained in this department, he said he was having the boys make a study of the work going on in the building of the new court house and to report on it in writing.

The Teachers' Retirement Fund Bill was introduced and explained by Superintendent White, who had outlined on the blackboard the principal points of the bill. Miss Brown followed with a short talk favorable to the bill and telling how successful it had been in the state of Minnesota. She said it was one of the real live questions discussed at the National Education Association in St. Paul this summer where it was heartily endorsed by all the teachers. Mr. Neal, an interested patron of the school, while stating that he was in favor of such a bill, had doubts of its working out satisfactorily from a financial standpoint. He was told that it had worked out most successfully in many of our large cities and that 24 states now had such a law. He stated that he had found no one who was going to vote for the bill except teachers but acknowledged that those he had talked to didn't know anything about the object or purpose of the bill, and evidently didn't care to inform themselves. Prof. MacNeal, H. S. principal, spoke of the good results had from such a bill in some of the eastern states and expressed himself as firmly believing that it would tend to increase the ranks of the better class of teachers, those who were willing to make it their life work. If they knew that in their declining years they would receive a certain annuity, many of our educators who desert the ranks for more lucrative positions would stay with it.

DEDICATION OF COURT HOUSE

Every business house in the city has been asked to close its doors between two and four that all employes may attend the services.

At seven o'clock a Masonic banquet at the Olympic Hotel. Judge Chadwick and the Grand State Orator will be the principal speakers and Maurice Fisher will act as toast master. A five piece orchestra has been engaged to play during the dinner hour and for the ball later in the evening.

J. C. Hansen, who is, in a way, sponser for the new court house, as well as being a leading member of the local Masonic fraternity, accompanied the guests down from Seattle, where he went Wednesday to make final arrangements for their coming.

The court house, which is to be built of red pressed brick and terra cotta, three stories high surmounted by a 16 ft. square tower reaching to a height of 82 feet, is now ready for the brick layers, who will begin work as soon as the terra cotta is received. Its heavy basement walls, big three story cement vaults, supporting steel girders, the great piles of building material and extensive grading work under way on both grounds and street will be an interesting sight for our local people, no less so, in fact, than the old building, perched precariously on its rapidly diminishing pinnacle, will be to the visitors from other cities.

CHAPTER V.

The [illegible]ted Man.

That day wa, hot and windless with an unclouded sky—a day of brass and burning.

Long before any sound audible to human ears disturbed the noonday hush, a bobcat sunning on a log in a glade to which no trail led, pricked ears, rose, glanced over shoulder with a snarl and—of a sudden was no more there.

Perhaps two minutes later a succession of remote crashings began to be heard, a cumulative volume of sounds made by some heavy body forcing by main strength through the underbrush, and ceased only when a man broke into the clearing, pulled up, stood for an instant swaying, then reeled to a seat on the log, pillowing his head on arms folded across his knees and shuddering uncontrollably in all his limbs.

He was a young man who had been and would again be very personable. Just now he wore the look of one hounded by furies. His face was crimson with congested blood and streaked with sweat and grime; bluish veins throbbed in high relief upon his temples; his lips were cracked and swollen, his eyes haggard, his hands torn and bleeding. His shirt and trousers and "cruisers" were wrecks, the latter scorched, charred, and broken in a dozen places. Woods equipment he had none beyond a hunting knife belted at the small of his back. All else had been either consumed in the forest fire or stolen by his Indian guide—who had subsequently died while attempting to murder his employer.

Since that event, the man had succeeded in losing himself completely. In seeking shelter from the thunderstorm, he had lost touch with his only known and none too clearly located landmarks. Then, after a night passed without a fire in the lee of a ragged bluff, he had waked to discover the sun rising in the west and the rest of the universe sympathetically upside-down; and aimlessly ever since he had stumbled and blundered in the maze of those grimly reticent fastnesses, for the last few hours haunted by a fear of failing reason—possessed by a notion that he was dogged by furtive enemies—and within the last hour the puppet of blind, witless panic.

But even as he strove to calm himself and rest, the feeling that something was peering at him from behind a mask of undergrowth grew intolerably acute.

At length he jumped up, glared wildly at the spot where that something no longer was, flung himself frantically through the brush in pursuit of it, and—found nothing.

With a great effort he pulled himself together, clamped his teeth upon the promise not again to give way to hallucinations, and turned back to the clearing.

There, upon the log on which he had rested, he found—but refused to believe he saw—a playing card, a trey of hearts, face up in the sunglare.

With a gesture of horror, Alan Law fled the place.

While the sounds of his flight were still loud, a grinning half-breed guide stole like a shadow to the log, laughed derisively after the fugitive, picked up and pocketed the card, and set out in tireless, cat-footed pursuit.

An hour later, topping a ridge of rising ground, Alan caught from the hollow on its farther side the music of clashing waters. Tortured by thirst, he began at once to descend in reckless haste.

