WOULD CAN CITY MARSHAL

Claimed Grierson is Negligent in Enforcing Ordinances, also in Keeping Office Records.

Quite an exciting session of the city council was held Tuesday night, special interest being injected into the proceedings by Councilman Shields who made a motion to declare the Marshal's office vacant upon the grounds that that officer had neglected his duty and that he had been active in knocking the business of a certain business man, all of which the marshal denied. The motion was seconded by Councilman Dustman, and the mayor appealed to the attorney as to its being in order. Can the council remove the marshal or any other officer without first preferring charges and impeaching. The city attorney was of the opinion that only the mayor had the right to remove. It was agreed, however, that the matter go over and that the attorney present a written opinion on the question. The whole matter will doubtless come up again at the next session. The specific charges named against the marshal were that he did not enforce the ordinance providing that raised buildings shall be enclosed below with corrugated iron, and that the light poles were allowed to be littered with campaign posters. The city attorney took the blame for the former alleging that the ordinance could not be enforced.

The city clerk was directed to call for bids for the improvement of Front street west of Oak, and Cherry and Valley, between Front and First. Bids will be open December 1.

The finance committee could not O. K. the claim of W. J. Larkin for prisoners meals except in instance of 61 of the 84 meals alleged to have been served. Claim was allowed for 61 meals.

Street superintendent was directed to build a two-plank walk down alley from north end of Peabody bridge to Vine street at a cost of $20. Street committee also reported that the railroad company had donated 400 yards of gravel for use on Second street east and west of Tumwater and superintendent was directed to arrange to spread same.

Extensions of lighting system were ordered made aggregating $90, and considerable new material was ordered purchased.

City attorney was given an additional week in which to report as to claim for damages filed by parties hurt on First street improvement.

Street superintendent reported all but 140 feet of sidewalk put in on west side of Francis street, south to Fourth, superintendent ordered to put this in and charge to abutting property, also to place crossing. Walk north of Fourth was left in abeyance for time being, parties endeavoring to secure concrete walk.

Engineer Filion submitted estimates as follows to November 1st, down town, previous estimate $93,389, added estimate $5260; bonds ordered issued to contractors $4245,30. East Hill bonds due contractors, $3950. First street west and Valley street bonds due contractor $1879.20. Lincoln street, south, bonds due contractors $2778.50.

Property owners in blocks 35, 36 and 37 to the number of about 30 petitioned council to take some action to prevent parties taking sand and gravel from said blocks and streets and alleys in vicinity. They allege that property is being destroyed by such. City attorney stated owners had plenty of law to protect their property. Council ordered notices published and posted warning trespassers from streets and alleys.

Petition for foot bridge to connect with zig-zag and stair leading from cannery to hill was referred to street committee for report. Parents of two score children living at mill are the petitioners, who allege that the route children have to travel to the school is dangerous by reason of the railroad.

Ordinance prohibiting tying of teams to hydrants was adopted.

Councilman Shields called up matter of enclosing raised building in business section with corrugated iron and wanted to know why ordinance was not enforced in all cases. He stated that it was unfair to those trying to do something toward making a decent town of this to permit some to escape the requirements of this ordinance. The city attorney stated that he had advised the marshal that he was afraid of the ordinance when it came to compelling, that the ordinance was drawn with a different idea in view, and if council desired that the lower floors of the raised buildings be enclosed with corrugated iron or other material that it would be wise to amend the section so directed making it more specific. This brought out quite a discussion and lead into the matter of removing the marshal. Mr. Bigelow moved that the city attorney take steps to amend the ordinance, that its provisions might be enforced. This motion carried.

Resolution of intention to improve street from Third to Boulevard was adopted and hearing set for December 1st. The resolution provides for utilizing the gulch in the vicinity of I street, 30 feet in width in reaching the top of the bluff which is quite high at that point, then proceeding to 16th street along I. The cost will be 40 per cent against the abutting property and balance on enlarged district embracing F to M streets and Third to 16th streets, according to special benefits.

City attorney was directed to bring in new salary ordinance for coming year in accordance with estimates recently made by council.

Council adjourned.

MISS WIGGINS RESIGNED

Miss Julia Wiggins, teacher of the third grade at Central school was called home to Iowa last Saturday, by the serious illness of her father. She will be greatly missed in Angeles especially in church and school affairs, where she has always been so generous and willing, with her ability as a reader to assist at entertainments and will be remembered with pleasure by many friends.

BUY PAZANDAK'S PLUM PUDDING

The Domestic-Science department of our city school would be glad to receive orders for plum puddings. Encourage these enthusiastic little cooks by giving them your order; arrangements can be made by seeing the instructor, Miss Pazandak.

EXIT COWS AND FENCES

Vote at Primary Shows Councilmen Were Buffaloed by Residents of Outlying Wards.

That momentous question, whether or not Port Angeles should longer continue to be known as a "cow town," which occupied the attention of the city council for some time a few months ago, was happily settled Tuesday by an advisory vote of 561 against the cows to 357 for, a majority of 204.

Little interest was taken in the election otherwise, there being only a trifle more than half as many votes cast as were registered at the county election the week previous. A. D. Wolverton was elected councilman-at-large, J. W. Hooker, councilman from the first ward, Wm. Brennand from the third, and Felix Filion from the sixth, the latter being nominated by the use of stickers. P. F. Harley was reelected treasurer.

For Mayor, Horace White received 126 votes in the first ward, in the second 143; 3rd, 71; 4th, 132; 5th, 158; 6th, 78.

G. V. Smith, for attorney, 1st ward, 103; 2nd, 128; 3rd, 61; 4th, 117; 5th, 149; 6th, 76.

J. L. Beam, for clerk, 1st ward, 128; 2nd, 143; 3rd, 81; 4th, 142; 5th, 165; 6th, 85.

P. F. Harley, for treasurer, 1st ward, 86; 2nd, 109; 3rd, 57; 4th, 95; 5th, 119; 6th, 67. C. D. Best, treasurer, 1st ward, 62; 2nd, 52; 3rd, 25; 4th, 53; 5th, 56; 6th, 20.

