SMITH AND BABCOCK WIN

Cosser, Rose and Severyns the Only Democratic Candidates to Be Elected

The close contest between Bishop and Dustman for sheriff and Cochran and Rose for attorney, coupled with the unwarranted and unprincipled eleventh hour attacks made upon the latter by the Knocker, were the principal features of interest, locally, in election day.

With Rena and Ozette still to be reported Bishop has a lead of 66 over Dustman, and Rose 63 over Cochran. Cosser, as usual proved to be the most popular man in the county, his majority being 829, tho Wood was a close second with 853 to spare. Clark, another man against whom the knocker spared no abuse, received the endorsement of 1378 votes, a majority of 547. Andy Severyns shares with Cosser and Rose the honor of being the only successful candidates on the democratic ticket.

A. A. Smith received 953 votes in Clallam, 895 in Jefferson, and 512 in San Juan, these figures being on the incomplete returns in all three counties. Dr. F. S. Lewis received 686 in Clallam, 345 in Jefferson and 157 in San Juan. F. A. Jensen had 264 in Clallam, 277 in Jefferson and 163 in San Juan. R. M. Johnson had 340 in Clallam, 169 in San Juan. A. A. Smith will have better than 1200 plurality over his nearest opponent, Dr. Lewis.

Over twelve hundred votes were cast in Port Angeles, which is considered exceptionally heavy in view of the inclement weather. Taking the assessor as a fair basis, there being little contest between the republican and democratic candidates and the socialist candidate being not only a leading member of the party but a former Angeles business man, well known and well liked thruout the county, the vote would seem to indicate that the socialist party has not made any great gain in the past two years. In the city only Mr. Prickett received 622 votes, Mr. Gould 406 and Mr. Gray a total of 364, men and women, as against 545 polled by Mr. Johnson, socialist, for representative in 1912. Returns from Rena and Sol Duc were not in in 1912; Rena and Ozette are lacking this year.

THE VOTE FROM RENA

Returns from Rena, received this morning, cut Bishop's majority down to 43 and increased Rose's lead to 91. The wet and dry vote was not reported. Babcock received 18 votes, Gilmore 15, Bishop 14, Dustman 37, Shields 34, Wood 23, Hallahan 25, Cochran 11, Rose 39, Prickett 16, Gould 26, Remp 25, Gherke 12, Pierce 10, Dick 41, Adams 17, Clark 20, Lesure 20.

THE LOCAL PROHIBITIONISTS

Thirty-two votes were cast by local members of the Prohibitionist party for Caton, their candidate for U. S. Senator, and thirty-six for Murray as representative in Congress, most of those coming from the first and fourth wards in Port Angeles.

There isn't the slightest doubt Attorney Rose owes his election to the eleventh-hour attack made upon him by the Knocker. It is an easy matter to count up more than a hundred friends of Mr. Trumbull who asserted on election day their determination of voting for Rose as a rebuke to such rottenness in politics.

THE WEEKLY BULL —

Believing Lindsey and Redden, or at least Redden, to have been connected with the defamatory articles published in the Bee last week, and resenting what he took to be an insulting leer on the latter's face as he passed by on Wednesday, Attorney Rice made a quick turn, struck Redden behind the ear, felling him to the walk. It is also said that Rice called Redden several names, including wife beater, as he was attempting to arise, when he struck him a second time. Bystanders then interfered, Redden fainting, it is said, as he was helped up, and Dr. Davis of the Bee was sent for to look after his injuries. A complaint of assault and battery has been filed against Rice.

STATE DRY BY 15,000

Colorado, Oregon and Arizona Also Dry; Prohibitionists Hopeful in California

Of the six states that voted on prohibition Tuesday, Washington, Oregon, Colorado and Arizona are dry; Ohio is wet; California is claimed by both sides, with the indications favorable to the saloons. Oregon cast an overwhelming vote in favor of the amendment, a majority of 25,000 being claimed. Colorado is dry by 15,000.

The drys having carried the day in this state, the question now arises as to when the amendment will take effect, some claiming within thirty days as provided by the constitution and others holding a year must elapse as provided in the bill itself. While the supreme court will doubtless be called upon to decide, it is not believed the drys will endeavor to enforce the thirty-day limit, the people as a whole being willing to give the liquor business ample time in which to wind up its affairs and seek other employment.

JEFFERSON WENT WET

Port Townsend reports Jefferson county wet by 280, which was to have been expected. It is only the live town that dare take a chance on the elimination of the license income.

CONVICT ROAD AND EIGHT HOUR LAWS DEFEATED

All of the proposed laws and amendments were defeated with the exception of the prohibition amendment and the measure doing away with employment agencies. An overwhelming vote was returned against the eight hour law and the convict road bill.

It is estimated that there will be a majority of 15,000 against the eight hour law in the state. Port Angeles voted 694 against and 495 in favor of the proposed measure, a majority of 199.

MONTANA AND NEVADA GIVE WOMEN THE BALLOT

Women suffrage enthusiasts thruout the Union are rejoicing over the victory of their cause in Montana and Nevada, where heroic efforts were made to win the ballot. Nebraska is still claimed by the women, the vote being so close it will probably be in doubt for several days. Ohio, Wisconsin and North and South Dakota returned majorities against women suffrage.

A HANDSOME ENDORSEMENT

Evidently the voters did not take very much stock in the calamity howling of Peters and Adams as voiced in the Knocker. Jim Dick's majority of 217 over Adams and Clark's vote of 1378, one of the highest on the ticket, are about as substantial endorsements as the republicans could ask for.

REPUBLICANS MAKE GAINS

Senate and House Remain Democratic but Republicans Gain 70 Members in the Latter.

Indications are that the democratic party will have 228 members in the new congress, republicans 194, progressives 7, and socialists 1. The senate will consist of 55 democrats, 40 republicans and 1 progressive. The republicans gained 70 members in the house.

W. L. Jones was re-elected U. S. Senator, Lin Hadley of Bellingham, elected Congressman to represent this, the second district. Johnson of Hoquiam and La Follette of Pullman were re-elected, while C. C. Dill, a Democrat of Spokane, was chosen for the new Fifth district. Dill is said to be the third democrat ever sent to Congress from Washington. Ole Hanson, progressive candidate for the senate, ran about 7,000 votes behind Black, democrat.

Justices Chadwick and Crow were re-elected and Judge Holcomb of Ritzville, chosen as the third member of the supreme bench.

Republicans governors were elected in Iowa, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Vermont and Wisconsin; democratic governors in Alabama, Arizona, Georgia, Idaho, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Michigan, Nebraska, Oklahoma, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee and Texas.

Uncle Joe Cannon has been re-elected to Congress, as also has Boies Penrose of Pennsylvania. Albert Cummins was elected senator from Iowa, Wm. J. Stone from Missouri, Francis McGovern from Wisconsin, Victor Murdock from Kansas, Oscar Underwood from Alabama, Chas. Whitman from New York, and David I. Walsh from Massachusetts.

Senator Sherman was re-elected in Illinois, the state going republican by 15,000. Indiana went democratic, the entire state ticket being elected. Senator Cummins was re-elected in Iowa. Montana has re-elected democratic congressmen, while in Nebraska three democratic and three republican congressmen were chosen.

REGULAR MEETING COMMERCIAL CLUB

Secretary Teck's Report Shows a Very Satisfactory Increase in Membership.

Regular monthly meeting of the Port Angeles Commercial Club, November 2, 1914. Present President Craig, Vice-President Aldwell and about forty other members.

Minutes of the regular meeting of October 5, 1914, were read and approved.

A letter from State Horticultural Commissioner T. O. Morrison, expressing gratification over the appreciation of the club for the service of Horticultural Inspector F. N. Rhodes, as judge of the Clallam county fair, was read and ordered filed.

Secretary's Report for October

The secretary read his report of the work done by the club and the secretary's office during the month of October, including the reading of names of sixteen new active and nine new non-resident members, as follows: Active—E. J. Burrough, J. H. Dalton, (Chicago, Ill.), W. Delbar, J. Frank Dilling, S. M. Earling, (Chicago, Ill.), Millard Harrison, Jr., Charles I. Haswell, Charles C. Henry, G. W. Jeffrey, J. M. Kanall, Dr. F. S. Lewis, Chris. Morgenroth, W. D. McMahan, J. D. O'Connor, A. A. Patterson, O. A. Pettit. Non-resident—J. A. Adams, Sequim, Wash., Ole Boe, Royal, Wash., E. E. Beaumont, Box 425, Port Angeles, M. E. Howard, Forks, Mash., Guy Lesure, Clallam Bay, Wash., Donald McInnes, Dungeness, Wash., Herbert B. Smith, Forks, Wash., Charles D. Sult, Forks, Wash., Fred Sutter, Box 1332, Port Angeles.

Relief for Mrs. Shaw and Children

Chairman Ritchie, of the committee on City and County Affairs reported that his committee had appeared before the county commissioners in behalf of Mrs. Shaw and four small children left destitute by the husband and father. The committee had been supplied with a fully explanatory letter addressed to the club by Milliard Harrison, Jr., which letter was returned attached to this report. The commissioners assured the committee that adequate relief for Mrs. Shaw and children would at once be furnished by the county. Ordered filed.

Clallam County Fair Report

A comprehensive, complete and gratifying final report of the Clallam County Fair and Industrial Exhibit of October 16 and 17, 1914, was presented by the Executive Committee in charge of the fair, E. J. Walton, chairman, Thos. T. Aldwell and H. Maurice Fisher, and was read by the secretary and placed on file. The financial report attached shows total receipts from all sources aggregating $567.70, total expenditures $283.52, leaving a net surplus of 284.18.

Resolution Re Lots 16-17, Block 32

The resolutions committee reported having prepared and delivered to the secretary for transmission to Senator Jones and Representative Johnson a resolution faithfully covering the attitude of the club in support of the claim of the U. S. Forest Service for lots 16 and 17, block 32, Port Angeles, in accordance with the action of the club at its regular meeting on October 5, 1914. Ordered filed.

Dr. F. S. Lewis, who was present and represented the interests of Mr. Taylor, who claims a squatter's right to purchase one of the two lots involved, addressed the club in support of the local claimants to the affected property, reviewing in a general way the history of the reservations of Port Angeles townsite. He also submitted a copy of Senator Jones' reply to the resolution forwarded to him by the secretary of this club, which was read by the secretary. He declared that the law of 1892 was intended expressly to make the lots in block 32 available by purchase to the then claimants.

Chairman Aldwell of the Resolutions committee explained the need of the forest service for the lots to accommodate headquarters for probable extensive development operations in the projected building of roads in the Olympic Forest as well as in adjacent country, this having been clearly outlined by Chief Forester Henry S. Graves in his speech at the banquet in the Olympic Hotel on October 3, 1914. Mr. Graves planned to go before Congress asking for an enabling act thru which the sale of timber on the Olympic Forest may be anticipated in the form of bonds, based upon estimates of the merchantable standing timber prepared by the forest service, thus providing a fund of from $250,000 to $500,000, to be used by the forest service in building wagon roads not only within the National Forest but also in the adjoining undeveloped country. Mr. Aldwell stated that he had been informed that Mr. Taylor would accept $100 as compensation for his claim to one of the lots selected by the forest service, and the speaker offered to subscribe $25 toward such settlement.

The subject was quite fully discussed by W. B. Ritchie, President Craig, Lewis Levy, Chris Morgenroth and Dr. Lewis, but no further action was taken, the subject being left in the hands of the special committee appointed October 5, to confer with the claimants, the committee consisting of T. T. Aldwell, chairman, W. J. Ware, Lewis Levy, W. B. Ritchie and Frank P. Fisher.

Amendments to By-Laws

The following amendment to the By-laws, proposed October 5, was adopted: Section 10, Standing Committees, is amended by adding the words, "Legislative Committee, 7 Members." The following amendment to the By-laws, proposed October 26, was adopted: Section 1, Membership, is amended by adding, after the third paragraph of said Section 1, the following: "Non-resident Property Owners of Port Angeles May Become Members Upon Payment of An Annual Fee of $10, Payable in Advance."

NEWS FROM THE CAPITOL

Olympia, Nov. 4 — Indebtedness statistics of the political subdivisions of Washington tend to substantiate the claim of Governor Ernest Lister that public debts are one chief cause of high taxes.

Indebtedness of more than $95,000,000 is shown by the public records. Annual interest payments on this debt amount to between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000, an amount easily equal to one-seventh of all taxes levied in this state this year. The total interest payments amount to 7 per cent of the total state tax this year.

Of the total indebtedness cities and towns are responsible for approximately $37,500,000 for general purposes and $25,000,000 for local improvement districts, counties for $11,000,000 and school districts for $18,000,000. Port, drainage and commercial waterway district indebtedness, together with a small state indebtedness, go to make the total of $95,173,619.08.

Estimating the state population at 1,250,000, the public debt amounts to $76 per capita.

A vastly bettered condition of state finances is indicated by the monthly report of the state treasurer, which shows a balance of $610,911.85 in the general fund November 1. One year ago the general fund was overdrawn $451,997.51.

The balances of all state funds November 1, 1914, totalled $3,178,437.59, as compared with $1,779,499.56 November 1, 1913.

Whether the shrubbery producing districts of Belgium are under Belgian or German control seems to make little difference in the filling of American orders taken last year before the war broke out according to shipment notices of foreign importations from the war zone, received at the state department of agriculture. Shipments showing a date of entry from the vicinity of Lille, are dated at New York at late as October 12, and several arrived during the latter part of September.

New state banks are rapidly being organized and chartered under the law providing that all private banks must come under state supervision by January 1, 1915, or go out of business. Twenty more private banks must come under the state law or go out of business, Examiner W. E. Hansen states.

The state land board, at meetings this week, laid preliminary plans for the exchange of state school lands, at present tied up within the national forests, for approximately 600,000 acres of lands which the Federal Government will take from the forests and deed to the state. It is proposed to make a joint commission which first will inspect and appraise the state holdings and then will select government lands near the edges of the national forests, of equal area and amount.

The industrial welfare commission plans two more minimum wage conferences for the near future, one for female office employes and one for hotel and restaurant help.