What was at first a gentle slope covered with waist-deep brush and carpeted with leaf-mold, grew swiftly more declivitous, a mossy hillside, as steep as a roof, bare of underbrush, and sparely sown with small cedars through whose ranks cool blue water twinkled far below.

The shelving moss-beds afforded treacherous footing; Alan was glad now and then of the support of a cedar, but these grew ever smaller, and more widely spaced and were not always convenient to his hand. He came abruptly and at headlong pace within sight of the eaves of a cliff—and precisely then the hillside seemed to slip from under him.

His heels flourished in the air, his back thumped a bed of pebbles thinly overgrown with moss. The stones gave, the moss-skin broke, he began to slide—grasped at random a youngish cedar which stayed him imperceptibly, coming away with all its puny roots—caught at another, no more substantial—and amid a shower of loose stone shot out over the edge and down a drop of more than thirty feet.

He was instantaneously aware of the sun, a molten ball wheeling madly in the cup of the turquoise sky. Then dark waters closed over him.

He came up struggling and gasping, and struck out for something dark that rode the waters near at hand—something vaguely resembling a canoe.

But his strength was largely spent, his breath had been driven out of him by the force of the fall, and he had swallowed much water—while the field of his consciousness was stricken with confusion.

Within a stroke of an outstretched paddle, he flung up a hand and went down again.

Instantly one occupant of the canoe, a young and very beautiful woman in a man's hunting clothes, spoke a sharp word of command and, as her guide steadied the vessel with his paddle, rose in her place so surely that she scarcely disturbed the nice balance of the little craft, and curved her lithe body over the bow, headforemost into the pool.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Law had, in point of fact, endured more than he knew; more than even a weathered woodsman could have borne without suffering. Forty-eight hours of such heavy woods-walking as he had put in to escape the forest fire, would have served to prostrate almost any man; add to this (ignoring a dozen other mental, nervous and physical strains) merely the fact that he had been half-drowned.

He experienced a little fever, a little delirium, then blank slumbers of exhaustion.

He awoke in dark of night, wholly unaware that thirty-six hours had passed since his fall. This last, however, and events that had gone before, he recalled with tolerable clearness—allowing for the sluggishness of a drowsy mind. Other memories, more vague, of gentle ministering hands, of a face by turns an angel's, a flower's, a fiend's, and a dear woman's, troubled him even less materially. He was already sane enough to allow he had probably been a bit out of his head, and since it seemed he had been saved and cared for, he found no reason to quarrel with present circumstances.

Still, he would have been grateful for some explanation of certain phenomena which still haunted him—such as a faint, elusive scent of roses with a vague but importunate sense of a woman's presence in that darkened room—things manifestly absurd . . .

With some difficulty, from a dry throat, he spoke, or rather whispered: "Water!"

In response he heard someone move over a creaking floor. A sulphur match spluttered infamously. A candle caught fire, silhouetting—illusion, of course!—the figure of a woman in hunting shirt and skirt. Water splashed noisily. Alan became aware of someone who stood at his side, one hand offering a glass to his lips, the other gently raising his head that he might drink with ease.

Draining the glass, he breathed his thanks and sank back, retaining his grasp on the wrist of that unreal hand. It suffered him without resistance. The hallucination even went so far as to say, in a woman's soft accents:

"You are better, Alan?"

He sighed incredulously: "Rose!"

The voice responded "Yes!" Then the perfume of roses grew still more strong, seeming to fan his cheek like a woman's warm breath. And a miracle came to pass; for Mr. Law, who realized poignantly that all this was sheer, downright nonsense, distinctly felt lips like velvet caress his forehead.

He closed his eyes, tightened his grasp on that hand of phantasy, and muttered rather inarticulately.

The voice asked: "What is it, dear?"

He responded: "Delirium . . . But I like it . . . Let me rave!"

Then again he slept.

CHAPTER VI.

Disclosures.

In a little corner office, soberly furnished, on the topmost floor of one of lower Manhattan's loftiest office-towers, a little mouse-brown man sat over a big mahogany desk; a little man of big affairs, sole steward of one of America's most formidable fortunes.

Precisely at eleven minutes past noon (or at the identical instant chosen by Alan Law to catapult over the edge of a cliff in northern Maine) the muted signal of the little man's desk telephone clicked and, eagerly lifting receiver to ear, he nodded with a smile and said in accents of some relief: "Ask her to come in at once, please."

Jumping up, he placed a chair in intimate juxtaposition with his own; and the door opened, and a young woman entered.

The mouse-brown man bowed. "Miss Rose Trine?" he murmured with a great deal of deference.

The young woman returned his bow with a show of perplexity: "Mr. Digby?"

"You are kind to come in response to my—ah—unconventional invitation," said the little man. "Won't you—ah—sit down?"

She said, "Thank you," gravely, and took the chair he indicated. And Mr. Digby, with an admiration he made no effort to conceal, examined the fair face turned so candidly to him.