A. D. Wolverton, Councilman-at-large, 1st ward, 61; 2nd, 53; 3rd, 41; 4th, 75; 5th, 79; 6th, 44. H. C. Cotton, at-large, 1st, 42; 2nd, 65; 3rd, 24; 4rd, 15; 5th, 48; 6th, 25. D. D. Huddleston, at-large, 1st, 36; 2nd, 42; 3rd, 15; 4th, not returned; 5th, 44; 6th, 16.

J. W. Hooker received 72 votes, L. T. Haynes, 55 and Dr. Dobbs, 22 in the first ward; James Wooley, 15, Wm. Brennand, 46, and E. G. Lowry 28 in the third ward; W. L. Smith, 30, and Felix Filion 53 in the sixth ward.

The vote on the Socialist ticket was not returned to the city clerk, and will not be known until the votes are canvassed.

The vote on the "Cow question" by wards was: For, 34, 38, 40, 62, 83, 100; against, 118, 127, 62, 107, 113, 34.

OFFICIAL COUNTY RETURNS

The official returns for the general election, as canvassed by the county board, are given on page two, this issue.

HOLIDAY GOODS ARRIVING

Schiable & Hutchinson, jewelers, wish to announce the arrival of a big line of handsome hand painted china for the holiday trade. Better go in and have a few pieces laid away before the stock is picked over. There are beautiful cake plates, chop plates, bread and butter plates, celery dishes and salt and pepper shakers, etc., also, a big line of silver ware and cut glass of all kinds. Our stock of clocks, watches and jewelery was never more complete and at prices so surprisingly low. It is always a pleasure to show our goods, so come in whether you care to buy or not.

RETURNED TO ANGELES

John R. Kennard, who moved to Union Bay, B. C., a few years' ago, has returned and will again make Angeles his home.

FORESTRY PLANS THREATENED

Public Lands Petition Signed Upon Insufficient and Misleading Information.

We feel certain that many of those who signed the petition granting permanent rights to the present claimants of lots 16 and 17, block 32, Townsite, did so on entirely inadequate information and were purposely led to do so by misrepresentations, or at least by a very misleading withholding of full information.

Therefore we feel that many who did so sign would like to withdraw their signatures upon fully and correctly understanding the subject, and for that reason we take this opportunity of fully explaining the matter so that all may at least express their preferences intelligently.

The Forestry Department, thru Chief Forester Graves, upon the occasion of his recent visit to our city, assured us that a site was immediately needed for the construction of office and other buildings to serve as the official headquarters of the Forestry Department's administration of the Olympic Peninsula. Port Townsend has a building idle and available; the cities and towns on the south side of the peninsula are our competitors in trying to secure this establishment in their towns because they are well aware that it means business activity, money in circulation and all the incidental advantages which must naturally accrue to the city in which and from which our national government is to disburse from a quarter to a half a million dollars.

This matter was taken up by the Commercial club and after full discussion it was decided that for the good of our city we must not be beaten by Port Townsend or any other town. It was also decided that no injustice must be done any individual, even for the public good. A committee was therefore appointed to confer with the present claimants [illegible] and to arrange for an adjustment which should be fair, equitable and in every way satisfactory to all. The writer personally interviewed one of the claimants and he expressed himself as satisfied with this arrangement. The other claimant was announced at the last meeting of the Club as being willing to settle very advantageously and fairly.

But at that same meeting an entirely new element was injected by interests entirely personal and in no way connected with the common good. Those claiming to represent one of the present claimants, a nonresident claimant, by the way, but who, unfortunately for their cause, did not know that the claimant they professed to represent had already offered a perfectly fair and satisfactory settlement, spoke in behalf of thwarting the government's purpose which is for the general good, simply to avoid the establishment of a precedent which might possibly at an indefinate time in the future react upon one or two who are still maintaining a claim to government lands. Having met with such signal insuccesses at the hands of those properly and fully informed they had originated this petition and took this means of getting a more favorable expression of opinion from those who were not well informed and without the slightest regard for the welfare of Port Angeles as a whole but entirely selfish motives.

The Commercial Club distinctly

LOSES LIFE AT MILL

Mohammedan Laborer Falls from Beam Under Roof; Buried with All Due Ceremony.

Edward Soroff, about 35 years of age, lost his life on Sunday last at Earles mill by falling from a beam under the roof to the floor below. He was sweeping sawdust off the beams and lost his footing. No bones were found broken on the body, but a scar on the right side of his head shows plainly that death was almost instantaneous, his skull being fractured. The body was removed to the Fulmer Undertaking Parlors and was accompanied by a body of twenty Mohammedan brothers, who sat by the body Sunday night and Monday morning, giving the body the customary rights that pertains to their clan. He was buried with the Mussulman rights at the graveyard. As the general custom of this body of Mohammedans is very strict, Mr. Fulmer was not allowed to dig the grave. The Mussulmen dug it themselves and placed the coffin on its side as a final tribute to their brother.

Wednesday, Soroff's brother, accompanied by a priest, arrived from Seattle, and in company with the Mohammedan, of whom some sixty are employed at the mill, held further services at the grave.

THE WEEKLY BULL

OBJECT TO PAPER LITTER

Auxiliary Would Do Away with Election, Dance and Movie Literature.

The regular monthly meeting of the Women's Auxiliary to the Commercial Club was held Tuesday afternoon in the Club room. Reports of various committees were listened to, and plans for improving the sanitary conditions of our city were discussed.

The ladies would like also to evolve some plan to keep the streets in the residence part of the city free from paper and other rubbish with which they are continually littered. It certainly impresses the stranger coming here with the fact that we are utterly lacking in civic pride when we allow such conditions to exist. The school children are responsible for some of the paper, and teachers. as well as parents should try to see that this bad habit is corrected. A little instruction in civic pride is quite as necessary as arithmetic or spelling if we wish to make good citizens of our boys and girls.