A San Francisco paper announces the election of T. O. Morrison, assistant state commissioner of agriculture, as vice-president of the West Coast Potato Producers association. The object of the association is to unite potato growers and handlers in uniform methods of fumigation and shipping.

At the National Apple Show in Spokane, November 21-26, horticulturists of the state will hold a conference to talk over proposed new laws. The state department of agriculture will be represented by T. O. Morrison, head of the horticultural division, who will explain the contemplated recommendations of the department to the legislature.

BRITISH SQUADRON DEFEATED OFF CHILE

The British cruiser Monmouth was sunk off Coronel, Chili, Monday, by the German warships Gneisenau, Scharnhorst, Nurnberg, Leipzeig and Dresden, while the cruiser Goodhope was badly damaged and being on fire was supposed to have been lost. The cruiser Glasgow took refuge in the harbor of Coronel and is bottled up. The action lasted nearly an hour, being discontinued at nightfall; it is supposed the Otranto escaped in the darkness. The Germans suffered little damage, their gun range being considerably greater than that of the English.

Declare War On Colds

A crusade of education which aims "that common colds may become uncommon within the next generation" has been begun by prominent New York physicians. Here is a list of the "don'ts" which the doctors say will prevent the annual visitation of the cold:

"Don't sit in a draughty car."
"Don't sleep in hot rooms."
"Don't avoid the fresh air."
"Don't stuff yourself at meal time. Overeating reduces your resistance."

To which we would add—when you take a cold get rid of it as quickly as possible. To accomplish that you will find Chamberlain's Cough Remedy most excellent. Sold by all dealers.

TUBERCULOSIS DAY, NOVEMBER 29TH

Activity of all friends of the movement to exterminate tuberculosis has been roused by the announcement that the annual convention of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis will be held in Seattle, June 14th, 15th, and 16th, 1915.

Local leaders are confident that this convention will be the most notable in the history of the battle in America. Correspondence and telegrams from all parts of the country indicate that some of the foremost men and women, who have given their hearts and their purses to this cause, will be in attendance. Plans are being formulated for a large local attendance, not only from Washington, but from the Pacific Northwest.

Arrangements for the observance of Tuberculosis Day, November 29th, by the churches of the state, by the schools, and by organizations interested in helping raise the health standards of their communities are now being made by the Washington Association for the Prevention and Relief of Tuberculosis. This event is of double importance this year, as proceeds the Red Cross Seal sale thru which the tuberculosis work in this state is largely financed. Any information concerning the national meeting, Tuberculosis Day, or the Red Cross Seal sale will be gladly furnished by theWashington Association for the Prevention and Relief of Tuberculosis, 916 Cobb Building, Seattle.

CLUB NEWS AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

The P. A. Reading Club met last Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. L. M. Campbell and were pleased to welcome at their meeting a number of our local candidates for office who talks. The speakers were: Messrs. Gilmore, Rose, Pierce, Severyns and Campbell. Now that the political questions are settled for the present, the ladies will turn their attention to other channels of thought and Nature Study will be taken up at the next meeting at the home of Mrs. Jessie Webster, November 13th.

The regular monthly meeting of the Women's Auxiliary to the P. A. Commercial Club will be held next Tuesday afternoon, November 10, at 2:30 in the Commercial Club room on Front street. A cordial invitation is extended to all the wives of the members of the Commercial club and all other women in the city interested in any of the phases of civic work we are doing.

Mrs. Wm. Brumfield was hostess to the Fortnightly Bridge Club on Tuesday afternoon, the usual pleasant time being enjoyed by all.

Mrs. Julius Kirschberg was hostess last Friday afternoon to the Silent Thimble Club.

STUDENTS AT THE U.

By Miss Lucy Bonker.

Miss Cecil Smith is pursuing her newspaper work in studies in the department of journalism at the state university.

Ross McKechnie, renowned in high school athletics, did some fine line plunging in the Washington-Whitman game, making several runs, and receiving praise in the sport columns of the university daily.

Helen and Genevieve Hatch, daughters of former Judge Hatch, are freshmen in the course in music in the division of fine arts.

Grace Babcock is completing her work in the domestic science department and expects to receive her bachelor's degree in June.

As a recognition of his scholarship in the department of journalism, Clark Squire, who was on the staff of the Olympic-Leader last summer, has been elected to Sigma Delta Chi, the national honorary journalistic fraternity.

Paul and Jack Carrigan, sons of a former well-known resident of Port Angeles, are attending the university. Jack is studying journalism preparatory for law. Paul is completing the fifth year in the school of law.

BAPTIST CHURCH

The church will have services next Sunday in its new building at the corner of Seventh and Peabody, as follows: 10 a. m., Sunday School. 11 a. m., Preaching. 7:30 p. m., Preaching. The subject for the morning sermon will be "Society Salt." Evening, "Religion Made Easy." A welcome awaits you at these services. Last Sunday evening the church joined in a union temperance meeting with the Congregational and Methodist congregations at the M. E. Church.

The Three-link Dancing Club was organized at I. O. O. F. Hall Wednesday evening. Only Odd Fellows and Rebekah's are eligible to membership. About fifty members were enrolled. The following officers were elected: President, O. D. Burgman; Vice-President, Mrs. J. O. Johnson; Secretary, F. H. Cooper; Treasurer, Myrtle Cooper.

ABOUT THE COUNTY

MT. PLEASANT.

Mr. Joseph Krajewski left Wednesday for eastern Washington to visit relatives.

Mrs. Lucas and children moved to Angeles for the winter on Tuesday.

Mr. Patterson returned home Tuesday morning from his trip to Tacoma.

Mrs. Harry Fredericks and little son arrived home Tuesday to visit at the home of her brother, Mr. Watts.

Mrs. Copoto and son, Willie Boyd, visited in Angeles Saturday and Sunday.

Tony Krajewski has been very sick for several days with tonsilitis.

Mrs. McLaughlin and Mrs. Eacrett and daughter returned Sunday from a very pleasant trip to Sequim and Dungeness.

Mr. Barber, Sr., who has been very poorly for some time, passed away Friday and was laid to rest in Mt. Pleasant cemetary Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. Harris and son visited with her mother a few days, returning home Sunday.

Miss Florence Culbertson spent a few days in Angeles the past week.

Miss Cora Stevens, who has been visiting in Quilcene the past week, returned home Friday.

Mrs. A. L. Byers visited with her daughter, Mrs. Henry Boyd, Thursday and Friday.

Mrs. Chester Tracy visited with Mrs. Hall for a few days returning home Sunday.

LINCOLN HEIGHTS

Two words were omitted in the first line of last week's items which made the remark sound silly. It should have read "Who says it rains EVERY DAY in Angeles." We had ten days without any rain but a goodly amount since.

Mrs. James Higgins has gone to Chimicum to join her husband who has secured work at Mr. Ed. Nailor's.

Mrs. Ishmael Filion and daughter Annie have returned after several months absence visiting eastern friends.

Mrs. John McLeod and daughter Lilly will not return for some time.

Mrs. Muriel Tracy and son were out at Mt. Pleasant from Friday until Sunday visiting at her aunts, Mrs. Hall.

Mr. and Mrs. Harmon Mathews spent Monday evening at E. B. Fleming's.

One of the Sturgis boys is very ill with heart trouble.

It is reported that Mr. Mathews will open a shoe repair shop on the corner of C and Ninth streets, and we hope it is true. Such a shop is needed and those who have had work done by that gentleman knows he understands the business.

Have just heard that this town redeemed itself by voting dry. Are the women responsible?

The Hopf girls and boys entertained at their home on 7th, between B and C streets, last Friday night and friends at a Halloween party. They played games, had music and served a nice luncheon. The house and tables were decorated with black and yellow Jack o' lanterns and all the paraphernalia that goes with a Halloween party. The guests are loud in their praises of the Hopfs as entertainers.

DE FUCA

(Happenings of last week)

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Reeve returned home Monday after an absence of a week. Mr Reeve has a crew of men with him baling hay at various farms him.

Mrs. Willis Chambers, Miss Esther Chambers and Mrs. Ed. Pellerin of Fairview were visitors at the Wooding home Tuesday afternoon.

James and Willie Wooding are home again after being away working for a couple of weeks

Miss Minnie Laurens has gone to Angeles to spend a few days visiting friends.

Mr. N. Heuhslein, Jr., made a business trip to Sequim Saturday.

(This week's news)

There are new tennants on the Troy place again. The Thorpe boys, who for some time have been living at McDonald Creek, have moved up. Their parents and sister expect to move out soon from Angeles to live with them.

The Hallow'een party which Master Carl Laurens intended to give had to be postponed as his mother Mrs. F. Laurens, was taken ill suddenly. She is somewhat better at the present writing.

Mr. J. A. Reeve went to Seattle the first of the week on business.

The camp at Seibert creek is still busy at work on the railroad bridge and expects to remain there until Thanksgiving.

A complete stock of GOODYEAR TIRES on hand at all times. Adjustments gladly made on all GOODYEAR TIRES. Fred C. Farmer, EXCLUSIVE AGENT.

Electric wiring, "Hot Point" appliances, Hughes Electric ranges and lamps, at Electrical headquarters. C. Winfield Harris & Co. Opposite the Dream Theatre.

A Night of Terror

Few nights are more terrible than that of a mother looking on her child choking and gasping for breath during an attack of croup, and nothing in the house to relieve it. Many mothers have passed nights of terror in this situation. A little forethought will enable you to avoid all this. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a certain cure for croup and has never been known to fail. Keep it at hand. For sale by all dealers.

Are You One of the Women Who Pays By Check?

A woman's checking account in a strong bank combines prestige with conveniences—safety with system. To "Pay by Check" is the businesslike way of keeping receipts for the household expenses, because the butcher, grocer, milk man, or baker cannot dispute their own endorsement on the back of a check.

The employees of the Port Angeles Trust & Savings Bank will be glad to explain the simplicity of opening a checking account, large or small. No woman need be afraid to come here and ask questions.

These well known names of our directorate will, perhaps, give a woman greater confidence to open an account and pay by check.

They are still busy with the searchlights over at Victoria, quite an aerial display every evening.

Smith & Pollow, at the corner of Lincoln and 14th streets, are entering into the taxidermist business.

Mr. G. L. Erickson, son of Mr. Erickson, the contractor, left for Seattle the early part of the week.

Mr. J. Kirschberg was in Seattle the first of the week, selecting more merchandise for his beautiful store.

Mr. Lew Thompson is altering the second story of his building on Laurel street. Suitable for a lodging house.

Talking about a railroad, the Milwaukee has some record, not a single death by accident in the past year—some record I am thinking.

Mr. Rice and Mr. Redden came to blows last Wednesday on Front street and from the outlook, Mr. Redden must have got popped on the bean, as he had to be carried up to his offices. The fight caused quite a sensation along with the election returns.

Two log cars rolled down the embankment, the other side of the Elwha Thursday, as they were being brought in to Angeles. A projecting log hit the bank on making a curve, knocking two of the cars over. No one was injured and traffic was delayed for a short time.

A. C. Albright, taxidermist at the state university, arrived in Angeles Tuesday. Mr. Albright expects to spend a couple of weeks out in the Olympics, getting together a bunch of specimens. He is after about 5 elk, bears, cougars and anything else that gets in his road. Previous to coming here, Mr. Albright was thru Alaska, gathering different specimens of animals for the state.

"A MILK SHAKE"

While making a turn on the hill the other side of Bennett's, or back of Walton's lumber yard, the P. A. Dairy wagon overturned, causing quite a sized milk river to flow down the hill. As the wagon turned over, the driver popped out of the opposite door and yelled "whoa" at the horse, but the poor horse could not move, as he was tangled up in the harness.

CITY AND PERSONAL

"A most successful and charming affair in every way," was the verdict of all those who attended the Maccabee Ball at the Opera House last Saturday evening. The crowd was unusually large and in the gayest of spirits and the music was excellent. The hall was particularly attractive in its Halloween garb, the decorations of yellow and black being very effective and pretty. Paper mache jack o' lanterns were strung across the hall from corner to corner, and conspicuously displayed on the stage was the Maccabee flag, side by side with the stars and stripes. So many pretty ladies in dainty new evening gowns added considerably to the brilliancy of the scene. Both financially and socially the party surpassed any the Maccabees have given in previous years.

Mrs. Ida May Blake, a very well known and popular woman of Dungeness, died at the hotel in Sequim of apoplexy while there attending an entertainment. Thefuneral was held from the Methodist church at Dungeness Wednesday morning and was very largely attended by scores of mourning friends. The floral offerings were exceptional beautiful and profuse.

Edw. Green of Sequim died of heart trouble at St. John's Hospital, Port Townsend Monday, at the age of 36. He had been a sufferer for years. W. G. Green, his father and Mrs. Sanford T. Lake, a sister of Port Townsend, are his surviving relatives. Mr. Green was a member of Port Angeles Masonic Lodge, a number of his brother members attending the funeral.

The Ladies of the Congregational Church will hold a sale of useful and fancy articles for holiday gifts at the church Thursday, November 19, from two until ten p. m. Supper will be served from five to seven for 35cents. A short program will be given in the evening, commencing at 8 o'clock.

CHAPTER XV.

The Masked Voice.

For a matter of twelve hours the fog, leaden, dank, viscous, as inexorable as the dominion of evil, had wrapped the world in an embrace as foul and noxious as the coils of some great, gray, slimy serpent.

Through its sluggish folds the ponderous, power-impelled lifeboat crept at a snail's pace, its stem parting and rolling back from either flank a heavy-hearted sea of gray.

In the bows a young woman rested in a state of semi-exhaustion, her eyes closed, he head pillowed on a cork-belt life-preserver, her sodden garments modeled closely to the slender body that was ever and again shaken from head to feet with the strength of a long, shuddering respiration.

Seated on the nearest thwart, Alan Law, chin in hand, watched over the rest of this woman whom he loved with a grimly hopeless solicitude. He was in no happier case than she, so far as physical comfort went—he was in worse, since he might not rest.

Premonition of misfortune darkened his heart with its impenetrable shadow.

In the stern Tom Barcus presided morosely over the steering gear; and Law was no more jealously heedful of his sweetheart than Barcus of the heavy-duty motor that chugged away so purposefully at its business of driving the boat heaven-knew-where.