"It is quite comprehensible," he said diffidently—"if you will permit me to say so—now that one sees you, Miss Trine, it is quite comprehensible why my employer—ah—feels toward you as he does."

The girl flushed. "Mr. Law has told you?"

"I have the honor to be his nearest friend, this side the water, as well as his man of business."

He paused with an embarrassed gesture. "So I have ventured to request this—ah—surreptitious appointment in order to—ah—take the further liberty of asking whether you have recently sent Alan a message?"

Her look of surprise was answer enough, but she confirmed it with vigorous denial: "I have not communicated with Mr. Law in more than a year!"

"Precisely as I thought," Mr. Digby nodded. "None the less, Mr. Law not long since received what purported to be a message from you; in fact—a rose." And as Miss Trine sat forward with a start of dismay, he aded: "I have the information over Mr. Law's signature—a letter received ten days ago—from Quebec."

"Alan in America!" the girl cried in undisguised distress.

"He came in response to—ah—the message of the rose."

"But I did not send it!"

"I felt sure of that, because," said Mr. Digby, watching her narrowly—"because of something that accompanied the rose, a symbol of another significance altogether—a playing card, a trey of hearts."

Her eyes were blank. He pursued with openly sincere reluctance: "I must tell you, I see, that a trey of hearts invariably foresignaled an attempt by your father on the life of Alan's father."

With a stricken cry the girl crouched back in the chair and covered her face with her hands.

"That is why I sent for you," Mr. Digby pursued hastily, as if in hope of getting quickly over a most unhappy business. "Alan's letter, written and posted on the steamer, reached me within twenty-four hours of his arrival in Quebec, and detailed his scheme to enter the United States secretly—as he puts it, 'by the back door,' by way of northern Maine—and promised advice by telegraph as soon as he reached Moosehead Lake. He should have wired me ere this, I am told by those who know the country he was to cross. Frankly, I am anxious about the boy!"

"And I!" the girl exclaimed pitifully. "To think that he should be brought into such peril through me!"

"You can tell me nothing?"

"Nothing—as yet. I did not dream of this—much less that the message of the rose was known to any but Alan and myself. I cannot understand!"

"Then I may tell you this much more, that your father maintains a very efficient corps of secret agents."

"You think he spied upon me?" the girl flamed with indignation.

"I know he did." Mr. Digby permitted himself a quiet smile. "It has seemed my business, in the service of my employer, to employ agents of my own. There is no doubt that your father sent you to Europe for the sole purpose of having you meet Alan."

"Oh!" she protested. "But what earthly motive—?"

"That Alan might be won back to America through you—and so—"

There was no need to finish out his sentence. The girl was silent, pale and staring with wide eyes, visibly mustering her wits to cope with this emergency.

"I may depend on you," Mr. Digby suggested, "to advise me if you find out anything?"

"For even more." The girl rose and extended a hand whose grasp was firm and vital on his fingers. A fine spirit of resolve set her countenance aglow. "You may count on me for action on my own part, if I find circumstances warrant it. I promised not to marry Alan because of the feud between our fathers—but not to stand by and see him sacrificed. Tell me how I may communicate secretly with you—and let me go as soon as possible!"

CHAPTER VII.

The Mutineer.

Within the hour Rose Trine stood before her father in that somber room wherein he wore out his crippled days, in that place of silence and shadows whose sinister color-scheme of crimson and black was the true livery of his monomania—his passion for vengeance that alone kept warm the embers of life in that wasted and moveless frame.

An impish malice glimmered in his sunken eyes as he kept her waiting upon his pleasure. And when at length he decided to speak, it was with a ring of hateful irony in that strangely sonorous voice of his.

"Rose," he said slowly—"my daughter!—I am told you have today been guilty of an act of disloyalty to me."

She said coolly: "You had me spied upon."

"Naturally, with every reason to question your loyalty, I had you watched."

She waited a significant moment, then dropped an impassive monosyllable into the silence: "Well?"

"You have visited the man Digby, servant and friend of the man I hate—and you love."

She said, without expression: "Yes."

"Repeat what passed between you."

"I shall not, but on one condition."

"And that is?"

"Tell me first whether it was you who sent the rose to Alan Law—and more, where Judith has been during the last fortnight?"

"I shall tell you nothing, my child. Repeat"—the resonant voice rang with inflexible purpose—"repeat what the man Digby told you!"

The girl was silent. He endured her stare for a long minute, a spark of rage kindling to flame the evil old eyes. Then his one living member that had power to serve his iron will, a hand like the claw of a bird of prey, moved toward a row of buttons sunk in the writing-bed of his desk.

"I warn you I have ways to make you speak—"

With a quick movement the girl bent over and prisoned the bony wrist in her strong fingers. With her other hand, at the same time, she whipped open an upper drawer of the desk and took from it a revolver which she placed at a safe distance.