If all families would feel responsible for the cleanly condition of the street around their own premises it would help a great deal This problem of a cleaner Port Angeles is one that should interest every one. Let us have some suggestions as how best to solve it.

At the cost of a good many dollars a few years ago, the Port Angeles Reading Club had large zinc garbage cans made and placed at the Central school building and in various places in the down town district. They have been a great help, but as good use has not been made of them as the ladies expected.

The Auxiliary will hold another one of their popular whist tournaments, followed by dancing, Friday evening, November 20th.

PARENT-TEACHERS' MEETING

At the Parent-Teachers' meeting Monday evening, Superintendent White reported on the Educational Association recently held in Tacoma. One of the interesting subjects up for discussion was the changing of the present school system so that the pupil would spend six years, instead of eight in the grades and six years instead of four in high school, and he pointed out the various advantages to be derived from the system, which certainly sounded very plausible. Another interesting subject he spoke of, and one which is being tried out in different schools, is that of having the pupils do their studying as well as reciting at school under the supervision of the instructor who teaches the subject. This has worked out admirable results in some places.

Mrs. Madge Nailor reported on the Tacoma schools she had visited, and of which she couldn't speak too highly, all fine handsome buildings, equipped with everything necessary for the up-to-date modern school. She attended the Parent-Teachers' convention as well as the State Directors' meeting, both proving very interesting. She heard so much discussion of the hot lunches served at various schools at the noon hour, that she brot it up for discussion at the meeting. But the concensus of opinion seemed to be that for various reasons it was not advisable to undertake it at present.

Prof. Hart of the University is expected to be here to speak at the next monthly meeting. The annual membership dues of the Association are 25 cents, and as there has been some expenses connected with the organization all parents and friends interested in this good movement are requested to hand in their quarters.

LADIES' MUSICAL CLUB

The Ladies Musical Club held a very enjoyable and interesting meeting Tuesday afternoon at Mrs. Troy's studio. The attendance was very good and the following musical numbers were given: Piano solos by Mr. Howard Campbell, Vivian Stovel, and Mrs. Stovel; piano and violin duet by Miss McMillan and Mrs. Chester Baker and a vocal solo by Mrs. Conrad Luppen, with violin obligato by Miss McMillan. An interesting paper was read by Mrs. Hickok. The Choral Club held its first meeting Wednesday evening with an attendance of thirty. The time of meeting has been changed from Monday to Wednesday evening to suit Prof. Davis. The class is very enthusiastic and we may expect to hear something fine in a musical way before the winter is over.

DESPONDENT GERMAN KILLS HIMSELF

One of the most mysterious tragedies ever enacted in the city of Port Angeles, was committed on Saturday evening at dusk on the side of a hill, one-half mile from the east end of Fifth street. The victim of his own hands was Anton Beckert, age 50 years, a German by birth, who had been on this side of the world only a short time, boarding up to the time of his death at the home of Mr. Toews. A shotgun, some large logs and slashings left by wood-choppers, were the death and grave of Beckert.

Worried over unknown affairs and being out of work are the causes to which his death is laid. He spoke little English, but was understood to have made threats of killing himself for the last month. Beckert's threats were not considered seriously until Saturday evening, when he grabbed up the gun and ran out of the house, mumbling in German. The sheriff was immediately called and reached Mr. Toews house just as the report of the gun was heard. It was soon after dark, which made it difficult to find the body. After some

TELLS OF BELGIAN CRUELTIES

Mrs. Goldwater Gives Interesting Sidelights on War Conditions in Germany.

Traveling by sea, over waters known to be mined, ready to blow up the ships of the enemy, is not an experience any of us would look forward to with pleasure, but one which many American tourists in Europe had to undergo in order to reach their homes.

One of these tourists was Mrs. Amelia Goldwater, who arrived home hale and hearty last Sunday morning after five months in her native land, Germany. She says there were about 300 passengers aboard the Hamburg liner she returned on and most of them like herself were kept waiting in Holland three weeks for the ship to start. In passing thru the Straits of Dover they barely crawled along, with a large pilot ship closely following, so greatly did they fear danger from the explosion of one of the many mines buried in the water. After they were safely out in the ocean the trip was uneventful save for two births and four deaths which occurred aboard ship.

Mrs. Goldwater reports the Germans not suffering in any way for clothes or provisions, but all well cared for. She says the war broke out just at the harvesting time but the women and children went right into the fields and completed the work the men had to leave to go to fight. Even the school teachers took their pupils out and worked with them in the fields, so that not a potato would go to waste. Prices raised at first and money was scarce but the government stepped in and readjusted matters so that things were running as smoothly as ever.

All factories and tailoring establishments are kept running night and day to supply the demand for uniforms for the soldiers. The daughters and wives of the wealthy, educated classes are acting as nurses, working in the hospitals all day, returning to their homes for meals and turning to [illegible] volunteer nurses sleep. All these volunteers must have means as they have to buy their own uniforms and pay their own car fare going to and from the the hospitals.

Mrs. Goldwater had neices acting as nurses so she visited some of the hospitals. She says all wounded soldiers, whether enemies or not, receive the same care and treatment as the German soldiers. While visiting one of these hospitals, she heard a young man begging the doctor to remove the bandage from his eyes as he was crazy to see day light once more. The doctor told him he must wait a while, and then on the side he told Mrs. Goldwater that he would never see daylight again, as his eyes were destroyed by the Belgian soldiers while he lay wounded on the battlefield. Another one, she saw had had his arms and legs cut off in a similar manner. She said she could tell many other incidents of the atrocious cruelties perpetrated by by the Belgians and which would prove the falsity of many of the newspaper stories in regard to the crimes committed on the Belgians by the Germans. Evidently there are two sides to the story.