Lacking at once a compass, all notion whatsoever of the sun's bearings, and any immediate hope of the fog lifting or chance bringing them either to land or to rescue by some larger and less comfortless craft, Barcus steered mainly through force of habit—the salt-water man's instinctive feeling that no boat under way should ever in any conceivable circumstance be without a hand at the helm. It had seemed impossible that it could long escape repetition of the disaster, but somehow, it always did escape, and that by a wide margin; never once had it passed near enough to another vessel to see it.

And now for more than an hour the silence had been uncannily constant, broken only by the rumble of the motor, the muted lisp of water slipping down the side, the suck and gurgle of the wake.

Forebodings no less portentous than Law's crawled in the mind of Barcus. It was as likely as not that the lifeboat was traveling straight out to sea. And gasoline tanks can and oftentimes do become as empty as an official weather prophet's promise of fair weather for a holiday.

More than this, Mr. Barcus was a confirmed skeptic in respect of marine motors; on terms of long and intimate experience with the ways of the demon of perversity that tenants them one and all, he knew that the present sweet-tempered performance of the exhibit under consideration was no earnest whatsoever of future good behavior, that when such a complicated contraption was concerned there was never any telling . . .

In view of all of which considerations he presently threw open the battery switch.

And the aching void created in the silence by the cessation of that uniform drone was startling enough to rouse even Rose Trine from her state of semi-somnolence.

With a look of panic she sat up, thrust damp hair back from her eyes, and nervously inquired:

"What's the matter?"

"Nothing," Barcus told her. "I shut the engine off—that's all."

Tempers were short in that hour, and Alan was annoyed to think that the rest of his beloved should needlessly have been disturbed.

"What did you do that for?" he demanded sharply.

"Because I jolly well wanted to," Barcus returned in a tone as brusque.

"Oh, you did—eh?"

"Yes, I did—eh! I happen to be bossing this end of the boat and to have sense enough to realize there's no sense at all in our wasting fuel the way we are—cruising nowhere!"

"Well," Law contended, struck by the fairness of this argument, but unable to calm his uneasiness—"just the same, we might—"

"Yes; of course, we might," Barcus snapped. "We might a whole lot. We might, for instance, be heading for Spain, for all you or I know to the contrary. And in such case, I for one respectfully prefer to have gas enough to take us home again if ever this da—blessed fog lifts!"

And for several seconds longer the stillness strangled their spirits in its ruthless grasp.

Then of a sudden a cry shrilled through the fog, so near at hand that it seemed scarcely more distant than over the side:

"Ahoy! Help! Ahoy there! Help!"

So insistent, so urgent was its accent that, coupled with the surprise, it brought the three as one to their feet, all a-tremble, their eyes seeking one another's faces, then shifting uneasily away.

"What can it be?" Rose whispered, aghast, shrinking into Alan's ready arm.

"A woman," Barcus put in harshly.

"Judith," the girl moaned.

Alan shook himself together. "Impossible!" he contended. "I saw her go down . . ."

"That doesn't prove she didn't come up," Barcus commented acidly.

"Ahoy! Motorboat aho-o-oy! Help!"

"And that," Barcus pursued sadly, "just proves she did come up—blame the luck! Alive she is, and kicking; stand clear. An able-bodied pair of lungs was back of that hail, my friend; and you needn't tell me I don't know the dulcet accents of that angelic contralto!"

Without heeding him, Alan cupped hands to mouth and sent an answering cry ringing through the murk:

"Ahoy! Where are you? Where away?"

"Here—on the reef—half-drowned—perishing with chill—"

"How does my voice bear?" Alan called back.

"What the dickens do you care?" Barcus interpolated suspiciuosly.

"To port," the response rang through the fog. "Starboard your helm and come in slowly!"

"Right-o! Half a minute!" Alan replied reassuringly.

"Like hell!" Mr. Barcus muttered in his throat as he jumped down into the engine pit and bent over the fly-wheel.

Leaping on the forward thwart and balancing himself perilously near the gunwale, Alan strained his vision vainly against the opacity of the fog.

"Can't make out anything," he grumbled, looking back. "Start her up—but slow's the word—and 'ware reef!"

"Nothing doing," Barcus retorted curtly. "The motto is now 'Full speed astern!' as you must know."

"O come! We can't leave a woman out there—in a fix like that!"

"Can't we? You watch!" Barcus grunted malevolently, rocking the heavy flywheel with all his might; for the motor had turned suddenly stubborn.

"Alan!" Rose pleaded, laying a hand upon his sleeve. "Think what it means! I know it sounds heartless of me—and it's my own sister. But you know how mad she is—wild with hatred and jealousy. If you take her into this boat, it's your life or hers!"

"If we leave her out there," Alan retorted, shaking his arm impatiently free, "it's her life on our heads!"

At this juncture the motor took charge of the argument, ending it in summary fashion. With a smart explosion in the cylinder, it started up unexpectedly, at one and the same time almost dislocating the arm of Mr. Barcus and precipitating Alan overboard.

It was not given him to know what was happening until he found himself in the water; he struggled to the surface just in time to see the bows of the lifeboat back away and vanish into the mist.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Island.

Not more than twenty seconds could have elapsed before Barcus recovered from the shock of the motor's treachery sufficiently to reverse the wheel, throttle down the carburetor and jump out of the engine-pit.

But in that small space of time the lifeboat and Alan Law had parted company as definitely as though one of them had been levitated bodily to the far side of the earth.

It could not have been more than a minute after the accident before Barcus was guiding the boat over what, going on his sense of location and judgment of distance, he could have sworn was the precise spot where Alan had disappeared, but without discovering a sign of him.

And for the next twenty minutes he divided his attention between attempts to soothe and reassure the half-distracted girl and efforts to educe a reply from Alan by stentorian hailing—with as little success in the one as in the other.

"Alan!" he shrieked at the top of his lungs. "Alan! Give a hail to tell us you're safe!"

There was a little pause; he was racking his brains for some more moving mode of appeal when the answer came in another voice—in the voice of Judith Trine, clear, musical, effervescent with sardonic humor:

"Be at peace, little one—bleat no more! Mr. Law is with us—and safe—oh, quite, quite safe!"

In dumb consternation Barcus sought the countenance of Rose. Her eyes, meeting his, were blank with despair. He shook his head helplessly and let his hands dangle idly between his knees.

With no way on her, the lifeboat drifted with a current of unknown set and strength.

"What can we do?" Rose implored. "We must do something. We can't leave him . . . Oh, when I think of him there, in her hands, I could go mad!"

"If only I knew," Barcus protested; "but my hands are tied, my wits are as helpless as my eyes are blind. There's nothing to go by—except the bare possibility that the reef she spoke of may be Norton's. It doesn't seem possible, but we may have made that much southing. In that case we're about three miles off the mainland, somewhere in the neighborhood of Katama island, a little, rocky, desolate bump of earth, inhabited mainly by fishermen."

The girl wrung her hands. "But how could Judith get there—and with her men—and ammunition?"

"Don't ask me. Going on my experience with the lady, I'd be willing to bet that she was picked up by the steamer that ran us down, and proceeded to make a prize of it—or try to. One thing's certain—she must have found or stolen a boat from somebody; they couldn't have made Norton's reef by swimming—it's too far. That's the answer; they were picked up, stole a boat, and piled it up on the reef."

Yanked Him Off to His Cell.

"And there's no hope—!"

"Only of the fog relenting. If we could make the mainland and get help . . ."

His accents died away into a disconsolate silence that was unbroken for upwards of an hour.

So slowly the current bore the lifeboat toward the beach and so still the tide that Barcus never appreciated they were within touch of any land until the bows grounded with a slight jar and a grating sound.

With a cry of incredulity he leaped to his feet—"Land, by all that's lucky!"—and stooping, lent a hand to the girl, aiding her to rise.

Hardly had Rose had time to comprehend what had happened, when Barcus was over the side and wrestling with the bows, dragging the boat farther upon the shoals.

She was, however, more than one man could manage; and when her stem had bitten a little more deeply into the sands, Barcus gave over the attempt and, lifting Rose down, set her on dry land, then climbed back into the vessel, rummaged out her anchor and cable, and carried them ashore, planting the former well up towards the foot of the cliff.

And as he rose from this last labor he was half blinded by the glare of the westering sun as it broke through the fog.

In less than five minutes the miraculous commonplace was an accomplished fact; the wind had rolled the fog back like a scroll and sent it spinning far out to sea, while the shore on which the two had landed was deluged with sunlight, bright and beautifully warm.

He showed a thoughtful and considerate countenance to the girl.

"You're about all in?"

She nodded confirmation of this, which was no more than simple truth. "Where are we?" she added.

He made her party to his own perplexity.

"You're not able to travel," he pursued. "Do you mind being left alone while I take a turn up the beach and have a look round? We can't be far from some sort of civilization; even if it's an island there are no desert isles along this coast. I'll find something soon enough, no fear."

By tacit consent both avoided mention of Alan, but each knew what thought was uppermost in the other's mind.

"There's a niche among the rocks up here," Barcus indicated, "almost a cave. You'll be warm and dry enough, and secure from observation overhead. Maybe you can even snatch a few winks of sleep. . . ."

She negatived that suggestion with a weary smile; no sleep for her until sheer exhaustion overpowered her, or she knew of Alan's fate.

And so, reiterating his promise to be gone no longer than absolutely might be needful, he left her there.

CHAPTER XVII.

This Mortal Tide.

She was very certain she would never sleep before her anxiety was assuaged by word of Alan's fate; but she reckoned without her host of trials that had bred in her a fatigue anodynous even to her mental anguish.

For a time after Barcus had left her she lingered upon the sands, in the mouth of the shelter he had selected for her, staring hungrily out on the shimmering sea that, now wholly divested of its shroud, smiled up to the heavens, whose sapphire face it mirrored, as fair and sweet of seeming as though it had never veiled a heartless tragedy.

Slowly it darkened as the sapphire above grew darker, blending insensibly into rare ultramarine with the slow decline of the sun, by whose altitude above the horizon the day had not more than ninety minutes to run.

And she thought drowsily that if that sun sank without her learning that her lover lived, it would not rise again upon a world tenanted by Rose Trine.

It was not true, she told herself, that people never die of broken hearts.

She knew that, were he taken from her, she could no longer live. . . .

And sleep overwhelmed her suddenly, like a great, dark cloud . . .

But its dominion over her faculties was not of long duration. Slowly, heavily, mutinously, she was rescued from its nirvana—came to her senses with an effect of one who emerges from some vast place of blackness and terror, to find Barcus kneeling over and gingerly but persistently shaking her by the shoulder.

And then she sat up with a cry of mystified compassion; for in the brief time that he had been absent—it had not been more than an hour—Mr. Barcus had most unquestionably been severely used.

He had acquired a long cut over one eye, but shallow, upon which blood had dried, together with a bruised and swollen cheek that was badly scratched to boot. And what simple articles of clothing remained to him, after his strenuous experiences of the last forty-eight hours, had been reduced to even greater simplicity; his shirt, for example, now lacked a sleeve that had been altogether torn away at the shoulder.

"No!" he told her, as soon as he saw her wits were awake once more—"don't waste time pitying me. I'm all right—and so is Alan! That's the main thing for you to understand; he's still alive and sound—"

"But where is he? Take me to him!" she demanded, rising with a movement of such grace and vigor that it seemed hard to believe she had ever known an instant's weariness.

"That's the rub," Barcus confessed, squatting on the sands and knuckling his hair. "I daesent take you to him. Judith might object. Besides, you can see for yourself it isn't safe to mingle with the inhabitants of this tight little island—and you can't get to where Alan is without mingling considerably. Sit down, and I'll tell you all about it, and we'll try to figure out what's best to be done. Maybe we can manage a rescue under cover of night."

And when the girl had settled herself beside him he launched into a detailed report.

"It's Katama island, all right," he announced, "but a change has come over the place since I visited it some years ago. Then it was a community of simple-hearted villagers and fishermen; now, unless all signs fail, it's a den of smugglers. I noticed a number of Chinese about; and that, taken in connection with the fact that, when I ventured to introduce myself to the village ginmill and ask a few innocent questions, the entire population, to a child, landed on me like a thousand brick—the two circumstances made me think we'd stumbled on a settlement of earnest workers at the gentle art of helping poor Chinamen evade the exclusion laws."

With a wry smile, he pursued: "As for me, I landed out back of the joint, on the nape of my neck, and took the count, surrounded by a lot of unsympathetic boxes and barrels that had seen better days. And when I came to and started to crawl unostentatiously away, I was just in time to witness the landing of your amiable sister, that gang of cutthroats she keeps on the pay roll, and Alan in company with as choice a crew of scoundrels as you'd care to see. I gathered from a few words that leaked out of the back door of the barroom, that it was as I had thought—Judith had stolen a boat, from the ship that picked her up, and rammed it on Norton's reef; and after she gathered Alan in the schooner of these smugglers happened along, and she hailed it and struck a bargain with the captain and signed co-partnership articles, or something like that. Anyway, her lot and the islanders were soon as thick as thieves, and tanking up so sociably that I actually got a chance to whisper a word to Alan and tell him you were all right, and that he'd find us both down here on the beach, if luck served him with an escape. That was all I got a chance to say, for Judith marched up just then and yanked him off to his cell. I mean to say, he's locked up now in a little stone hut on the edge of the cliff, with the door guarded and the window overlooking a sheer drop of thirty feet or so to the beach. When I'd seen that much I calculated it was about time for me to get quit of that neighborhood, before Mam'selle Judith nicked me with the evil eye."

"You don't think she saw you?" the girl cried.

"I don't think so," Barcus allowed gravely; and then, lifting his gaze, he added as he rose in a bound: "I just know she did—that's all.

In another instant he was battling might and main with three willing ruffians, who had come suddenly into view round a shoulder of rock; but his efforts were shortlived, foredoomed to failure. He was weakened with suffering and fatigue—and the three were fresh and had the courage at least of their numbers. He was overborne in a twinkling, and had his face ground brutally into the sand while his hands were made fast with stout rope behind his back. And when he rose, it was to find, as he had anticipated, that Rose's resistance had been as futile as his own; she, too, was captive, her hands bound like his, the huge and unclean paw of one of Judith's crew cruelly clamped upon her shoulders.