"To the contrary," she said quietly, "you will remember that the time has passed when you could have me punished for disobedience. You will call nobody: if interrupted, I shan't hesitate to defend myself. And now"—laying hold of the back of his chair, she moved it some distance from the desk—"you may as well be quiet while I find for myself what I wish to know."

For a moment he watched in silence as she bent over the desk, rummaging its drawers. Then with an infuriated gesture of his left hand, he began to curse her.

She shuddered a little as the black oaths blistered his thin old lips, dedicating her and all she loved to sin, infamy and sorrow; but nothing could stay her in her purpose. He was breathless and exhausted when she straightened up with an exclamation of satisfaction, studied intently for a moment a sheaf of papers, and thrust them hastily into her hand-bag, together with the revolver.

Then touching the push-button which released a secret and little-used door, without a backward glance she slipped from the room and, closing the door securely, within another minute had made her way unseen from the house.

CHAPTER VIII.

The Incredible Thing.

Broad daylight, the top of a morning as rare as ever broke upon the north country: Alan Law opening bewildered eyes to realize the substance of a dream come true.

True it proved itself, at least, in part. He lay between blankets upon a couch of balsam fans, in a corner of somebody's camp—a log structure, weather-proof, rudely but adequately furnished. His clothing, rough-dried but neatly mended, lay upon a chair at his side.

He rose and dressed in haste, at once exulting in his sense of complete rest and renewed well-being, a prey to hints of an extraordinary appetite, and provoked by signs that seemed to bear out the weirdest flights of his delirious fancies.

There were apparently indisputable evidences of a woman's recent presence in the camp: blankets neatly folded upon a second bed of aromatic balsam in the farther corner; an effect of orderliness not common with guides; a pair of dainty buckskin gauntlets depending from a nail in the wall; and—he stood staring witlessly at it for more than a minute—in an old preserve jar on the table, a single rose, warm and red, dew upon its petals!

There was also fire in the cook stove, with a plentiful display of things to cook; but despite his hunger Alan didn't stop for that, but rushed to the door and threw it open and himself out into the sunshine, only to pause, dashed, chagrined, mystified.

There was no other living thing in sight but a loon that sported far up the river and saluted him with a shriek of mocking laughter.

The place was a cleft in the hills, a table of level land some few acres in area, bounded on one hand, beneath the cliff from which he had dropped, by a rushing river fat with recent rains; on the other by a second cliff of equal height. Upstream the water curved round the shoulder of a towering hill, downstream the cliffs closed upon it until it roared through a narrow gorge.

Near the camp, upon a strip of shelving beach that bordered the river where it widened into a deep, dark pool, two canoes were drawn up, bottoms to the sun. Dense thickets of pines, oaks, and balsams hedged in the clearing.

He was, it seemed, to be left severely to himself, that day; when he had cooked and made way with an enormous breakfast, Alan found nothing better to do till time for luncheon than to explore this pocket domain.

He feasted famously again at noon; whiled away several hours vainly whipping the pools with rod and tackle found in the camp, for trout that he really didn't hope would rise beneath that blazing sun; and toward three o'clock lounged back to his aromatic couch for a nap.

The westering sun had thrown a deep, cool shadow across the cove when he was awakened by importunate hands and a voice of magic.

Rose Trine was kneeling beside him, clutching his shoulders, calling on him by name—distracted by an inexplicable anxiety.

He wasted no time discriminating between dream and reality, but gathered both into his arms. And for a moment she rested there unresisting, sobbing quietly.

"What is it? What is it, dearest?" he questioned, kissing her tears away.

"To find you all right. . . . I was so afraid!" she cried brokenly.

"Of what? Wasn't I all right when you left me here this morning?"

She disengaged with an effort, rose, and looked down strangely at him.

"I did not leave you here this morning, Alan. I wasn't here—"

That brought him to his own feet in a jiffy. "You were not!" he stammered. "Then who—?"

"Judith," she stated with conviction.

"Impossible! You don't understand."

The girl shook her head. "Yet I know: Judith was here until this morning. I tell you I know—I saw her only a few hours ago. She passed us in a canoe with one of her guides, while we watched in hiding on the banks. Not that alone, but another of her guides told mine she was here with you. She had sent him to South Portage for quinine. He stopped there to get drunk—and that's how my guide managed to worm the information from him."

Precipitating Both Into That Savage Welter.

Alan passed a hand across his eyes. "I don't understand," he said dully. "It doesn't seem possible she could—"

A shot interrupted him, the report of a rifle from a considerable distance upstream, echoed and re-echoed by the cliffs. And at this, clutching frantically at his arm, the girl drew him through the door and down toward the river.

"Oh, come, come!" she cried wildly. "There's no time!"

"But, why? What was that?"

"Judith is returning. I left my guide up the trail to signal us. Don't you know what it means if we don't manage to escape before she gets here?"

"But how?"