She said she witnessed the departure of 93,000 soldiers in one day from the City of Koelen on the Rhine. All the churches and cathedrals were thrown open and before going on the march, the various regiments went for prayer and devotional services. She said it was a beautiful sight to see these handsome young men, so well uniformed, marching with such perfect time to the strain of martial music and it inspired one with enthusiasm and patriotism, until you saw the agonized faces and distress of the mothers, wives and sweethearts who were waving a last farewell. Then you realized what it all meant.

Mrs. Goldwater said all her countrymen felt that the Kaiser was justified in declaring war under the circumstances. She gave the writer to read a copy of the German White Book, which tells "How Russia and her Ruler Betrayed Germany's Confidence and thereby Caused the European War." It contains the original telegrams and notes which passed between the two rulers previous to the declaring of war and gives one a different idea than they get from reading the newspapers and magazines. Germany at least, lays all the blame at the door of the Russia government.

Mrs. Goldwater said home and Port Angeles never seemed quite so good to her as now and that she was indeed glad to be back in the land of her adoption where peace and plenty reign. She had greatly enjoyed her visit in Germany and New York city and hopes when peace is restored that she can visit there again.

Evidently the rank and file of the Socialist party were not in sympathy with the contention of their leaders that the "working men" needed the open saloon.

Now that the cows have been condemned as a nuisance, what of the dogs and chickens? Is there any more reason why a flock of chickens should be allowed to run over one's yard, or that a neighbor's dog should be permitted to make a nuisance of himself, than there is for the property-destroying cow? Let us have a livestock ordinance, to the end that those who need protection may secure it by complaint to the authorities.

We have heard two or three complaints lately of ladies being insulted on our streets while shopping with local merchants. The mere fact of a person's belonging to any particular organization, whether church, lodge, or union, does not necessarily make him a gentleman, and organizations having amongst their membership men who would openly insult women on the streets should see to it that a little weeding out is done before their entire order is brought into disrepute.

And so they are figuring now that excursions will be run over to Victoria for the benefit of the "poor man," and while the saloons of that city will reap a harvest of sheckles, Angeles merchants will continue to carry a long list of credit accounts. As a matter of fact a whole lot of our best business people quietly voted against the saloon, and the man who thinks he is going to be able to do his celebrating in Victoria at the expense of the Angeles business man is reckoning without his host.

C. A. Spinney, down from Seattle this week after a portion of his equipment, expressed his surprise at the big dry vote in Port Angeles. Thru seeing the effects of the saloon upon his employees he had become an advocate of prohibition, but when he used to express his belief last summer, that the [illegible] state would go dry because [illegible] the working men themselves were beginning to realize that they could never get ahead while bucking against the temptation of the open saloon, he could find but few here in Angeles to agree with him. He is wondering where the vote came from—were the drys all women?

Mrs. L. C. Fleming of Lincoln Heights, in calling our attention to the fact that the wet and dry figures in our election table were wrong, the slugs being transposed, so that the dry vote was given as the wet, and vice versa, says that the people of the Sixth Ward have been quite proud of their record—when local option was first voted on and only the men had the ballot, they voted dry, the only ward that did so. "And we women," she continues, "were quite proud of our men. The second time the wets had a majority of two and the women got the blame, but we knew a number of drys who were unavoidably absent. This time we had a larger majority dry than any other ward, and it hurts us to be placed on the wrong side." In view of the fact that the people of the Sixth Ward are almost entirely "working men" and hence presumed, according to the theory advanced by the saloon men, to be in favor of the open saloon, the "poor man's club house," the majority of 38 was indeed surprising and worthy of favorable comment.

Did you vote to make the cow dry?

NONE CAN AFFORD TO NOT CO-OPERATE

The Port Angeles Commercial Club is actually accomplishing useful work for not only the city, but for the whole of Clallam county. This statement cannot be elaborated here, but its confirmation is a simple matter, if there be any who doubt it.

It is accomplishing this work by new and less expensive but more efficient methods. Whereas, members used to contribute from $1 (a very few) to $25, (also a few) to its support; the great majority of really active members contributing from $5 to $10 per month, each member is now paying but $2 per month. Notwithstanding a higher salaried secretary and greater accomplishments, this lessened sum is proving efficient to meet remaining expenses, pay off old debts and leave an unprecedented sum in the treasury.

All these dry facts mean but one thing—that the club is alive. Embraced in this is also a certain indication that with the numerous membership it has a right to expect from a city of our population, all this and much more can be accomplished upon a membership fee of $1 per month, but before this can be done we must have the members.

One of the most frequent replies met with by our membership has been, "I can't afford $2 a month," and this even from influential, well-to-do citizens, the only class of men most useful to the club and the community.

A man judiciously careful of his own resources is usually equally so with a public trust. But is this judicious carefulness in this instance?

If, as in some instances, he is "land poor," who or what can do more to appreciate the value of his property than an active, energetic commercial club, and who within such a body can so well see to his own needs as himself. Instances might be multiplied were it necessary, but "He who [illegible] runs may read."

The fact is that no man with a business, real estate or any interest whatsoever can afford not to be a member of his city's live commercial organization. And if there be any who feel that $2 per month is actually more than they can afford, it's their own fault if they pay more than $1 of the first month or two, because if each one will introduce one new member, only one, it will make the monthly due of $1 a practical working reality.

AN ACTIVE MEMBER

Now that Laurel street is being filled it may be that we will soon see the last of the steep steps leading across the alley by the Leader Department Store. These have been not only an inconvenience to the public and a detriment to business houses on that side of the street, but have been absolutely dangerous as well. Certainly we should have a public official whose express duty it should be to look after such matters.

Mr. Dustman wishes, thru the columns of the Olympic-Leader, to thank the people of Clallam county for their support and to assure them that their expression of confidence is most fully appreciated. While losing by a few votes, it may well be considered a victory when a man on the weaker ticket not only leads the ticket but comes within a few votes of being fourth highest in the field, without regard to politics.