They were granted time to exchange no more than one despairing glance when a curt laugh fairly chilled the blood in Mr. Barcus, and he swung sharply between his two guards to confront Judith Trine.

The woman he saw at first glance, was in one of her most dangerous moods—if, Barcus mentally qualified, there was a pin to choose between her moods. But now, beyond dispute, she exhibited a countenance new in his experience with her, and one well calculated to appall.

Her face was bloodless, even as her lips were white with the curb she put upon her passion. Her eyes were lurid with the glare of rage approaching mania. Her hands trembled, her lips quivered, all her actions were abrupt with nervousness.

He was by no means poor-spirited, but he shrank openly from the look she gave him, and was relieved when she, with a sneer, passed him by and planted herself squarely before her sister.

"Well?" she demanded brusquely. "How much longer do you think I'm going to tolerate your interference—you poor little fool! How many more lessons will you require before realizing that I mean to have my way, and that you'll cross me only to suffer for it?"

The courage of the other girl won the unstinted admiration of Mr. Barcus. Far from cringing, she seemed to find fresh heart in her sister's challenge. Her head was high, her glance level with illimitable contempt as she replied:

"So you've tried again?" she inquired obliquely, with a tone of pity. "You've offered him your love yet another time, have you?"

"Silence!" Judith cried in fury.

"Only to learn once more that he would rather death than you?" Rose persisted, unflinching. "And so you come to take your spite out on me, do you? You pitiful thing! Do you think I mind—knowing as I do now that he could never hold you in anything but compassion and contempt?"

For an instant there was silence; by the scorn of her sister the heat of Judith's fury had been transformed into a cold and malignant rage. She controlled herself and her voice marvelously.

"You will see," she said in even and frigid accents. And the light of her mania leaped and leaped again in her eyes like a living flame. "I have prepared a way to make you understand what opposition to me means . . ."

She waved a hand toward the nearer point of rocks. "Take them along," she commanded.

The understanding between her and her men was apparently complete; for these last, without hesitation or further instructions, marched Rose and Barcus down to the end of the spit and on, into the water.

It was nearly knee-deep before Barcus was halted with a savage jerk, backed up to a rock, forced despite his frenzied resistance to sit down in the water, and swiftly, with half a dozen deft hitches of rope and a stanch knot, made fast in that position—submerged to his chest.

This accomplished, the men turned attention to Rose, lashing her in similar wise at Barcus' side.

Standing just above the water-line, with every sign of complete calm and sanity other than that ominous flickering in her eyes, Judith superintended the business till its conclusion, then waved the men away.

Quietly, like well-trained servants, they turned their backs and marched off.

And again, after a brief wait, the woman laughed her short and mirthless laugh.

"The tide will be high," she said, "precisely at sunset. You may time your lives by that. When the sun dips into the sea, then will your lives go down with it."

She turned on her heel and strode swiftly away, with not so much as a backward glance, overtook her men, and passed quickly from sight around the farther point of rocks.

For some time Barcus struggled vainly with his bonds. As for Rose, she wasted no strength in struggling—perhaps had none to waste. When he looked her way he saw her exquisite profile unmarred by any line of fear or doubt, sharply relieved against the darkness of the rising flood. Her level gaze without a tremor traversed the shining flood to its far horizon.

He noted that already the waters had risen more than an inch.

Humbled even in his terror by that radiant calm that dwelt upon her, he ventured diffidently: "Rose — Miss Trine—"

She turned her head and found the heart to smile. "Rose," she corrected gently.

"I'm sorry," he said—which was not at all what he had meant to say, "I've done my best. I suppose it's wrong to give up—but they've made it too much for me, this time."

"I know," she said gently.

"You"—he stammered—"you're not afraid?"

"There is nothing to fear," she said, "but death. . . ."

"Then," he said more bravely, after a time—the water now was near his chin—"good-by—good luck!"

"Not yet, dear friend," she returned, "not yet."

But the sun was perilously close upon the rim of the world. But a little time, and it would be night.

He closed his eyes to shut out the vision of its slow, implacable descent.

The water was now almost level with his lips; it seemed strange that his throat could be so dry, so parched . . .

He opened his eyes, shuddering.

"It's good-by now," he faltered.

"Not yet!" her voice rang beside him, vibrant. "Look—up there—along the cliff!"

He lifted his gaze . . .

Two men were running along the cliff—and the man in the lead was Alan. But his lead was very scant, and the man who pursued was one of Judith's, and stuck to the trail like a blood-hound fresh from the leash.

And now the water was at his lips; Barcus could no more speak without strangling.

Of a sudden he groaned in his heart; though there was no passable way down the cliff, still the sight of his friend alive and unharmed had brought with it a thrill of hope; now that hope died as he saw Alan stumble and go to his knees.

Before he could rise the other was upon him, with the fury of a wolf seeking the throat of a stag.

For an instant they fought like madmen; then, in a trice, the sky line of the cliff was empty; one or the other had tripped and fallen over the brink, and falling had retained hold of his enemy and carried him down as well.

By no chance, Barcus told himself, could either escape uninjured.

Yet, to his amazement, he saw one man break from the other's embrace and rise. And he who lay still, a crumpled, inhuman heap upon the sands, was Judith's man.

With a violent effort Barcus lifted his mouth above water and shrieked:

"Alan! Alan! Help! Here—at the end of the point—in the water—help!"

A precious minute was lost before Alan discovered their two heads, so barely above that swiftly rising flood.

Then he ran toward them as he had never run before, and as he came whipped out a jack-knife and freed its blade.

Even so—since it was, of course, Rose whom Alan freed the first—Barcus was half-drowned before Alan helped him in turn up to the beach.

And as this happened the last blood-red rim of the sun was washed under by the waves.

Two minutes later the lifeboat was afloat, and Mr. Barcus, already recovered, was laboring with the flywheel of the motor, stimulated to supreme exertion by the sight of a party, led by Judith, racing madly down the beach.

But it was not until well out from shore and on the way to the safety promised by the mainland—now readily discernible on the horizon—that any one of them found time for speech.

Then Mr. Barcus straightened up from his assiduous attentions to the motor, and observed:

"You bear a charmed life, my adventurous friend. I want to tell you that when I saw you go over that cliff I made up my mind your usefulness would be at least permanently impaired. As it is, I don't mind telling you that if ever I get out of this affair alive, I'm going to have a try at your life myself, just once, for luck!"

When you keep a boy interested in football, baseball, tennis, and the like, you lessen the chances that he will get interested in things not so good for him.

The Youth's Companion, since its enlargement, gives generous space to this matter of athletic training, and gets the best coaches in the country to write for it.

How to practice to become a first-rate pitcher, how to train for a race, how to learn the newest strokes in swimming—these and a hundred other topics of the greatest interest to boys—to girls, too for that matter are touched upon in this important department of The Companion.

And this is only a small part of the service which The Companion renders in any home which it enters. It has points of contact with a hundred interests.

If you do not know The Companion as it is today, let us send you one or two current issues free, that you may thoroughly test the paper's quality. We will send also the Forecast for 1915.

SMITH AND BABCOCK WIN

Cosser, Rose and Severyns the Only Democratic Candidates to Be Elected

The close contest between Bishop and Dustman for sheriff and Cochran and Rose for attorney, coupled with the unwarranted and unprincipled eleventh hour attacks made upon the latter by the Knocker, were the principal features of interest, locally, in election day.

With Rena and Ozette still to be reported Bishop has a lead of 66 over Dustman, and Rose 63 over Cochran. Cosser, as usual proved to be the most popular man in the county, his majority being 829, tho Wood was a close second with 853 to spare. Clark, another man against whom the knocker spared no abuse, received the endorsement of 1378 votes, a majority of 547. Andy Severyns shares with Cosser and Rose the honor of being the only successful candidates on the democratic ticket.

A. A. Smith received 953 votes in Clallam, 895 in Jefferson, and 512 in San Juan, these figures being on the incomplete returns in all three counties. Dr. F. S. Lewis received 686 in Clallam, 345 in Jefferson and 157 in San Juan. F. A. Jensen had 264 in Clallam, 277 in Jefferson and 163 in San Juan. R. M. Johnson had 340 in Clallam, 169 in San Juan. A. A. Smith will have better than 1200 plurality over his nearest opponent, Dr. Lewis.

Over twelve hundred votes were cast in Port Angeles, which is considered exceptionally heavy in view of the inclement weather. Taking the assessor as a fair basis, there being little contest between the republican and democratic candidates and the socialist candidate being not only a leading member of the party but a former Angeles business man, well known and well liked thruout the county, the vote would seem to indicate that the socialist party has not made any great gain in the past two years. In the city only Mr. Prickett received 622 votes, Mr. Gould 406 and Mr. Gray a total of 364, men and women, as against 545 polled by Mr. Johnson, socialist, for representative in 1912. Returns from Rena and Sol Duc were not in in 1912; Rena and Ozette are lacking this year.

THE VOTE FROM RENA

Returns from Rena, received this morning, cut Bishop's majority down to 43 and increased Rose's lead to 91. The wet and dry vote was not reported. Babcock received 18 votes, Gilmore 15, Bishop 14, Dustman 37, Shields 34, Wood 23, Hallahan 25, Cochran 11, Rose 39, Prickett 16, Gould 26, Remp 25, Gherke 12, Pierce 10, Dick 41, Adams 17, Clark 20, Lesure 20.

THE LOCAL PROHIBITIONISTS

Thirty-two votes were cast by local members of the Prohibitionist party for Caton, their candidate for U. S. Senator, and thirty-six for Murray as representative in Congress, most of these coming from the first and fourth wards in Port Angeles.

There isn't the slightest doubt Attorney Rose owes his election to the eleventh-hour attack made upon him by the Knocker. It is an easy matter to count up more than a hundred friends of Mr. Trumbull who asserted on election day their determination of voting for Rose as a rebuke to such rottenness in politics.

THE WEEKLY BULL —

Believing Lindsey and Redden, or at least Redden, to have been connected with the defamatory articles published in the Bee last week, and resenting what he took to be an insulting leer on the latter's face as he passed by on Wednesday, Attorney Ri[illegible] a quick turn, struck Redden [illegible] the ear, felling him to the walk. It is also said that Rice called Redden several names, including wife beater, as he was attempting to arise, when he struck him a second time. Bystanders then interfered, Redden fainting, it is said, as he was helped up, and Dr. Davis of the Bee was sent for to look after his injuries. A complaint of assault and battery has been filed against Rice.

STATE DRY BY 15,000

Colorado, Oregon and Arizona Also Dry; Prohibitionists Hopeful in California

Of the six states that voted on prohibition Tuesday, Washington, Oregon, Colorado and Arizona are dry; Ohio is wet; California is claimed by both sides, with the indications favorable to the saloons. Oregon cast an overwhelming vote in favor of the amendment, a majority of 25,000 being claimed. Colorado is dry by 15,000.

The drys having carried the day in this state, the question now arises as to when the amendment will take effect, some claiming within thirty days as provided by the constitution and others holding a year must elapse as provided in the bill itself. While the supreme court will doubtless be called upon to decide, it is not believed the drys will endeavor to enforce the thirty-day limit, the people as a whole being willing to give the liquor business ample time in which to wind up its affairs and seek other employment.

JEFFERSON WENT WET

Port Townsend reports Jefferson county wet by 280, which was to have been expected. It is only the live town that dare take a chance on the elimination of the license income.

CONVICT ROAD AND EIGHT HOUR LAWS DEFEATED

All of the proposed laws and amendments were defeated with the exception of the prohibition amendment and the measure doing away with employment agencies. An overwhelming vote was returned against the eight hour law and the convict road bill.

It is estimated that there will be a majority of 15,000 against the eight hour law in the state. Port Angeles voted 694 against and 495 in favor of the proposed measure, a majority of 199.

MONTANA AND NEVADA GIVE WOMEN THE BALLOT

Women suffrage enthusiasts thruout the Union are rejoicing over the victory of their cause in Montana and Nevada, where heroic efforts were made to win the ballot. Nebraska is still claimed by the women, the vote being so close it will probably be in doubt for several days. Ohio, Wisconsin and North and South Dakota returned majorities against women suffrage.

A HANDSOME ENDORSEMENT

Evidently the voters did not take very much stock in the calamity howling of Peters and Adams as voiced in the Knocker. Jim Dick's majority of 217 over Adams and Clark's vote of 1378, one of the highest on the ticket, are about as substantial endorsements as the republicans could ask for.

REPUBLICANS MAKE GAINS

Senate and House Remain Democratic but Republicans Gain 70 Members in the Latter.

Indications are that the democratic party will have 228 members in the new congress, republicans 194, progressives 7, and socialists 1. The senate will consist of 55 democrats, 40 republicans and 1 progressive. The republicans gained 70 members in the house.

W. L. Jones was re-elected U. S. Senator, Lin Hadley of Bellingham, elected Congressman to represent this, the second district. Johnson of Hoquiam and La Follette of Pullman were re-elected, while C. C. Dill, a Democrat of Spokane, was chosen for the new Fifth district. Dill is said to be the third democrat ever sent to Congress from Washington. Ole Hanson, progressive candidate for the senate, ran about 7,000 votes behind Black, democrat.

Justices Chadwick and Crow were re-elected and Judge Holcomb of Ritzville, chosen as the third member of the supreme bench.

Republicans governors were elected in Iowa, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Vermont and Wisconsin; democratic governors in Alabama, Arizona, Georgia, Idaho, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Michigan, Nebraska, Oklahoma, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee and Texas.

Uncle Joe Cannon has been re-elected to Congress, as also has Boies Penrose of Pennsylvania. Albert Cummins was elected senator from Iowa, Wm. J. Stone from Missouri, Francis McGovern from Wisconsin, Victor Murdock from Kansas, Oscar Underwood from Alabama, Chas. Whitman from New York, and David I. Walsh from Massachusetts.