"According to the guide the river's the only way other than the trail."

"The current is too strong. They could follow—pot us at leisure from the banks."

"But downstream—the current with us—"

"Those rapids?"

"We must shoot them!"

"Can it be done?"

"It must be!"

Two more shots put a period to his doubts and drove it home. He offered no further objection, but turned at once to launch one of the canoes.

As soon as it was in the water, Rose took her place in the bow, paddle in hand, and Alan was about to step in astern when a fourth shot sounded and a bullet kicked up turf within a dozen feet. A glance discovered two figures debouching into the clearing. He dropped into place and, planting paddle in shallows, sent the canoe well out with a vigorous thrust.

Two strokes took it to the middle of the pool where immediately the current caught the little craft in its urgent grasp and sped it smoothly through more narrow and higher banks. A moment more and the mouth of the gorge was yawning for them.

With the clean balance of an experienced canoeman, Alan rose to his feet for an instantaneous reconnoissance both forward and astern. He looked back first, and groaned in his heart to see the sharp prow of the second canoe glide out from the banks. He looked ahead and groaned aloud. The rapids were a wilderness of shouting waters, white and green, worse than anything he had anticipated or ever dreamed of.

But there was now no escaping that ordeal. The canoe was already spinning between walls where the water ran deep and fast with a glassy surface.

The next instant it was in the jaws; and the man settled down to work with grim determination, pitting courage and strength and experience against the ravening waters that tore at the canoe on every hand, whose mad clamor beat back and forth between the walls of the gorge like vast bellowings of infernal mirth.

He fought like one possessed. There was never an instant's grace for judgment or execution; the one must be synchronous with the other, both instantaneous, or else—destruction.

The canoe wove this way and that like an insane shuttle threading some satanic loom. Now it hesitated, nuzzling a gigantic boulder over which the water wove a pale green and glistening hood, now in the space of a heartbeat it shot forward twice its length through a sea of creaming waves, now plunged wildly toward what promised instant annihilation and cheated that only by the timely plunge of a paddle, guided by luck or instinct or both.

The one ray of hope in Alan's mind, when he surveyed before committing himself and the woman he loved to that hideous gauntlet, sprang from the fact that, however rough, the rapids were short. Now, when he had been in their grasp a minute, he seemed to have been there hours.

His laborings were tremendous, unbelievable, inspired. In the end they were all but successful. The goal of safety was within thirty seconds' more of quick, hard work, when Alan's paddle broke and the canoe swung broadside to a boulder, turned turtle and precipitated both headlong into that savage welter.

As the next few minutes passed he was fighting like a mad thing against overwhelming odds. Then, of a sudden, he found himself rejected, spewed forth from the cataract and swimming mechanically in the smooth water of a wide pool beyond the lowermost eddy, the canoe floating bottom up near by, and Rose supporting herself with one hand on it.

Her eyes met his, clear with the sanity of her adorable courage.

He floundered to her side, panted instructions to transfer her hand to his shoulder, and struck out for the nearer shore.

Both found footing at the same time and waded out, to collapse, exhausted, against the bank.

Then, with a sickening qualm, Alan remembered the pursuit. He rose and looked up the rapid just in time to view the last swift quarter of the canoe's descent: Judith in the bow, motionless, a rifle across her knees, in the stern an Indian guide kneeling and fighting the waters with scarcely perceptible effort in contrast with Alan's supreme struggles.

Like a living thing the canoe seemed to gather itself together, to poise, to leap with all its strength; it hurdled the eddy in a bound, took the still water with a mighty splash, and shot downstream at diminished speed, the Indian furiously backing water.

As though that had been the one moment she had lived for, Judith lifted her rifle and brought it to bear—upon her sister.

With a cry of horror, Alan flung the canoe stared along the sights, then lowered her weapon and, turning, spoke indistinguishably to the guide, who instantly began to ply a brisk paddle.

The canoe sped on, vanished swiftly round a bend.

After a long time, Alan voiced his unmitigated amazement:

"Why—in the name of heaven! Why—?"

The girl said dully: "Don't you know?" And when he shook his head. "Her guide told mine you had saved her life on the dam at Spirit Lake. Now do you see?"

His countenance was blank with wonder: "Gratitude?"

Rose smiled wearily: "Not gratitude alone, but something more terrible. . . . " She rose and held out her hand. "Not that I can blame her. . . . But come; if we strike through here we will, I think, pick up a trail that will bring us to Black Beaver settlement by dark."

A Marvelous Escape

"My little boy had a marvelous escape," writes P. F. Bastiams of Prince Albert, Cape of Good Hope. "It occured in the middle of the night. He got a very severe attack of croup. As luck would have it, I had a large bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in the house. After following the directions for an hour and twenty minutes he was through all danger." Sold by all dealers.