NEWS FROM THE CAPITOL

Bespeaking a fair trial for the prohibition bill and cessation of liquor agitation in the future, Governor Lister has issued the following appeal to citizens of the state:

"The election returns indicate that the prohibition measure has received a majority of not less than 15,000. Regarding the effect on the state as a result of the adoption of the bill, as I view the matter it will be just what the people of the state make it. We believe in the rule of the majority. A majority of the voters of the state have declared in favor of this measure. If all will now accept the decision of the majority, lend a hand in seeing the law enforced and direct our energy to those things which will build up and develop the state, rather than predicting dire disaster as a result of this measure becoming a law, we will materially assist in quickly bringing about the re-arrangement necessary on account of its adoption.

"I believe its opponents will agree with me when I say that business would be injured much more by constant agitation against the law now it has passed, than by accepting it and directing our energies to proper development under the new order of things brought about by its passage.

"While there were differences of opinion expressed by attorneys prior to election day regarding the date the measure would become operative, the intention is shown in the following language of the bill 'This act shall take effect and be in full force and effect from and after the first day of January, 1916.' I believe with language so clear, in a measure voted upon by the people of the state, this will be held to be the law."

Wednesday, November 11, was Admission Day, and marked the twenty-fifth anniversary of Washington's statehood. At the suggestion of Governor Lister, numerous organizations noted the date at their meetings by recounting the progress of the state in the past quarter-century.

Senator Ralph Metcalf of Pierce county, republican, has announced his approval of Governor Lister's plan of preparing a state budget, which will be done for the first time this year. Senator Metcalf will introduce a bill making continuance of this business-like proceedure obligatory upon future administrations.

There were 1,276 accidents, including 20 fatalities, reported to the industrial insurance commmission during the month of October, as compared with 1,498 during the month of October, 1913. The number of accidents for each month of 1914 has been less than the number for the corresponding month of 1913, due in large measure, it is believed, to the state's "Safety First" campaign.

The total number of accidents reported for the 10 months of 1914 has been 12,472 as compared with 14,212 for the same 10 months of 1913.

Unofficial returns from the 39 counties of the state indicate that the political composition of the next legislature will be as follows:

Senate: Republicans, 27; Democrats, 6; Progressives, 8. One vacancy.

House: Republicans, 75; Democrats, 15; Progressives, 6. One nonpartisan.

State Senator W. D. Cotter of Pierce county died last Wednesday. Governor Lister will in the near future issue a proclamation calling for a special election to fill the vacancy. Senator Cotter was a prominent farmer who during the 25 years of his residence in this state had devoted much of his time to public affairs in the vicinity of his home at Puyallup.

Governor Lister has requested Attorney General Tanner to render an official opinion as to the date upon which the prohibition law will become effective.

The anti-employment agency bill, Initiative Measure No. 8, will become effective December 3. After that date it will become unlawful for employment agencies to charge laborers fees, though private agencies still may operate by charging fees to the employers.

The tax commission has proved the first state department to issue its biennial report and copies will be mailed citizens upon request. The report contains interesting statistics showing the increase in state taxes levied up until this year, and also contains the text of a proposed constitutional amendment urged by the commission, which would enable the legislature to reform the state tax system.

It is claimed by The Index, the paper published by the Washington State Reformatory, that seventy per cent of the inmates trace their troubles of the saloon. In view of which fact Mr. Webb's little story, told by a senator of the United States who was addressing a crowd of people who were dedicating a reformatory back East, may prove interesting The senator said: "If you save one boy this place will be worth the money spent." And a woman asked him if one boy was worth a million and a half dollars, to which the senator replied, "I was thinking of my boy." And that made a difference; so if you have a boy perhaps you also think of him sometimes and don't want to see him in a "University of Another Chance;" if you feel that way keep her dry.

THE COUNTY SCHOOLS

A letter from the contest supervisor of the Industrial Exhibit recently held in Tacoma, contains the following: "Thru your interest the teachers of the state and the people of Tacoma saw one of the finest exhibits ever held in the Northwest," and now that the exhibit is over for 1914, it is a good time to begin planning for next year's work. The exhibit from Clallam county was very good but there is no reason why there could not be a great deal larger exhibit in vegetable products. The following letter from Geo. A. Glines, of Winnipeg, who contributed $15 toward prizes for best school exhibits in Clallam county: "I am pleased to hear that the fair just held has awakened an interest in the industrial and agricultural products of Clallam county and I think every effort should be made to get everyone in the county interested in your next fair. As I believe Clallam county has resources second to no other county in the state, in fruit, vegetables, dairy products, timber, minerals, etc., and I hope to see the products of Clallam county, as well as the school exhibits, take a foremost place at the Panama exposition, in San Francisco, to be held next year."

All exhibits except baked goods and butter have been returned to superintendents office and will be sent to the respective owners at once. By request of the Commercial Club of Port Angeles, Arlie Copeland, of Forks, has consented to leave his collection of native woods in the Club rooms in Angeles.

A pamphlet entitled "Suggestions for Community Centers" has been sent out by Superintendent Mrs. Preston. Copies have been sent to the established centers in Clallam county and a few more copies are on hand which will be sent upon request to teachers and school officers.

While there was no contest for the office of county superintendent for the coming term, nevertheless in view of the interest that the people of the county take in educational matters and the importance they attach to the work of the county superintendent, the present incumbent desires to express his thanks and gratification at the large vote he received in the election November 3rd.

At the Teachers' and Parents' meeting held at the Central School, District No. 7, Monday evening, November 9, several important questions were discussed. These questions were suggested chiefly by the work at the W. E. A., which was attended by all the teachers and the secretary of the board of education in Port Angeles. The "Six and Six" plan and the question of home work for High School pupils are timely topics and gives the public a respite from the continual talk about industrial education.

District No. 301, MacCleay, will hold its next meeting next Friday evening, November 13. MacCleay is doing some splendid work along this line.