Senator Sherman was re-elected in Illinois, the state going republican by 15,000. Indiana went democratic the entire state ticket being elect[illegible] Senator Cummins was re-elected [illegible] Iowa. Montana has re-elected [illegible] cratic congressmen, while in [illegible] ka three democratic and [illegible] publican congressmen we[illegible]

REGULAR MEETING COMMERCIAL CLUB

Secretary Teck's Report Shows a Very Satisfactory Increase in Membership.

Regular monthly meeting of the Port Angeles Commercial Club, November 2, 1914. Present President Craig, Vice-President Aldwell and about forty other members.

Minutes of the regular meeting of October 5, 1914, were read and approved.

A letter from State Horticultural Commissioner T. O. Morrison, expressing gratification over the appreciation of the club for the service of Horticultural Inspector F. N. Rhodes, as judge of the Clallam county fair, was read and ordered filed.

Secretary's Report for October

The secretary read his report of the work done by the club and the secretary's office during the month of October, including the reading of names of sixteen new active and nine new non-resident members, as follows: Active—E. J. Burrough, J. H. Dalton, (Chicago, Ill.), W. Delbar, J. Frank Dilling, S. M. Earling, (Chicago, Ill.), Millard Harrison, Jr., Charles I. Haswell, Charles C. Henry, G. W. Jeffrey, J. M. Kanall, Dr. F. S. Lewis, Chris. Morgenroth, W. D. McMahan, J. D. O'Connor, A. A. Patterson, O. A. Pettit. Non-resident—J. A. Adams, Sequim, Wash., Ole Boe, Royal, Wash., E. E. Beaumont, Box 425, Port Angeles, M. E. Howard, Forks, Mash., Guy Lesure, Clallam Bay, Wash., Donald McInnes, Dungeness, Wash., Herbert B. Smith, Forks, Wash., Charles D. Sult, Forks, Wash., Fred Sutter, Box 1332, Port Angeles.

Relief for Mrs. Shaw and Children

Chairman Ritchie, of the committee on City and County Affairs reported that his committee had appeared before the county commissioners in behalf of Mrs. Shaw and four small children left destitute by the husband and father. The committee had been supplied with a fully explanatory letter addressed to the club by Milliard Harrison, Jr., which letter was returned attached to this report. The commissioners assured the committee that adequate relief for Mrs. Shaw and children would at once be furnished by the county. Ordered filed.

Clallam County Fair Report

A comprehensive, complete and gratifying final report of the Clallam County Fair and Industrial Exhibit of October 16 and 17, 1914, was presented by the Executive Committee in charge of the fair, E. J. Walton, chairman, Thos. T. Aldwell and H. Maurice Fisher, and was read by the secretary and placed on file. The financial report attached shows total receipts from all sources aggregating $567.70, total expenditures $283.52, leaving a net surplus of 284.18.

Resolution Re Lots 16-17, Block 32

The resolutions committee reported having prepared and delivered to the secretary for transmission to Senator Jones and Representative Johnson a resolution faithfully covering the attitude of the club in support of the claim of the U. S. Forest Service for lots 16 and 17, block 32, Port Angeles, in accordance with the action of the club at its regular meeting on October 5, 1914. Ordered filed.

Dr. F. S. Lewis, who was present and represented the interests of Mr. Taylor, who claims a squatter's right to purchase one of the two lots involved, addressed the club in support of the local claimants to the affected property, reviewing in a general way the history of the reservations of Port Angeles townsite. He also submitted a copy of Senator Jones' reply to the resolution forwarded to him by the secretary of this club, which was read by the secretary. He declared that the law of 1892 was intended expressly to make the lots in block 32 available by purchase to the then claimants.

Chairman Aldwell of the Resolutions committee explained the need of the forest service for the lots to accommodate headquarters for probable extensive development operations in the projected building of roads in the Olympic Forest as well as in adjacent country, this having been clearly outlined by Chief Forester Henry S. Graves in his speech at the banquet in the Olympic Hotel on October 3, 1914. Mr. Graves planned to go before Congress asking for an enabling act thru which the sale of timber on the Olympic Forest may be anticipated in the form of bonds, based upon estimates of the merchantable standing timber prepared by the forest service, thus providing a fund of from $250,000 to $500,000, to be used by the forest service in building wagon roads not only within the National Forest but also in the adjoining undeveloped country. Mr. Aldwell stated that he had been informed that Mr. Taylor would accept $100 as compensation for his claim to one of the lots selected by the forest service, and the speaker offered to subscribe $25 toward such settlement.

The subject was quite fully discussed by W. B. Ritchie, President Craig, Lewis Levy, Chris Morgenroth and Dr. Lewis, but no further action was taken, the subject being left in the hands of the special committee appointed October 5, to confer with the claimants, the committee consisting of T. T. Aldwell, chairman, W. J. Ware, Lewis Levy, W. B. Ritchie and Frank P. Fisher.

Amendments to By-Laws

The following amendment to the By-laws, proposed October 5, was adopted: Section 10, Standing Committees, is amended by adding the words, "Legislative Committee, 7 Members." The following amendment to the By-laws, proposed October 26, was adopted: Section 1, Membership, is amended by adding, after the third paragraph of said Section 1, the following: "Non-resident Property Owners of Port Angeles May Become Members Upon Payment of An Annual Fee of $10, Payable in Advance."

NEWS FROM THE CAPITOL

Olympia, Nov. 4—Indebtedness statistics of the political subdivisions of Washington tend to substantiate the claim of Governor Ernest Lister that public debts are one chief cause of high taxes.

Indebtedness of more than $95,000,000 is shown by the public records. Annual interest payments on this debt amount to between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000, an amount easily equal to one-seventh of all taxes levied in this state this year. The total interest payments amount to 7 per cent of the total state tax this year.

Of the total indebtedness cities and towns are responsible for approximately $37,500,000 for general purposes and $25,000,000 for local improvement districts, counties for $11,000,000 and school districts for $18,000,000. Port, drainage and commercial waterway district indebtedness, together with a small state indebtedness, go to make the total of $95,173,619.08.

Estimating the state population at 1,250,000, the public debt amounts to $76 per capita.

A vastly bettered condition of state finances is indicated by the monthly report of the state treasurer, which shows a balance of $610,911.85 in the general fund November 1. One year ago the general fund was overdrawn $451,997.51.

The balances of all state funds November 1, 1914, totalled $3,178,437.59, as compared with $1,779,499.56 November 1, 1913.

Whether the shrubbery producing districts of Belgium are under Belgian or German control seems to make little difference in the filling of American orders taken last year before the war broke out according to shipment notices of foreign importations from the war zone, received at the state department of agriculture. Shipments showing a date of entry from the vicinity of Lille, are dated at New York at late as October 12, and several arrived during the latter part of September.

New state banks are rapidly being organized and chartered under the law providing that all private banks must come under state supervision by January 1, 1915, or go out of business. Twenty more private banks must come under the state law or go out of business, Examiner W. E. Hansen states.

The state land board, at meetings this week, laid preliminary plans for the exchange of state school lands, at present tied up within the national forests, for approximately 600,000 acres of lands which the Federal Government will take from the forests and deed to the state. It is proposed to make a joint commission which first will inspect and appraise the state holdings and then will select government lands near the edges of the national forests, of equal area and amount.

The industrial welfare commission plans two more minimum wage conferences for the near future, one for female office employes and one for hotel and restaurant help.

A San Francisco paper announces the election of T. O. Morrison, assistant state commissioner of agriculture, as vice-president of the West Coast Potato Producers association. The object of the association is to unite potato growers and handlers in uniform methods of fumigation and shipping.

At the National Apple Show in Spokane, November 21-26, horticulturists of the state will hold a conference to talk over proposed new laws. The state department of agriculture will be represented by T. O. Morrison, head of the horticultural division, who will explain the contemplated recommendations of the department to the legislature.

BRITISH SQUADRON DEFEATED OFF CHILE

The British cruiser Monmouth was sunk off Coronel, Chili, Monday, by the German warships Gneisenau, Scharnhorst, Nurnberg, Leipzeig and Dresden, while the cruiser Goodhope was badly damaged and being on fire was supposed to have been lost. The cruiser Glasgow took refuge in the harbor of Coronel and is bottled up. The action lasted nearly an hour, being discontinued at nightfall; it is supposed the Otranto escaped in the darkness. The Germans suffered little damage, their gun range being considerably greater than that of the English.

Declare War On Colds

A crusade of education which aims "that common colds may become uncommon within the next generation" has been begun by prominent New York physicians. Here is a list of the "don'ts" which the doctors say will prevent the annual visitation of the cold:

"Don't sit in a draughty car."
"Don't sleep in hot rooms."
"Don't avoid the fresh air."
"Don't stuff yourself at meal time. Overeating reduces your resistance."

To which we would add—when you take a cold get rid of it as quickly as possible. To accomplish that you will find Chamberlain's Cough Remedy most excellent. Sold by all dealers.

TUBERCULOSIS DAY. NOVEMBER 29TH

Activity of all friends of the movement to exterminate tuberculosis has been roused by the announcement that the annual convention of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis will be held in Seattle, June 14th, 15th, and 16th, 1915.

Local leaders are confident that this convention will be the most notable in the history of the battle in America. Correspondence and telegrams from all parts of the country indicate that some of the foremost men and women, who have given their hearts and their purses to this cause, will be in attendance. Plans are being formulated for a large local attendance, not only from Washington, but from the Pacific Northwest.

Arrangements for the observance of Tuberculosis Day, November 29th, by the churches of the state, by the schools, and by organizations interested in helping raise the health standards of their communities are now being made by the Washington Association for the Prevention and Relief of Tuberculosis. This event is of double importance this year, as proceeds the Red Cross Seal sale thru which the tuberculosis work in this state is largely financed. Any information concerning the national meeting, Tuberculosis Day, or the Red Cross Seal sale will be gladly furnished by theWashington Association for the Prevention and Relief of Tuberculosis, 916 Cobb Building, Seattle.

CLUB NEWS AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

The P. A. Reading Club met last Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. L. M. Campbell and were pleased to welcome at their meeting a number of our local candidates for office who talks. The speakers were: Messrs. Gilmore, Rose, Pierce, Severyns and Campbell. Now that the political questions are settled for the present, the ladies will turn their attention to other channels of thought and Nature Study will be taken up at the next meeting at the home of Mrs. Jessie Webster, November 13th.

The regular monthly meeting of the Women's Auxiliary to the P. A. Commercial Club will be held next Tuesday afternoon, November 10, at 2:30 in the Commercial Club room on Front street. A cordial invitation is extended to all the wives of the members of the Commercial club and all other women in the city interested in any of the phases of civic work we are doing.

Mrs. Wm. Brumfield was hostess to the Fortnightly Bridge Club on Tuesday afternoon, the usual pleasant time being enjoyed by all.

Mrs. Julius Kirschberg was hostess last Friday afternoon to the Silent Thimble Club.

STUDENTS AT THE U.

By Miss Lucy Bonker.

Miss Cecil Smith is pursuing her newspaper work in studies in the department of journalism at the state university.

Ross McKechnie, renowned in high school athletics, did some fine line plunging in the Washington-Whitman game, making several runs, and receiving praise in the sport columns of the university daily.

Helen and Genevieve Hatch, daughters of former Judge Hatch, are freshmen in the course in music in the division of fine arts.

Grace Babcock is completing her work in the domestic science department and expects to receive her bachelor's degree in June.

As a recognition of his scholarship in the department of journalism, Clark Squire, who was on the staff of the Olympic-Leader last summer, has been elected to Sigma Delta Chi, the national honorary journalistic fraternity.

Paul and Jack Carrigan, sons of a former well-known resident of Port Angeles, are attending the university. Jack is studying journalism preparatory for law. Paul is completing the fifth year in the school of law.

BAPTIST CHURCH

The church will have services next Sunday in its new building at the corner of Seventh and Peabody, as follows: 10 a. m., Sunday School. 11 a. m., Preaching. 7:30 p. m., Preaching. The subject for the morning sermon will be "Society Salt." Evening, "Religion Made Easy." A welcome awaits you at these services. Last Sunday evening the church joined in a union temperance meeting with the Congregational and Methodist congregations at the M. E. Church.

The Three-link Dancing Club was organized at I. O. O. F. Hall Wednesday evening. Only Odd Fellows and Rebekah's are eligible to membership. About fifty members were enrolled. The following officers were elected: President, O. D. Burgman; Vice-President, Mrs. J. O. Johnson; Secretary, F. H. Cooper; Treasurer, Myrtle Cooper.

ABOUT THE COUNTY

MT. PLEASANT.

Mr. Joseph Krajewski left Wednesday for eastern Washington to visit relatives.

Mrs. Lucas and children moved to Angeles for the winter on Tuesday.

Mr. Patterson returned home Tuesday morning from his trip to Tacoma.

Mrs. Harry Fredericks and little son arrived home Tuesday to visit at the home of her brother, Mr. Watts.

Mrs. Copoto and son, Willie Boyd, visited in Angeles Saturday and Sunday.

Tony Krajewski has been very sick for several days with tonsilitis.

Mrs. McLaughlin and Mrs. Eacrett and daughter returned Sunday from a very pleasant trip to Sequim and Dungeness.

Mr. Barber, Sr., who has been very poorly for some time, passed away Friday and was laid to rest in Mt. Pleasant cemetary Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. Harris and son visited with her mother a few days, returning home Sunday.

Miss Florence Culbertson spent a few days in Angeles the past week.

Miss Cora Stevens, who has been visiting in Quilcene the past week, returned home Friday.

Mrs. A. L. Byers visited with her daughter, Mrs. Henry Boyd, Thursday and Friday.

Mrs. Chester Tracy visited with Mrs. Hall for a few days returning home Sunday.

LINCOLN HEIGHTS

Two words were omitted in the first line of last week's items which made the remark sound silly. It should have read "Who says it rains EVERY DAY in Angeles." We had ten days without any rain but a goodly amount since.

Mrs. James Higgins has gone to Chimicum to join her husband who has secured work at Mr. Ed. Nailor's.

Mrs. Ishmael Filion and daughter Annie have returned after several months absence visiting eastern friends.

Mrs. John McLeod and daughter Lilly will not return for some time.