VOTE FOR

FRANK DUSTMAN

FOR SHERIFF

Frank Dustman, democratic nominee for sheriff, is one of the old timers of Ciallam county, having come to Port Angeles from Ohio (where he was born in 1872) in 1891, twenty-four years ago.

While, like all newcomers, he worked at various things these first years, for the past eleven years he has been with the Angeles Telephone Company, resigning his position as superintendent a few months ago to accept that of lineman with the Olympic Power Company.

He was city marshal for three years, and for the four years ending December 31st next, has been city councilman.

Mr. Dustman has made good in all positions, private as well as public. As a member of the council, he has always worked for public improvements . Commencing his first term at a time when street assessment districts were unknown in Port Angeles, he has worked faithfully with the more progressive element of council and city to the end that we have now a quarter of a million of street improvements under way.

CLUB NEWS AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

Reading Club Proposes That Club Women Hear the County Candidates

The P. A. Reading Club began its year's work last Friday afternoon with Mrs. C. W. Brewster as hostess. Mrs. Charles Fillon had charge of the program, which consisted of a general discussion of the state and local candidates up for election. It proved a very interesting program, and before adjournment a motion was made and carried that the local candidates be requested by the club women of the city to hold a public meeting at which time the women may meet them and hear their views expressed.

There are so many new women in the city anxious to vote, but handicapped by their lack of knowledge of the candidates, that they feel it would help a great deal if they could see and hear them.

Complimentary to the hostess, a pleasant little surprise was planned for her by the social committee, who provided light refreshments and a phonograph, making of the meeting more of a social session. The following beautiful and appropriate toast was given by Mrs. Hyde to Mrs. Brewster:

Thoughtful in youth, but not austere in age,
Calm, but not cold, and cheerful tho a sage.
Too true to flatter and too kind to sneer;
And only just when seemingly severe.
So gently blending courtesy and art,
That wisdom's lips seemed borrowing friendship's heart.
Taught by the sorrows that her age had known,
In other's trials to forget her own.
As hour by hour her lengthened day declined,
A sweeter radiance lingered o'er her mind.
Cold were the lips that spoke her early praise,
And hushed the voices of her morning days.
Yet the same accents dwelt on every tongue,
And love renewing kept her ever young.

"A Portrait."
Oliver Wendell Holmes.

Mrs. Charles Fillon will be the hostess on October 23rd, and Mrs. John Willson will have charge of the program. "The Seven Sisters" will come up for consideration and discussion.

An enthusiastic meeting of the Women's Auxiliary to the P. A. Commercial Club was held last Tuesday afternoon in the Commercial Club room with two new members present. The most important feature of the afternoon's meeting was the resolution to put forth every effort to try and pay off the $750 assessment against the library site before the new year. To this end the auxiliary voted two hundred dollars of its present funds to be used for that purpose and an effort will be made to collect the sums pledged by the different members of the Brotherhood which ought to reach another two hundred. When the ladies have this debt off their hands they will be ready to give material assistance to the Commercial Club in carrying out some of its plans. Any clubs or individuals who feel that they would like to assist with donations toward the paying off of this debt, which means a fine library building for Port Angeles within a short time, will find that any assistance they can lend will be very much appreciated.

Mr. G. V. Smith came before the ladies at the request of the Fair Committee and asked them to take charge of providing a rest room down town for the accommodation of women and children coming to attend the fair. Though it was rather late to arrange for anything of the kind, the president appointed Mrs. Mathewson and Mrs. Webster a committee to do the best they could. Mr. Smith also asked for the ladies assistance in making a floral display for the fair; to this they also responded favorably, the flowers to be simply a display, not entered for prizes.

Considerable time was taken up in listening to a report of a case of charity, and in deciding what was best to be done under the circumstances. A committee was finally appointed to make further investigation.

It was moved and carried that an afternoon tea be given some time this month in the library room for the purpose of inviting in and becoming acpuainted with many of the new people who have recently come to our city and try to enlist their sympathy and cooperation in the work of the Auxiliary. Old members, who have lost some of their enthusiasm, are requested to come out and imbibe new energy and spirits in discussing things over the tea cups.

The Musical Club enjoyed a pleasant meeting Tuesday afternoon, and were highly entertained with the excellent program rendered which was in charge of Mrs. Chester Baker. An excellent paper on the Rise of Russian Music was given by Mrs. Warner, a vocal duet by Mrs. Troy and Miss Taylor was very much enjoyed, also, vocal solos by Mr. Dunn, Miss Taylor and Mrs. Case. Piano solos were given by Mrs. McCowen and Miss Wolverton and a piano duet by Mrs. Hyde and Mrs. Harrison.

It was definitely decided to have a Choral Club in connection with the Musical Club to which anyone could belong independent of the musical club. A director from Seattle will be secured. The next program will be in charge of Miss Chase and will be in the Composer's Gounod, De Bussey, Saint-Saeus.