There are still a large number of books in the circulating library and teachers are welcome to these for their schools.

The special attention of teachers who intend to take the examination is called to the circular recently issued by this office containing the dates of examinations and list of the reading circle books for this year. The next examination occurs December 10, 11 and 12th, 1914.

A three days' institute will be held in Port Angeles, March 31, and April 1st and 2nd, 1915. One of the best members of the present Entertainment Course is scheduled for April 2nd, and will be made a part of the Institute program. Other talent will be announced iater.

The list of words for spelling contests is in course of preparation and will be sent out to the various districts soon.

SECOND HALF PAYMENT

Treasurer Babcock would remind those who have made a first-half payment on taxes that November 30th is the last date for making the second payment. The office would appreciate early attendance to this matter.

ABOUT THE COUNTY

LINCOLN HEIGHTS

The wet weather does not hinder improvements being made on the Heights. Mr. Ackley has a new house on 15th, near E. street. Mr. John Thomas is clearing a lot on 11th and D streets for Miss Brown, one of the Central teachers. The gentleman who bought the J. A. Epperson place is completing the fence around the lot that Mr. Epperson had begun. Mr. J. B. Fleming is having a new roof put on his truck house and Mr. Whitmore has almost finished the leveiling of his west lots.

Mr. Larson and the Sturgiss boy are recovering.

Mrs Harmon Matthews is sick at home and Mrs. Myrtle McRoberts is in the Taylor hospital; Mrs. Conrad is kindly caring for the little ones.

Mr. Chester Tracy, wife and baby, started on Saturday night's boat for their old home in Oklahoma. They were here less than a year and seemed to like the country, but some of their people coaxed them back.

Ernest Harding, wife and baby, went on Tuesday out to the Elwha to visit at his brothers until Thursday.

Vernice Burgman brought to her grand-parents Tuesday morning a nice mess of fish which she had caught.

Mrs. Madison, Sr., was a caller at E. B. Fleming's Tuesday.

Mrs. Frank Pearson, who with her children had been visiting friends in Seattle, returned last week, and Miss Maud Woolworth, formerly well known here, returned with her.

Mrs. Wheeler went to Seattle Tuesday.

DE FUCA

Mr. J. A. Reeve returned Thursday from his visit to Seattle.

Willie Wooding and Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Laurens and family attended the dance at Fairview and had a very pleasant time.

From all appearances, Heuhslein's place was the center of attraction lst Sunday afternoon. There were two autos and three buggies at the gate at one time. The callers were Mr. and Mrs. Lehman and Mrs. Knoll and their families from Sequim, Mr. and Mrs. A. Baar and sons Walter and Adelbert and Mr. H. I. Small from Port Angeles, and Mr. Beck and and friend also from Angeles, besides several friends from the neighborhood.

Mr. and Mrs. Thorpe and Miss Thorpe came out from Angeles to make their home with the boys at the Troy place last Saturday.

Mr. N. Heuhslein, Jr., returned to Angeles Sunday evening after spending a few days visiting his parents.

The Wooding boys are hauling wood down to Mr. Agnew this week.

Mr. M. Burgess was out and called on Mr. Agnew last Thursday.

Miss Minnie Laurens returned Monday from a week's visit with friends in Angeles.

This was birthday week in De Fuca. On Tuesday Mrs. Heuhslein, Mrs. Richards and F. Laurens and all the children called on Mrs. C. A. Laurens to help her celebrate her birthday. Later in the afternoon Mrs. Dan Gasser came out from Angeles, as a birthday surprise and stayed a few days. The next afternoon all the ladies went down to Mrs. Heuhslein's as that was her birthday and had a very pleasant time. Thursday is Sarah Richard's turn on the birthday list, and if it were possible to foretell future events, we might tell you what happened then.

On Tuesday evening several of the neighbors spent a pleasant evening of music at the school house.

Mr. H. Jacobs was up from Fairview to see Mr. Wooding and Mr. C. A. Laurens.

MT. PLEASANT.

Mrs. Harry Fredericks and son, who were visiting at her brother's, Wm. Watts, returned to Angeles Saturday.

Mr. Clark, who was cutting ties for Mr. McLaughlin, returned to Angeles Monday.

Mrs. Ralph Krajewski is visiting with relatives upsound.

Mr. Fox and family moved on the McNutt ranch the latter part of the week, and Mr. Joe Segrist has moved on the Shelpman ranch.

Mr. Vail and sons entertained a merry crowd at dinner Sunday, composed of the Watts, Eacretts and McLaughlin families, Mr. Lozier and Mr. Clark.

Mr. and Mrs. Guy McLaughlin were visitors to Mt Pleasant Sunday afternoon and evening.

Mr. C. A. Hamilton of Port Williams, the Watkins man, arrived in this vicinity Monday noon delivering goods and taking orders for future delivery.

The dance at Mr. Dietsch's Saturday evening was enjoyed by those who were lucky enough to be invited; the crowd was small, but what they lacked in numbers they made up in sociability.

EAST END

From the Press.

Mr. Cowan, one of the lighthouse keepers on Tatoosh island, was here visiting friends last Saturday. Mr. Cowan reports that the heavy winds at Tatoosh recently, blew down the wireless aerials and water washed over the bluff seventy feet.

Dr. W. H. Taylor has sold his office furniture and medical practice here to Dr. H. W. Page of Ashford, Washington, who will locate here permanently in a week or two. Dr. Taylor has a five years' engagement as a surgeon in St. James' hospital, Anking, China, and will leave for China about January 1st.

ELWHA

Thursday, Nov. 5th.

The Priscilla Circle had its meeting this week with Mrs. Leet Elliott. The ladies seem very much interested in this sewing club and are working for its success.

Mr. Williams of Victoria, is spending the week with A. R. Smith and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Pete Sorenson have sold their lease on the Peterson place to A. R. Smith, who expects to move there in a short time.