Mrs. Muriel Tracy and son were out at Mt. Pleasant from Friday until Sunday visiting at her aunts, Mrs. Hall.

Mr. and Mrs. Harmon Mathews spent Monday evening at E. B. Fleming's.

One of the Sturgis boys is very ill with heart trouble.

It is reported that Mr. Mathews will open a shoe repair shop on the corner of C and Ninth streets, and we hope it is true. Such a shop is needed and those who have had work done by that gentleman knows he understands the business.

Have just heard that this town redeemed itself by voting dry. Are the women responsible?

The Hoof girls and boys entertained at their home on 7th, between B and C streets, last Friday night and friends at a Halloween party. They played games, had music and served a nice luncheon. The house and tables were decorated with black and yellow Jack o' lanterns and all the paraphernalia that goes with a Halloween party. The guests are loud in their praises of the Hopfs as entertainers.

DE FUCA

(Happenings of last week)

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Reeve returned home Monday after an absence of a week. Mr Reeve has a crew of men with him baling hay at various farms him.

Mrs. Willis Chambers, Miss Esther Chambers and Mrs. Ed. Pellerin of Fairview were visitors at the Wooding home Tuesday afternoon.

James and Willie Wooding are home again after being away working for a couple of weeks

Miss Minnie Laurens has gone to Angeles to spend a few days visiting friends.

Mr. N. Heuhslein, Jr., made a business trip to Sequim Saturday.

(This week's news)

There are new tennants on the Troy place again. The Thorpe boys, who for some time have been living at McDonald Creek, have moved up. Their parents and sister expect to move out soon from Angeles to live with them.

The Hallow'een party which Master Carl Laurens intended to give had to be postponed as his mother Mrs. F. Laurens, was taken ill suddenly. She is somewhat better at the present writing.

Mr. J. A. Reeve went to Seattle the first of the week on business.

The camp at Seibert creek is still busy at work on the railroad bridge and expects to remain there until Thanksgiving.

A complete stock of GOODYEAR TIRES on hand at all times. Adjustments gladly made on all GOODYEAR TIRES. Fred C. Farmer, EXCLUSIVE AGENT.

A Night of Terror

Few nights are more terrible than that of a mother looking on her child choking and gasping for breath during an attack of croup, and nothing in the house to relieve it. Many mothers have passed nights of terror in this situation. A little forethought will enable you to avoid all this. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a certain cure for croup and has never been known to fail. Keep it at hand. For sale by all dealers.

I wish to state to the public in general and especially to those who had planned to see the Yoemen Home Coming dedication moving pictures, that by the carelessness of the transportation company the films were put off at Port Townsend instead of Port Angeles and could not be gotten here in time to show on the 24th. They will be shown at a later date.

Stretch the Value of Your Income

TWO ways of stretching your income: First, you and your wife can pull on it from OPPOSING ENDS until the poor little long suffering pay envelope FAIRLY GASPS for BREATH. That's stretching it the WRONG WAY. Are You One of the Women Who Pays By Check?

A woman's checking account in a strong bank combines prestige with conveniences—safety with system. To "Pay by Check" is the businesslike way of keeping receipts for the household expenses, because the butcher, grocer, milk man, or baker cannot dispute their own endorsement on the back of a check.

The employees of the Port Angeles Trust & Savings Bank will be glad to explain the simplicity of opening a checking account, large or small. No woman need be afraid to come here and ask questions.

These well known names of our directorate will, perhaps, give a woman greater confidence to open an account and pay by check.

An extra heavy blast on Lincoln street the first of the week, hurled a fairly good sized stone thru C. W. Harris' Electric window on Front street. It is a good thing no one was in the way of it, otherwise it would have been "good night, nurse."

Mr. Sol Oppenheim, who has been visiting with Mr. Kirschberg the past two weeks, returned to Seattle the first of the week. Mr. Kirschberg showed Mr. Oppenheim everything worth while in Clallam county, and in losing Mr. Oppenheim we gained a booster.

George Watkins, one of the proprietors of the Palace Lunch Counter, returned from Soap Lake the first of the week, after having spent 16 days there. George says the soap there is of fine quality, and to prove his statements brought back several samples, which after being assayed were found to contain about 85% Cod Liver Gut, which makes very fine soap indeed. While there, George invested in about 10 acres of soap land, thinking that when the restaurant business becomes overdone he will have his soap farm to fall back on, and he is sure he could make a clean-up there. George also says he gained 26 lbs. while sojourning at Soap Sud Lake.

Mr. Rhine, attorney. returned to Angeles Thursday.

Dave Christopher walked around with a bum eye a couple of days this week.

Geo. Wilhelm is here, visiting from Portland.

ALONG THE WATERFRONT

The str. San Ramona, from San Francisco, arrived the first of the week to take on port cargo of lumber. Loading in the Sound.

The str. Falcon took on a load of shingles at the City dock the first of the week.

The steam tug Active, of the P. C. S. Co., took up to Seattle a tow of piling for Lewis, Wiley & Morse, this week.

The revenue cutter Snohomish ran up to Hoko river the first of the week to assist a small tow boat with a tow ofof logs. The surf was so heavy that nothing much could be done, so the tow boat ran up the river for safety.

The Milwaukee terminal barges arrive every Monday and Thursday with from 12 to 24 heavily loaded cars of coal, cement, furniture and general freight of all kinds. The barges leave the same day with cars of lumber, shingles, etc., for Seattle.

The U. S. Arcata of Port Townsend tied up alongside the Snohomish the past week.

The coal boat Comanche unloaded about 300 tons of coal the first of the week at the People's Wharf.

Str. San Ramona left for Tacoma and Mukilteo to finish loading cargo.

Str. Lewis K. Thurlow due at mill to load cargo of lumber and shingles for New York. She has been detained at Esquimalt, B. C., on account of a fire in her cargo of coal from Newport News.

The Norwegian Bark B— dropped anchor on Monday to await orders before she proceeded to Seattle to load a cargo of grain for M. H. Houses.

Captain Murchison of Grays Harbor is in the city awaiting the arrival of str. Lewis K. Thurlow. Captain Kittleson is also here awaiting the arrival of the Thurlow, to take command of her upon arrival.

"A MILK SHAKE"

While making a turn on the hill the other side of Bennett's, or back of Walton's lumber yard, the P. A. Dairy wagon overturned, causing quite a sized milk river to flow down the hill. As the wagon turned over, the driver popped out of the opposite door and yelled "whoa" at the horse, but the poor horse could not move, as he was tangled up in the harness.

CITY AND PERSONAL

"A most successful and charming affair in every way," was the verdict of all those who attended the Maccabee Ball at the Opera House last Saturday evening. The crowd was unusually large and in the gayest of spirits and the music was excellent. The hall was particularly attractive in its Halloween garb, the decorations of yellow and black being very effective and pretty. Paper mache jack o' lanterns were strung across the hall from corner to corner, and conspicuously displayed on the stage was the Maccabee flag, side by side with the stars and stripes. So many pretty ladies in dainty new evening gowns added considerably to the brilliancy of the scene. Both financially and socially the party surpassed any the Maccabees have given in previous years.

Mrs. Ida May Blake, a very well known and popular woman of Dungeness, died at the hotel in Sequim of apoplexy while there attending an entertainment. Thefuneral was held from the Methodist church at Dungeness Wednesday morning and was very largely attended by scores of mourning friends. The floral offerings were exceptional beautiful and profuse.

Edw. Green of Sequim died of heart trouble at St. John's Hospital, Port Townsend Monday, at the age of 36. He had been a sufferer for years. W. G. Green, his father and Mrs. Sanford T. Lake, a sister of Port Townsend, are his surviving relatives. Mr. Green was a member of Port Angeles Masonic Lodge, a number of his brother members attending the funeral.

The Ladies of the Congregational Church will hold a sale of useful and fancy articles for holiday gifts at the church Thursday, November 19, from two until ten p. m. Supper will be served from five to seven for 35cents. A short program will be given in the evening, commencing at 8 o'clock.

Mr. L. L. Hay, head bookkeeper at the Earles mill, has rented the W. B. Webster home on Fifth and Laurel streets and he and his wife moved in the first of the week. Mr. and Mrs. Webster, Sr., sail on the Congress next Tuesday for Los Angeles, where they will spend the winter, hoping the change of climtae may prove beneficial to both of them.

Bert Tillman, who was called here from Seattle last week by the death of his father, has returned to Seattle to close his house for the winter and will remain in Angeles with his his sister Cora.

Mrs. Sadie Brownrigg went to Seattle Tuesday to meet her mother, Mrs. Amelia Goldwater who is returning from an extended visit in Germany. She expects to arrive in Seattle today.

CHAPTER XV.

The Masked Voice.

For a matter of twelve hours the fog, leaden, dank, viscous, as inexorable as the dominion of evil, had wrapped the world in an embrace as foul and noxious as the coils of some great, gray, slimy serpent.

Through its sluggish folds the ponderous, power-impelled lifeboat crept at a snail's pace, its stem parting and rolling back from either flank a heavy-hearted sea of gray.

In the bows a young woman rested in a state of semi-exhaustion, her eyes closed, he head pillowed on a cork-belt life-preserver, her sodden garments modeled closely to the slender body that was ever and again shaken from head to feet with the strength of a long, shuddering respiration.

Seated on the nearest thwart, Alan Law, chin in hand, watched over the rest of this woman whom he loved with a grimly hopeless solicitude. He was in no happier case than she, so far as physical comfort went—he was in worse, since he might not rest.

Premonition of misfortune darkened his heart with its impenetrable shadow.

In the stern Tom Barcus presided morosely over the steering gear; and Law was no more jealously heedful of his sweetheart than Barcus of the heavy-duty motor that chugged away so purposefully at its business of driving the boat heaven-knew-where.

Lacking at once a compass, all notion whatsoever of the sun's bearings, and any immediate hope of the fog lifting or chance bringing them either to land or to rescue by some larger and less comfortless craft, Barcus steered mainly through force of habit—the salt-water man's instinctive feeling that no boat under way should ever in any conceivable circumstance be without a hand at the helm. It had seemed impossible that it could long escape repetition of the disaster, but somehow, it always did escape, and that by a wide margin; never once had it passed near enough to another vessel to see it.

And now for more than an hour the silence had been uncannily constant, broken only by the rumble of the motor, the muted lisp of water slipping down the side, the suck and gurgle of the wake.

Forebodings no less portentous than Law's crawled in the mind of Barcus. It was as likely as not that the lifeboat was traveling straight out to sea. And gasoline tanks can and oftentimes do become as empty as an official weather prophet's promise of fair weather for a holiday.

More than this, Mr. Barcus was a confirmed skeptic in respect of marine motors; on terms of long and intimate experience with the ways of the demon of perversity that tenants them one and all, he knew that the present sweet-tempered performance of the exhibit under consideration was no earnest whatsoever of future good behavior, that when such a complicated contraption was concerned there was never any telling . . .

In view of all of which considerations he presently threw open the battery switch.

And the aching void created in the silence by the cessation of that uniform drone was startling enough to rouse even Rose Trine from her state of semi-somnolence.

With a look of panic she sat up, thrust damp hair back from her eyes, and nervously inquired:

"What's the matter?"

"Nothing," Barcus told her. "I shut the engine off—that's all."

Tempers were short in that hour, and Alan was annoyed to think that the rest of his beloved should needlessly have been disturbed.

"What did you do that for?" he demanded sharply.

"Because I jolly well wanted to," Barcus returned in a tone as brusque.

"Oh, you did—eh?"

"Yes, I did—eh! I happen to be bossing this end of the boat and to have sense enough to realize there's no sense at all in our wasting fuel the way we are—cruising nowhere!"

"Well," Law contended, struck by the fairness of this argument, but unable to calm his uneasiness—"just the same, we might—"

"Yes; of course, we might," Barcus snapped. "We might a whole lot. We might, for instance, be heading for Spain, for all you or I know to the contrary. And in such case, I for one respectfully prefer to have gas enough to take us home again if ever this da—blessed fog lifts!"

And for several seconds longer the stillness strangled their spirits in its ruthless grasp.

Then of a sudden a cry shrilled through the fog, so near at hand that it seemed scarcely more distant than over the side:

"Ahoy! Help! Ahoy there! Help!"

So insistent, so urgent was its accent that, coupled with the surprise, it brought the three as one to their feet, all a-tremble, their eyes seeking one another's faces, then shifting uneasily away.

"What can it be?" Rose whispered, aghast, shrinking into Alan's ready arm.

"A woman," Barcus put in harshly.

"Judith," the girl moaned.

Alan shook himself together. "Impossible!" he contended. "I saw her go down . . ."

"That doesn't prove she didn't come up," Barcus commented acidly.

"Ahoy! Motorboat aho-o-oy! Help!"

"And that," Barcus pursued sadly, "just proves she did come up—blame the luck! Alive she is, and kicking; stand clear. An able-bodied pair of lungs was back of that hail, my friend; and you needn't tell me I don't know the dulcet accents of that angelic contralto!"

Without heeding him, Alan cupped hands to mouth and sent an answering cry ringing through the murk:

"Ahoy! Where are you? Where away?"

"Here—on the reef—half-drowned—perishing with chill—"

"How does my voice bear?" Alan called back.

"What the dickens do you care?" Barcus interpolated suspiciuosly.

"To port," the response rang through the fog. "Starboard your helm and come in slowly!"

"Right-o! Half a minute!" Alan replied reassuringly.

"Like hell!" Mr. Barcus muttered in his throat as he jumped down into the engine pit and bent over the fly-wheel.

Leaping on the forward thwart and balancing himself perilously near the gunwale, Alan strained his vision vainly against the opacity of the fog.

"Can't make out anything," he grumbled, looking back. "Start her up—but slow's the word—and 'ware reef!"

"Nothing doing," Barcus retorted curtly. "The motto is now 'Full speed astern!' as you must know."

"O come! We can't leave a woman out there—in a fix like that!"

"Can't we? You watch!" Barcus grunted malevolently, rocking the heavy flywheel with all his might; for the motor had turned suddenly stubborn.

"Alan!" Rose pleaded, laying a hand upon his sleeve. "Think what it means! I know it sounds heartless of me—and it's my own sister. But you know how mad she is—wild with hatred and jealousy. If you take her into this boat, it's your life or hers!"