Mrs. Emil Dermul was hostess to the W. L. C., Friday, October 9th. The program consisted of papers on American Composers and their Work, The Ideas of a Plain Country Woman and Psychic Science. All were very good but especially the latter by Mrs. Ora Hickok. Dainty refreshments were served at the close of the program.

The Thimble Club enjoyed a delightful afternoon Thursday, with Mrs. Sam Lutz as hostess.

REBEKAH MEETING OF DISTRICT NO. 21

The semi-annual meeting of this district, composed of the lodges of Port Townsend, Oak Harbor, Coupeville, Sequim, Forks and Port Angeles, convened at Port Townsend at 8:00 p. m., October 13th, with one hundred and four members present. The regular session of Mizpah No. 11, was first on the program, at which they initiated four candidates in a most beautiful manner. After close of lodge the District meeting ensued with election of following officers for next year: Chairman, Elizabeth Ralston; V-Chairman, Martha Lundquist; Treasurer, Mary MacClure, declining reelection, Mrs. Sprague was elected and Secretary Ruth Burgman was reelected. After close of the meeting a bounteous banquet and dance followed which made the time of waiting for the boat pass very pleasantly. At 3:00 a. m., we were aboard the charming little steamer, City of Angeles, bound for home. Right now let us say that we were most royally treated aboard, and a more courteous and accommodating set of officers could not be found. The company owning this boat can always depend upon the Rebekahs boosting for them and they are planning another trip on the City of Angeles when they meet at Oak Harbor next May.

Those attending from Port Angeles were: Mesdames Brownrigg, Harley, Wright, Cloukie, Graham, Ramsey, McRoberts, Higgins, Walton, McNutt, Wold, Johnson, Burgman, Falk, Miss MacClure.

The Man Who Never Gave Up

Editor Geo. O'Brien of the Sequim Press presided and after delivering the address of welcome introduced the Hon. L. D. McArdle, the first speaker, as the one man who had worked in season and out of season, never giving up in his efforts to secure the building of that portion of the road down Hood canal. Mr. McArdle opened his address by stating that there had been slides on the canal road which were not yet cleared away; while he had driven over the first seven miles Monday, it would take two weeks to put the the road in shape for use.

"The road,or the idea started away back within three years after Washington became a territory," said Mr. McArdle, "when the legislature passed a memorium praying congress to build a wagon road along the west shore of Hood Canal to provide a safe outlet. The matter had been brought up from time to time since but we nave always been asking some one to do the work for us; only within the last three or four years have we had men who could take hold of it and put it thru.

The first appropriation of $35,000 paid for the survey and built two and a half miles of road. This expenditure of $14,000 a mile proved a serious handicap as there were twenty-one miles yet to be built.

"No appropriation was made in 1911 and no state road work done in the subsequent two years;then came the last legislature with its appropriation of $121,000 to complete the road, on a basis of $6,000 the mile.

Still Have A Duty To Perform

"While the road has been built, connecting the northern part of the peninsula with Olympia," said Mr. McArdle, "we still have a duty to perform. We must go to the legislature for two things. We have a maximum grade of nine per cent on the Hood Canal road, with a road bed fourteen feet in width and unsurpassed in the State of Washington; but when we come to the west shore of the Quilcene we strike a mountain, and there is another on the west shore of Discovery Bay. Heretofore we have built roads to accommodate people, but we must now take a water line instead of crossing 7 or 800 ft. mountains.

"Formerly the proposed road from Hoodsport to Duckabush was called the No. 14. We got away from that when we established the Olympic Highway as a primary highway, appropriated the money for its construction and set aside 5 per cent of all road money collected by the state for maintenance. The levy is now one mill, which will raise $1,000,000 per year. Most important of all, we have worked out a definite plan, or state policy, for road improvement.

Convict Labor on Roads

"And now we have had proposed a certain road measure which involves the problem of taking care of the state's wards. There can be no objection to this bill on humanitarian grounds, but if we expend one million dollars a year on state roads we want the best results. Up to the present time the majority of the state's wards have been employed in manufacturing jute bags and the cost of their support has been 46 cents per day per man. The bill before us proposes compulsory employment of all wards except life termers on the state roads. It has been the experience of this state that 35 per cent of the cost of maintaining convicts employed in rock quarries has gone for guards. At the same rate, $700,000 of the two million proposed to be appropriated for the two years' work will go for guards before the road work starts. This would not be so bad if they would produce the work. The honor camp system was an untried system; we all had the same feeling towards it and we tried it. It costs 46 cents a day to keep a man in the state penitentiary and $2.56 per man per day in the honor camp. In three camps employing free labor it cost 25 cents, 28 cents and 22½ cents per yard to do the work, while every yard the convicts moved cost 66 cents. In other words, it took almost three convicts to do the work of one free man. If it is made mandatory that the two million dollars a biennium be expended on state convicts, we gray haired men will all be dead before the highways proposed are completed.