Mr. Thos. Lauridsen took first prize on the best display of potatoes and second prize on mangels at the fair in Port Angeles.

Mrs. Leet Elliott spent part of the week in town visiting with her parents.

Mrs. E. J. Burns visited last week with her daughters in town.

Goldie MacNamara is visiting at Blue Mountain this week.

E. H. Isabell, Frank Lawrence, and Lewis Isabell were out several days hunting in the mountains.

Grant Humes was down from Geyser Valley Tuesday to act as judge at the election.

Halloween evening all the ghosts of Elwha were summoned to meet at the school house at eight o'clock. They were greeted at the door by a large skull and cross bones lantern made by Mr. Herrick. Next came the ghost march led by Mrs. Burns, and Mrs. MacNamara. The schoolroom was tastefully decorated for the occasion with yellow autumn leaves, black cats, witches and bats. The lamps were shaded with crepe paper of Halloween designs. A rail fence on which were smiling Jack o' Lanterns, formed the black-board border. Later in the evening a supper was served in the dining room.

Mr. W. J. Hoare has done a bit of road engineering recently. He owns six acres of land about six miles south of town and had to cut 1100 feet of road thru second growth timber. He also changed the course of water which for ages has made a veritable sink hole in the bottom of the valley. This water has made a menace of the section road along Krueger's ranch. Mr. Hoare dug 200 feet of ditch 2 feet wide and 2 feet deep to drain this particular spot. The water will hereafter run onto the farmland and prove much more valuable.

BLUE MOUNTAIN

Many are doubtless thinking that the Blue Mountain correspondent should get busy. Right you are. Many a good item of news has been let slip without notice.

First of importance is the change that has taken place.

Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Breckenridge, worthy and long-time residents, have moved to Port Angeles.

The church and Sunday school will miss them as they were regular attendants at all meetings. Before they left us the ladies spent a very pleasant day with Mrs. Breckenridge. Mr. H. C. Breckenridge was thoughtful enough of his country's welfare to come out here and vote.

Mr. Maybery, who has rented the Breckenridge place, moved his family here Friday from the Machenheimer ranch at Lost Mountain. Mr. Maybery is a prosperous young farmer and we are more than glad to welcome such to our community.

The young people are delighted at their increase in numbers which means livlier times.

About two weeks before Mr. and Mrs. Maybery left Lost Mountain, their old neighbors very agreeably surprised them despite Henry's boast to the contrary.

Our people were glad to see and hear Mr. Johnson again. He christened the children of Mr. and Mrs. Maybee, and Mr. and Mrs. Joselyn, and spoke at the school house in the evening.

The mill has completed its order of timber from the railroad. They have had some difficulty in getting the timber delivered.

A team from below came to help haul. Going down the Rupp hill the team became frightened by the breaking of the reach and ran away, bringing up against a telephone pole. The shoulder of one of the horses was crushed in and its neck broken. It died in a few moments.

Blue Mountain has a new society. The ladies meet with one of their number twice a month. They call themselves the Needlecraft.

Miss Mabel Jackson, our teacher, and her brother, Vern, have rented Mrs. Stewarts place.

The club met last Saturday evening after quite a vacation. A good start was made for a prosperous future. Several initiations are expected next month.

Wm. Broughton's birthday was last Sunday and his relatives, the Chas. Lewis family, and the Stevenson household dined with him.

Francis Stevenson, who has been assisting his brother, went back to Elwha Monday.

Miss Goldie McNamara, who has spent the past week with Mrs. Charlie Lewis, has returned home.

A new store is being built at the corner of Fourth and Peabody. The proprietor will sell school supplies and candies, which will prove a real accommodation for the school children.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Stranded.

Mr. Thomas Barcus picked himself up from the bottom of the lifeboat, where he had been violently precipitated by the impact of grounding, blinked and wiped tears of pain from his eyes, solicitously tested his nose and seemed to derive little if any comfort from the discovery that it was not broken, opened his mouth . . . and remembered the presence of a lady.

"Poor Mr. Barcus!" she said gently. "I'm so sorry. Do forget I'm here—and say it out loud!"

Mr. Barcus dropped his hands and dropped his head at the same time.

"It can't be did," he complained in embittered resignation; "the words have never been invented . . ."

In the bows Mr. Law (who had barely saved himself a headlong plunge overboard when the shoal took fast hold of the keel) felt tenderly of his excoriated shins, then, rising, compassed the sea, sky and shore with an anxious gaze.

In the offing there was nothing but the flat, limitless expanse of the nightbound tide, near at hand vaguely silvered with the moonlight, in the distances blending into shadows; never a light or shadowy, stealing sail in that quarter to indicate pursuit.

"Where are we?" he wondered aloud.

"Ask me an easy one," Barcus replied; "somewhere on the south shore of the cape—unless somebody's been tampering with the lay of this land. That's a lighthouse over yonder."

Alan took soundings from the bows.

"Barely two feet," he announced, withdrawing the oar from the water, "and eel-grass no end."

"Oh!" Barcus ejaculated with the accent of enlightenment; and leaving the motor, turned to the stern, over which he draped himself in highly undecorative fashion while groping under water for the propeller.

"That's the answer," he repeated; "there's a young bale of the said eel-grass wrapped round the wheel. Which, I suppose, means I've got to go overboard and clear it away."

Like Mr. Law, he wore neither shoes nor other garments that could be more damaged by salt water than they had been—but only shirt, trousers and a belt.

"If you've nothing better to do, my critical friend," he observed as he stooped to hack and tear at the mass of weed embarrassing the propeller, "you might step out and give us a trial shove. Don't strain yourself—just see if you can move her."

The boat budged not an inch—but Mr. Law's feet did, slipping on the treacherous mud bottom with the upshot of his downfall; with a mighty splash he disappeared momentarily beneath the surface—and left his temper behind him when he emerged.