"If we leave her out there," Alan retorted, shaking his arm impatiently free, "it's her life on our heads!"

At this juncture the motor took charge of the argument, ending it in summary fashion. With a smart explosion in the cylinder, it started up unexpectedly, at one and the same time almost dislocating the arm of Mr. Barcus and precipitating Alan overboard.

It was not given him to know what was happening until he found himself in the water; he struggled to the surface just in time to see the bows of the lifeboat back away and vanish into the mist.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Island.

Not more than twenty seconds could have elapsed before Barcus recovered from the shock of the motor's treachery sufficiently to reverse the wheel, throttle down the carburetor and jump out of the engine-pit.

But in that small space of time the lifeboat and Alan Law had parted company as definitely as though one of them had been levitated bodily to the far side of the earth.

It could not have been more than a minute after the accident before Barcus was guiding the boat over what, going on his sense of location and judgment of distance, he could have sworn was the precise spot where Alan had disappeared, but without discovering a sign of him.

And for the next twenty minutes he divided his attention between attempts to soothe and reassure the half-distracted girl and efforts to educe a reply from Alan by stentorian hailing—with as little success in the one as in the other.

"Alan!" he shrieked at the top of his lungs. "Alan! Give a hail to tell us you're safe!"

There was a little pause; he was racking his brains for some more moving mode of appeal when the answer came in another voice—in the voice of Judith Trine, clear, musical, effervescent with sardonic humor:

"Be at peace, little one—bleat no more! Mr. Law is with us—and safe—oh, quite, quite safe!"

In dumb consternation Barcus sought the countenance of Rose. Her eyes, meeting his, were blank with despair. He shook his head helplessly and let his hands dangle idly between his knees.

With no way on her, the lifeboat drifted with a current of unknown set and strength.

"What can we do?" Rose implored. "We must do something. We can't leave him . . . Oh, when I think of him there, in her hands, I could go mad!"

"If only I knew," Barcus protested; "but my hands are tied, my wits are as helpless as my eyes are blind. There's nothing to go by—except the bare possibility that the reef she spoke of may be Norton's. It doesn't seem possible, but we may have made that much southing. In that case we're about three miles off the mainland, somewhere in the neighborhood of Katama island, a little, rocky, desolate bump of earth, inhabited mainly by fishermen."

The girl wrung her hands. "But how could Judith get there—and with her men—and ammunition?"

"Don't ask me. Going on my experience with the lady, I'd be willing to bet that she was picked up by the steamer that ran us down, and proceeded to make a prize of it—or try to. One thing's certain—she must have found or stolen a boat from somebody; they couldn't have made Norton's reef by swimming—it's too far. That's the answer; they were picked up, stole a boat, and piled it up on the reef."

Yanked Him Off to His Cell.

"And there's no hope—!"

"Only of the fog relenting. If we could make the mainland and get help . . ."

His accents died away into a disconsolate silence that was unbroken for upwards of an hour.

So slowly the current bore the lifeboat toward the beach and so still the tide that Barcus never appreciated they were within touch of any land until the bows grounded with a slight jar and a grating sound.

With a cry of incredulity he leaped to his feet—"Land, by all that's lucky!"—and stooping, lent a hand to the girl, aiding her to rise.

Hardly had Rose had time to comprehend what had happened, when Barcus was over the side and wrestling with the bows, dragging the boat farther upon the shoals.

She was, however, more than one man could manage; and when her stem had bitten a little more deeply into the sands, Barcus gave over the attempt and, lifting Rose down, set her on dry land, then climbed back into the vessel, rummaged out her anchor and cable, and carried them ashore, planting the former well up towards the foot of the cliff.

And as he rose from this last labor he was half blinded by the glare of the westering sun as it broke through the fog.

In less than five minutes the miraculous commonplace was an accomplished fact; the wind had rolled the fog back like a scroll and sent it spinning far out to sea, while the shore on which the two had landed was deluged with sunlight, bright and beautifully warm.

He showed a thoughtful and considerate countenance to the girl.

"You're about all in?"

She nodded confirmation of this, which was no more than simple truth. "Where are we?" she added.

He made her party to his own perplexity.

"You're not able to travel," he pursued. "Do you mind being left alone while I take a turn up the beach and have a look round? We can't be far from some sort of civilization; even if it's an island there are no desert isles along this coast. I'll find something soon enough, no fear."

By tacit consent both avoided mention of Alan, but each knew what thought was uppermost in the other's mind.

"There's a niche among the rocks up here," Barcus indicated, "almost a cave. You'll be warm and dry enough, and secure from observation overhead. Maybe you can even snatch a few winks of sleep. . . ."

She negatived that suggestion with a weary smile; no sleep for her until sheer exhaustion overpowered her, or she knew of Alan's fate.

And so, reiterating his promise to be gone no longer than absolutely might be needful, he left her there.

CHAPTER XVII.

This Mortal Tide.

She was very certain she would never sleep before her anxiety was assuaged by word of Alan's fate; but she reckoned without her host of trials that had bred in her a fatigue anodynous even to her mental anguish.

For a time after Barcus had left her she lingered upon the sands, in the mouth of the shelter he had selected for her, staring hungrily out on the shimmering sea that, now wholly divested of its shroud, smiled up to the heavens, whose sapphire face it mirrored, as fair and sweet of seeming as though it had never veiled a heartless tragedy.

Slowly it darkened as the sapphire above grew darker, blending insensibly into rare ultramarine with the slow decline of the sun, by whose altitude above the horizon the day had not more than ninety minutes to run.

And she thought drowsily that if that sun sank without her learning that her lover lived, it would not rise again upon a world tenanted by Rose Trine.

It was not true, she told herself, that people never die of broken hearts.

She knew that, were he taken from her, she could no longer live. . . .

And sleep overwhelmed her suddenly, like a great, dark cloud . . .

But its dominion over her faculties was not of long duration. Slowly, heavily, mutinously, she was rescued from its nirvana—came to her senses with an effect of one who emerges from some vast place of blackness and terror, to find Barcus kneeling over and gingerly but persistently shaking her by the shoulder.

And then she sat up with a cry of mystified compassion; for in the brief time that he had been absent—it had not been more than an hour—Mr. Barcus had most unquestionably been severely used.

He had acquired a long cut over one eye, but shallow, upon which blood had dried, together with a bruised and swollen cheek that was badly scratched to boot. And what simple articles of clothing remained to him, after his strenuous experiences of the last forty-eight hours, had been reduced to even greater simplicity; his shirt, for example, now lacked a sleeve that had been altogether torn away at the shoulder.

"No!" he told her, as soon as he saw her wits were awake once more—"don't waste time pitying me. I'm all right—and so is Alan! That's the main thing for you to understand; he's still alive and sound—"

"But where is he? Take me to him!" she demanded, rising with a movement of such grace and vigor that it seemed hard to believe she had ever known an instant's weariness.

"That's the rub," Barcus confessed, squatting on the sands and knuckling his hair. "I dassent take you to him. Judith might object. Besides, you can see for yourself it isn't safe to mingle with the inhabitants of this tight little island—and you can't get to where Alan is without mingling considerably. Sit down, and I'll tell you all about it, and we'll try to figure out what's best to be done. Maybe we can manage a rescue under cover of night."

And when the girl had settled herself beside him he launched into a detailed report.

"It's Katama island, all right," he announced, "but a change has come over the place since I visited it some years ago. Then it was a community of simple-hearted villagers and fishermen; now, unless all signs fail, it's a den of smugglers. I noticed a number of Chinese about; and that, taken in connection with the fact that, when I ventured to introduce myself to the village ginmill and ask a few innocent questions, the entire population, to a child, landed on me like a thousand brick—the two circumstances made me think we'd stumbled on a settlement of earnest workers at the gentle art of helping poor Chinamen evade the exclusion laws."

With a wry smile, he pursued: "As for me, I landed out back of the joint, on the nape of my neck, and took the count, surrounded by a lot of unsympathetic boxes and barrels that had seen better days. And when I came to and started to crawl unostentatiously away, I was just in time to witness the landing of your amiable sister, that gang of cutthroats she keeps on the pay roll, and Alan in company with as choice a crew of scoundrels as you'd care to see. I gathered from a few words that leaked out of the back door of the barroom, that it was as I had thought—Judith had stolen a boat from the ship that picked her up, and rammed it on Norton's reef; and after she gathered Alan in the schooner of these smugglers happened along, and she hailed it and struck a bargain with the captain and signed co-partnership articles, or something like that. Anyway, her lot and the islanders were soon as thick as thieves, and tanking up so sociably that I actually got a chance to whisper a word to Alan and tell him you were all right, and that he'd find us both down here on the beach, if luck served him with an escape. That was all I got a chance to say, for Judith marched up just then and yanked him off to his cell. I mean to say, he's locked up now in a little stone hut on the edge of the cliff, with the door guarded and the window overlooking a sheer drop of thirty feet or so to the beach. When I'd seen that much I calculated it was about time for me to get quit of that neighborhood, before Mam'selle Judith nicked me with the evil eye."

"You don't think she saw you?" the girl cried.

"I don't think so," Barcus allowed gravely; and then, lifting his gaze, he added as he rose in a bound: "I just know she did—that's all.

In another instant he was battling might and main with three willing ruffians, who had come suddenly into view round a shoulder of rock; but his efforts were shortlived, foredoomed to failure. He was weakened with suffering and fatigue—and the three were fresh and had the courage at least of their numbers. He was overborne in a twinkling, and had his face ground brutally into the sand while his hands were made fast with stout rope behind his back. And when he rose, it was to find, as he had anticipated, that Rose's resistance had been as futile as his own; she, too, was captive, her hands bound like his, the huge and unclean paw of one of Judith's crew cruelly clamped upon her shoulders.

They were granted time to exchange no more than one despairing glance when a curt laugh fairly chilled the blood in Mr. Barcus, and he swung sharply between his two guards to confront Judith Trine.

The woman he saw at first glance, was in one of her most dangerous moods—if, Barcus mentally qualified, there was a pin to choose between her moods. But now, beyond dispute, she exhibited a countenance new in his experience with her, and one well calculated to appall.

Her face was bloodless, even as her lips were white with the curb she put upon her passion. Her eyes were lurid with the glare of rage approaching mania. Her hands trembled, her lips quivered, all her actions were abrupt with nervousness.

He was by no means poor-spirited, but he shrank openly from the look she gave him, and was relieved when she, with a sneer, passed him by and planted herself squarely before her sister.

"Well!" she demanded brusquely. "How much longer do you think I'm going to tolerate your interference—you poor little fool! How many more lessons will you require before realizing that I mean to have my way, and that you'll cross me only to suffer for it?"

The courage of the other girl won the unstinted admiration of Mr. Barcus. Far from cringing, she seemed to find fresh heart in her sister's challenge. Her head was high, her glance level with illimitable contempt as she replied:

"So you've tried again?" she inquired obliquely, with a tone of pity. "You've offered him your love yet another time, have you?"

"Silence!" Judith cried in fury.

"Only to learn once more that he would rather death than you?" Rose persisted, unflinching. "And so you come to take your spite out on me, do you? You pitiful thing! Do you think I mind—knowing as I do now that he could never hold you in anything but compassion and contempt?"

For an instant there was silence; by the scorn of her sister the heat of Judith's fury had been transformed into a cold and malignant rage. She controlled herself and her voice marvelously.

"You will see," she said in even and frigid accents. And the light of her mania leaped and leaped again in her eyes like a living flame. "I have prepared a way to make you understand what opposition to me means . . ."

She waved a hand toward the nearer point of rocks. "Take them along," she commanded.

The understanding between her and her men was apparently complete; for these last, without hesitation or further instructions, marched Rose and Barcus down to the end of the spit and on, into the water.

It was nearly knee-deep before Barcus was halted with a savage jerk, backed up to a rock, forced despite his frenzied resistance to sit down in the water, and swiftly, with half a dozen deft hitches of rope and a stanch knot, made fast in that position—submerged to his chest.

Already the Waters Had Risen Over an Inch.

This accomplished, the men turned attention to Rose, lashing her in similar wise at Barcus' side.

Standing just above the water-line, with every sign of complete calm and sanity other than that ominous flickering in her eyes, Judith superintended the business till its conclusion, then waved the men away.

Quietly, like well-trained servants, they turned their backs and marched off.

And again, after a brief wait, the woman laughed her short and mirthless laugh.

"The tide will be high," she said, "precisely at sunset. You may time your lives by that. When the sun dips into the sea, then will your lives go down with it."

She turned on her heel and strode swiftly away, with not so much as a backward glance, overtook her men, and passed quickly from sight around the farther point of rocks.

For some time Barcus struggled vainly with his bonds. As for Rose, she wasted no strength in struggling—perhaps had none to waste. When he looked her way he saw her exquisite profile unmarred by any line of fear or doubt, sharply relieved against the darkness of the rising flood. Her level gaze without a tremor traversed the shining flood to its far horizon.

He noted that already the waters had risen more than an inch.

Humbled even in his terror by that radiant calm that dwelt upon her, he ventured diffidently: "Rose — Miss Trine—"

She turned her head and found the heart to smile. "Rose," she corrected gently.

"I'm sorry," he said—which was not at all what he had meant t done my best. I suppose . to give up—but they've ma much for me, this time."

"I know," she said gently.

"You"—he stammered—"you afraid?"

"There is nothing to fear," she "but death. . . ."

"Then," he said more bravely, a time—the water now was near chin—"good-by—good luck!"

"Not yet, dear friend," she returne "not yet."

But the sun was perilously close upon the rim of the world. But a little time, and it would be night.

He closed his eyes to shut out the vision of its slow, implacable descent.

The water was now almost level with his lips; it seemed strange that

his throat could be so dry, so parched . . .

He opened his eyes, shuddering.

"It's good-by now," he faltered.

"Not yet!" her voice rang beside him, vibrant. "Look—up there—along the cliff!"

He lifted his gaze . . .

Two men were running along the cliff—and the man in the lead was Alan. But his lead was very scant, and the man who pursued was one of Judith's, and stuck to the trail like a blood-hound fresh from the leash.