An Appeal for the Boys

Lieut.-Governor Hart, next introduced, spoke of the wonderful change in the way of road building since he came to this country when there was but two miles of wagon road in Snohomish county, where now are maintained 3 or 400 miles of automobile roads. He paid a flowery tribute to McArdle, saying that to his singleness of purpose we are indebted for the Hood Canal road; he wished we had more men who had the ability to do something and who would stay by it until it was done.

Most of the Lieut.-Governor's speech, however, might be considered political—an appeal for the "boys and young men whom a good roads fanatic proposes to ruin for life by throwing them into convict road camps. He pictured the boys, or young men who are no more than boys,who in their exuberance of spirit or while drinking perhaps had committed some act for which they were arrested and the judge had seen fit to deprive them of their liberty for a time until they might learn a trade and develop character, so that they could go among their fellow men again and with their faces to the front and heads erect, the old records blotted out and sealed forever, live lives of value to their state and country. If we are to take these boys out and mix them with hardened criminals, 70 per cent of whom are of the hobo class, to bring them out on the roads where they will be branded as criminals and convicts forever, we might far better have sent them to the penitentiary at Walla Walla in the first place."

Addresses were also made by Wm. B. Ritchie, who told of the resources of western Clallam county, and by Frank Balch, whose droll way of relating early experiences kept the audience in continuous laughter.

Commercial Club Banquet

J. M. Grant, one of Clallam's pioneers, well known as our logged-off lands commissioner,presided,as toastmaster, over the banquet given at Hotel Sinclair, at seven o'clock, which was enjoyed by some seventy-five ladies and gentlemen, many of whom remained to take in the dance later in the evening. The speakers were: Lieut. Governor Hart, Hon. L. D. McArdle, Wm. B. Richie, John Hansen and Secretary Teck of the Angeles Club.

The scenic resources of the Olympics, which were characterized as being greater than all Switzerland, furnished the chief topic, Mr. Ritchie making a particularly happy comparison when he stated that Ben Lomond, that far famed mountain in Scotland which they visited in company with five thousand other excursionists, when over in the British Isles recently, did not have a look-in alongside of Mount Angeles. Mr. Teck spoke of the logged-off lands awaiting development, picturing the time when the thousands of acres of the finest land on earth, all along the Straits, should be under cultivation, and Mr. Hansen endeavored to impress upon the Sequim people the necessity of using the drag on their new roads this winter, if they wish them to remain in good condition until spring. He cautioned the ranchers that inasmuch as No. 1's road tax money was exhausted, the county could not do the work, and they would have only themselves to blame if the new roads cut thru and became impassible. Next year, said Mr. Hansen, the county will spend $5,000 of the general road and bridge money in graveling the new road to the Jefferson county line. The west end districts will have the balance of the money raised for this fund, while No. 2 will get the benefit of the state aid money. Aside from the $5,000, East End road work would be limited to the $7,000 raised by its five mill road levy.

Mr. Fleming wanted to know who was going to maintain planking. If city at large, he was of the opinion that the work should be of a permanent nature. Engineer Filion stated that this would be an important item to take into consideration. If city will have to maintain these streets, the number in sight, with the numerous bridges will reach shortly $10,000 a year and current expense fund will not stand it. Attorney Smith stated the matter was up to council; repairs could be ordered charged to property. Mr. Wilcox stated that he made extensive inquiry at Astoria where considerable of this kind of work had been done and he believed the city would have to maintain the planking. A motion by Shields to direct the city attorney to bring in an ordinance ordering the work done was adopted 4 to 2, Wilcox and Fleming voting no. Messrs. Dustman, Bigelow and Wilcox were appointed a committee to approve plans and specifications for the work.

A letter was read from Albert Johnson, Rep., Second District, in Washington, to Mayor White. In this letter, Mr. Johnson states that owing to the rush he will be unable to get an amendment to the bill so that the city will get the lots in block 67 for city purposes. He expected, however, to be able to get the bill thru the new Congress.

Ordinances were offered by the city attorney prohibiting tying of teams to city hydrants, and amending Section 11, of the grade ordinance changing the grade of Victoria street at Peabody, and intervening street to James to 18 feet above datum to conform to railroad grade coming from Railroad avenue. The grade at Francis street will be 17 feet above datum.

Ordinances fixing tax levy and approving assessment roll for improvement of Third street and K street were adopted.

Mr. Graham of the Street Department reported that parties on Peabody street desired to leave old walk on west side of street until completion of new bridge, when they will put in new walk ordered. Permission granted upon motion of Mr. Dustman.

Mr. Wilcox wanted Third street extended, graveled for about three blocks, but engineer was given a chance to demonstrate a split-log drag on the grade there.

Mr. Woods was given sixty days extension of time to complete Peabody street bridge upon motion of Mr. Shields. It is said Mr. Woods has the contract for the trestle work on Lincoln street and that he will do this work first and get Lincoln street opened up before closing Peabody street.