And now the water was at his lips; Barcus could no more speak without strangling.

Of a sudden he groaned in his heart; though there was no passable way down the cliff, still the sight of his friend alive and unharmed had brought with it a thrill of hope; now that hope died as he saw Alan stumble and go to his knees.

Before he could rise the other was upon him, with the fury of a wolf seeking the throat of a stag.

For an instant they fought like madmen; then, in a trice, the sky line of the cliff was empty; one or the other had tripped and fallen over the brink, and falling had retained hold of his enemy and carried him down as well.

By no chance, Barcus told himself, could either escape uninjured.

Yet, to his amazement, he saw one man break from the other's embrace and rise. And he who lay still, a crumpled, inhuman heap upon the sands, was Judith's man.

With a violent effort Barcus lifted his mouth above water and shrieked:

"Alan! Alan! Help! Here—at the end of the point—in the water—help!"

A precious minute was lost before Alan discovered their two heads, so barely above that swiftly rising flood.

Then he ran toward them as he had never run before, and as he came whipped out a jack-knife and freed its blade.

Even so—since it was, of course, Rose whom Alan freed the first—Barcus was half-drowned before Alan helped him in turn up to the beach.

And as this happened the last blood-red rim of the sun was washed under by the waves.

Two minutes later the lifeboat was afloat, and Mr. Barcus, already recovered, was laboring with the flywheel of the motor, stimulated to supreme exertion by the sight of a party, led by Judith, racing madly down the beach.

But it was not until well out from shore and on the way to the safety promised by the mainland—now readily discernible on the horizon—that any one of them found time for speech.

Then Mr. Barcus straightened up from his assiduous attentions to the motor, and observed:

"You bear a charmed life, my adventurous friend. I want to tell you that when I saw you go over that cliff I made up my mind your usefulness would be at least permanently impaired. As it is, I don't mind telling you that if ever I get out of this affair alive, I'm going to have a try at your life myself, just once, for luck!"

C. D. Best, one of our highly respected citizens, who has come to Angeles within the last few years to make his home, announces himself this week as candidate for city treasurer.

On Sunday last a very enjoyable dinner was served at the home of Mrs. W. J. Hoare, in honor of the birthdays of Miss Consance Hoare and Mr. Andrew Severyns. Among those present at the table were Mr. and Mrs. John Hansen and Mr. Farobee. The table was set for twelve.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Fisher and Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Fisher went to Dungeness today to attend the wedding of their neice, Miss Jean Dick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Dick, who is to be married at the Sinclair Hotel to Mr. Frederick Cook. Miss Dick with her friend, Miss Auft of Seattle, were shopping in Angeles Wednesday.

Six thousand teachers, representing all parts of Washington, were in attendance at the big meeting of the Washington Educational Association in Tacoma last week. The Boys' and Girls' Agriculture Contest was also in progress at the big Armory building and Tacoma streets thronged with people.

Interest has grown to such an extent in the Agricultural contest, that the committee in charge have decided that next year seven big contests instead of one will be held. The state will be divided into seven districts and each one will hold a contest under the state supervision.

GERMAN FLEET WILL ATTACK VICTORIA

...ious over the British squad... the Chilean coast and for the ...eing supreme on this side of ...acific Ocean the German fleet ...e cruisers, under the command ...lmiral Graf von Spee, the latest ...l hero, it is believed will steam ...thward in a day or two for the ex...ss purpose of bombarding Victoria, says the Seattle Times.

Tremendous efforts are being made ...y Esquimalt to strengthen its fortifications, but the sole hope of saving Victoria from devastation now seems to lie in the two Seattle-built submarines, Iquique and Antofogasta. They will attack the German fleet either in the strait or off Cape Flattery, in the event that it appears.

The British naval officers at Esquimalt have received information from Chile that Admiral von Spee has decided on the bombardment of Victoria and the destruction of British shipping in British Columbia waters as his next move.

One factor, however, may cause a complete upset of his plans—the British battleship Canopus, which recently passed thru the Strait of Magellan into the Pacific. She has succeeded in keeping her whereabouts a mystery. It is believed she is hundreds of miles south of the German fleet. If so, the Germans can precede her to Victoria, and things will then hinge up to the Seattle-built submarines, which were ordered by Chile and being rejected upon completion were purchased by Great Britian at the beginning of the war.

If the Canopus could succeed in joining the Japanese cruiser Idsuma and the British light cruiser Newcastle in northern waters, the fleets would be almost equal in power.

The German predominance lies in the two 11,600 ton cruisers Scharnhorst and Gneisenau; the other German vessels are of 3,540 tons or less. The Idzuma is a 9,800 ton first class cruiser, and the Newcastle a light cruiser of 4,800 tons.

PARENT-TEACHERS MEETING

Parents and all those interested in our public schools are invited to be present at the regular Parent-Teachers meeting to be held in the H. S. Auditorium next Monday evening at 7:30 p. m. The committee was disappointed in getting a speaker from Seattle for this meeting but other arrangements have been made for an interesting program and the president, Mrs. Madge Nailor, will give a report of the directors' meeting held in Tacoma last week. The subject of serving hot lunches at school during the winter months will be discussed. This plan has worked very successfully in many cities and towns and has been conducted by the mothers in some places, two or three of them assuming the responsibility for one week and some others the next. Come out next Monday and tell us what you think of the plan.

A CHORAL CLUB

A Choral Club in connection with the Ladies' Musical Club, was organized last Monday evening at Mrs. Troy's Art Studio, where a meeting of about thirty of our musically inclined people was held and it is hoped the membership roll will be largely increased before another meeting. The services of Professor Feston Davies, director of the Shubert Club of Seattle, have been engaged for the season. He will be here every Monday, giving private vocal lessons during the day and instructing the Club from 6 to 7:45 p. m., at Elk's Hall, in the evening. The meeting last Monday evening terminated in a delightful social function. Dainty refreshments were served and a number of enjoyable musical numbers were rendered by W. C. Nelson, Mrs. McCowan, Mrs. Baker, Mrs. Troy, and the Misses Taylor, Wolverton and Stovel.

The Senior class, with the exception of two, are having an extra session to make up time for what they missed by staying home last Wednesday afternoon.

The Domestic Science Class this week have made baking powder biscuits, apricot short cake and fruit rolls. Before long, the high school girls will be able to cook an excellent dinner if all reports are true. A n w oven has been put in this week, also.

The football team has decided not to play with Everett this year as they do not think they can spare the time. That is what the boys say, at least, tho their fellow-students wish they could instill some courage into their team.

In response to the suggestion made a few weeks ago in the Olympic-Leader, that the donation of some records for the new school Victrola would be greatly appreciated, Mrs. Hugh Phelps presented them this week with "Gems from Faust," a very enjoyable one. Who will be the next one to follow this good example?

BECK'S SAUSAGE MARKET WILL HAVE TO ENLARGE

Rudolph Beck, of the P. A. Meat and Sausage Market, on the People's Wharf, tells us his business is increasing so rapidly that he will have to have another room, one entirely devoted to his sausage factory. Angeles people have shown their appreciation of the superior quality of his sausages by giving him such a large patronage that it requires all one man's time just to attend to the sausage end of the market. Beck's pork sausage with hot cakes makes a breakfast fit for a king. Try some, and be convinced.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Congregational Church gave a farewell tea at the church parlors last Monday afternoon in honor of Mrs. B. Wilcox, who moves this week to their new home on a ranch near Dungeness. She has been an earnest worker in the church and will be greatly missed. A little speech, expressive of the feelings of the Aid toward Mrs. Wilcox, was delivered and impressive manner, Mrs. Wilcox respondng.

SPECIAL BARGAINS FOR THE KIDDIES

Busy mothers will do well to read the Phelps Dry Goods and Millinery advehtisement in this paper and then make a visit to this store and see for themselves the splendid bargains to be had for the kiddies.

You cannot afford to make either either dresses or coats when you can buy them ready to wear at just the cost price of materials.

Think of the serge dresses, kilted skirts and middies, for $4, and $1 buys a nice warm coat for the baby or a dandy warm sweater little sister or brother.

HEATING PLANT FOR ALDWELL BLOCK

Hugh Phelps was in the city yesterday making arrangements for installing a heating plant in the Aldwell block. His men have just completed the work in the Delabarre home and in the new Central Telephone office. Mr. Phelps believes in helping our home men and gives them the work in preference to his Seattle assistants.

ANNOUNCEMENT

I wish to announce my candidacy for City Treasurer, at the Primary Election, November 10th.

I came here two years ago and have invested all the world's goods I possess here. I expect to make Port Angeles my future home. If elected, I will devote my whole time and attention to the duties of this office.

Respectfully,
C. D. BEST.

A prominent road contractor was heard to say, after learning of the election returns, "Well I'm not surprised to hear the state went dry, the working men have been saying all summer that they would vote it dry, so they could save some money," At least they learned that the saloon man was not their friend.

BELIEVED GERMAN FLEET WILL ATTACK VICTORIA

Victorious over the British squadron off the Chilean coast and for the time being supreme on this side of the Pacific Ocean the German fleet of five cruisers, under the command of Admiral Graf von Spee, the latest naval hero, it is believed will steam northward in a day or two for the express purpose of bombarding Victoria, says the Seattle Times.

Tremendous efforts are being made by Esquimalt to strengthen its fortifications, but the sole hope of saving Victoria from devastation now seems to lie in the two Seattle-built submarines, Iquique and Antofogasta. They will attack the German fleet either in the strait or off Cape Flattery, in the event that it appears.

The British naval officers at Esquimalt have received information from Chile that Admiral von Spee has decided on the bombardment of Victoria and the destruction of British shipping in British Columbia waters as his next move.

One factor, however, may cause a complete upset of his plans—the British battleship Canopus, which recently passed thru the Strait of Magellan into the Pacific. She has succeeded in keeping her whereabouts a mystery. It is believed she is hundreds of miles south of the German fleet. If so, the Germans can precede her to Victoria, and things will then hinge up to the Seattle-built submarines, which were ordered by Chile and being rejected upon completion were purchased by Great Britian at the beginning of the war.

If the Canopus could succeed in joining the Japanese cruiser Idsuma and the British light cruiser Newcastle in northern waters, the fleets would be almost equal in power.

The German predominance lies in e two 11,600 ton cruisers Scharnrst and Gneisenau; the other German vessels are of 3,540 tons or less. ie Idzuma is a 9,800 ton first class uiser, and the Newcastle a light uiser of 4,800 tons.

(Chorus of Football Players and College Girls)

The Senior class, with the exception of two, are having an extra session to make up time for what they missed by staying home last Wednesday afternoon.

The Domestic Science Class this week have made baking powder biscuits, apricot short cake and fruit rolls. Before long, the high school girls will be able to cook an excellent dinner if all reports are true. A n w oven has been put in this week, also.

The football team has decided not to play with Everett this year as they do not think they can spare the time. That is what the boys say, at least, tho their fellow-students wish they could instill some courage into their team.

In response to the suggestion made a few weeks ago in the Olympic-Leader, that the donation of some records for the new school Victrola would be greatly appreciated, Mrs. Hugh Phelps presented them this week with "Gems from Faust," a very enjoyable one. Who will be the next one to follow this good example?

BECK'S SAUSAGE MARKET WILL HAVE TO ENLARGE

Rudolph Beck, of the P. A. Meat and Sausage Market, on the People's Wharf, tells us his business is increasing so rapidly that he will have to have another room, one entirely devoted to his sausage factory. Angeles people have shown their appreciation of the superior quality of his sausages by giving him such a large patronage that it requires all one man's time just to attend to the sausage end of the market. Beck's pork sausage with hot cakes makes a breakfast fit for a king. Try some, and be convinced.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Congregational Church gave a farewell tea at the church parlors last Monday afternoon in honor of Mrs. B. Wilcox, who moves this week to their new home on a ranch near Dungeness. She has been an earnest worker in the church and will be greatly missed. A little speech, expressive of the feelings of the Aid toward Mrs. Wilcox, was delivered and impressive manner, Mrs. Wilcox respondng.

SPECIAL BARGAINS FOR THE KIDDIES

Busy mothers will do well to read the Phelps Dry Goods and Millinery advehtisement in this paper and then make a visit to this store and see for themselves the splendid bargains to be had for the kiddies.

You cannot afford to make either either dresses or coats when you can buy them ready to wear at just the cost price of materials.

Think of the serge dresses, kilted skirts and middies, for $4, and $1 buys a nice warm coat for the baby or a dandy warm sweater little sister or brother.

HEATING PLANT FOR ALDWELL BLOCK

Hugh Phelps was in the city yesterday making arrangements for installing a heating plant in the Aldwell block. His men have just completed the work in the Delabarre home and in the new Central Telephone office. Mr. Phelps believes in helping our home men and gives them the work in preference to his Seattle assistants.

2400 LOAVES DAILY

Twenty four hundred loaves sounds like a whole lot of bread but that is what Proprietor Myerding, of the Palace is selling every day, besides hundreds of cakes, pies, cookies and other goodies made at his clean, sanitary bakery on Front street.

CARD OF THANKS

We take this means of expressing our thanks and appreciation to the many kind friends for their sympathy and assistance in our sorrow and to all those who sent floral offerings. Especially grateful do we feel to the Masonic Lodge for their kindness and services.

ANNOUNCEMENT

I wish to announce my candidacy for City Treasurer, at the Primary Election, November 10th.

I came here two years ago and have invested all the world's goods I possess here. I expect to make Port Angeles my future home. If elected, I will devote my whole time and attention to the duties of this office.

Respectfully,
C. D. BEST.

A prominent road contractor was heard to say, after learning of the election returns, "Well I'm not surprised to hear the state went dry, the working men have been saying all summer that they would vote it dry, so they could save some money," At least they learned that the saloon man was not their friend.

Puyallup commissioners are extending Pioneer Way hard surface road one mile.

Large shipment of comforts and blankets just in at Gutenburg's Hdw. & Furniture Co's. Call in and make selections while lines remain unbroken. Prices right.

A complete stock of GOODYEAR TIRES on hand at all times. Adjustments gladly made on all GOODYEAR TIRES.