As for Mr. Barcus, he suffered like loss within five minutes; when, with much pains and patience having freed the wheel, he climbed aboard and sought to restart the motor. After a few affecting coughs it relapsed into stubborn silence.

Studious examination at length brought out the fact that the gasoline tank was empty.

"Not so much as a smell left," Barcus reported.

Dug Into His Money Belt.

"It's no use," he conceded at length. "We're here for keeps."

"Why not wade ashore?" Rose Trine suggested mildly from the place she had taken in the stern in order to lighten the bows. "It isn't far—and what's one more wetting?"

"That's the only sensible remark that's been uttered by any party to this lunatic enterprise since you hove within earshot of me, Mr. Law," said Mr. Barcus. "Respectfully submitted."

"The verdict of the lower court stands approved," Alan responded gravely.

"But there's no sense in Miss Trine wading," Barcus suggested. "We're web-footed as it is, and she's too tired."

"Well, what then?"

"We can carry her, can't we?"

CHAPTER XIX.

"Gee!" he grunted frankly, when after a toilsome progress from the boat, Rose at length slipped from the seat formed by the clasped hands of the two men. "And it was me who suggested this!"

The girl responded with a quiet laugh of the most natural effect imaginable—until it ended in a sigh, and without the least warning she crumpled upon herself, and would have fallen heavily, in a dead faint, but for Alan's quickness.

"Good Lord!" Barcus exclaimed, as Alan gently lowered the inert body of the girl to the sands. "And to think I didn't understand she was so nearly all in—chaffing her like that! I'd like to kick myself!"

"Don't be impatient," Alan advised grimly; "I'm busy just at present, but . . . Meantime, you might fetch some water to revive her."

It was an order by no means easy to fill; Barcus had only his cupped hands for a vessel, and little water remained in them by the time he had dashed from the shallows back to the spot where Rose lay unconscious, while the few drops he did manage to sprinkle into her face availed nothing toward rousing her from the trance-like slumbers of exhaustion into which she passed from her fainting fit. . . .

In the end Alan gave up the effort. "She's all right," he reported, releasing the wrist whose pulse he had been timing. "She fainted, right enough, but now she's just asleep—and needs it, God knows! It would be kinder to let her rest, at least until I see what sort of a reception that lighthouse is inclined to offer us."

"You'll go, then?" Barcus inquired. "I'd just as lief, myself . . ."

"No; let me," Alan insisted. "It's not far—not more than a quarter of a mile. And she'll be safe enough here, in your care, the little time I'm gone."

Barcus nodded. His face was drawn and gray in the moon-glare. "Thank God!" he breathed brokenly, "you're able. I'm not."

He sat down suddenly and rested his head on his knees. "Don't be longer than you can help," he muttered thickly.

He had come to the headland of the lighthouse itself before the ground began to shelve more gently to the beach; and was on the point of addressing himself to the dark and silent cottage of the lightkeeper when he paused, struck by sight of what till then had been hidden from him.

The promontory, he found, formed the eastern extremity of a wide-armed if shallow harbor where rode at moorings a considerable number of small craft—pleasure vessels assorted about equally with fishing boats. And barely an eighth of a mile on, long-legged wharves stood knee-deep in the water, like tentacles flung out from the sleepy little fishing village that dotted the rising ground—a community of perhaps two hundred dwellings.

Nor was this all—even as Alan hove in view of the village he heard a series of staccato snorts, the harsh tolling of a brazen bell, the rumble of a train pulling out from a station. And then he saw its jewel-string of lights flash athwart the landscape and vanish as its noise died away diminuendo.

Where one train ran another must. He need only now secure something to revive Rose, help her somehow up the beach, and in another hour or two, of a certainty, they would be speeding northwards, up the cape, toward Boston and the land of law and order.

Such thoughts as these, at least, made up the texture of his hopes; the outcome proved them somewhat too presumptuous. He jogged down a quiet village street and into the railroad station just as the agent was closing up for the night.

A surly citizen, this agent, ill-pleased to have his plans disordered by chance-flung strangers. He greeted Alan's breathless query with a grunt of ingrained churlishness.

"Nah," he averred, "they ain't no more trains till mornin'. Can't y' see I'm shuttin' up?"

"But surely there must be a telegraph station—"

"You bet your life they is—right here in this depot. An' I'm shuttin' it up, too."

"Has the operator gone for the night?"

"He's going. I'm the op'rator. No business transacted after office hours. Call raound at eight o'clock tomorrow mornin'. Now if you'll jest step out of that door, I'll say g'd-night to you."

"But I must send a telegram," Alan protested. "I tell you, I must. It's a matter of life and death."

"Sure, young feller. It always is—after business hours."

"Won't you open up again—"

"I tell you, no!"

In desperation Alan rammed a hand into his trousers pocket. "Will a dollar influence your better judgment?" he suggested shrewdly.

"Let's see your dollar," the other returned with no less craft—open incredulity informing his countenance.

And, surely enough, Alan brought forth an empty hand.

"Make a light," he said sharply. "My money's in a belt round my waist. Open your office. You'll get your dollar, all right."

"All right," he grumbled, reopening the door of the telegraph booth and making a second light inside. "There's blanks and a pencil. Write your message. It ain't often I do this—but I'll make an exception for you."

Alan delayed long enough only to make a few inquiries, drawing out the information that, for one who had not patience to wait the morning train northbound, the quickest way to any city of importance was by boat across Buzzard's bay to New Bedford.

Boats, it was implied, were plentiful, readily to be chartered.

A time-table supplied all other needful advice. Alan wrote his message swiftly.

Addressed to Digby, his man of business in New York, it required that gentleman to arrange for a motor-cor to be held in waiting on the waterfront of New Bedford from 3:00 a. m. until called for in the name of Mr. Law, as well as for a special train at Providence, on similar provisions.

Two Men Shadowed Him.

pening he had gone over the stern and had involuntarily disarmed himself as well.

The other two men made a sad business of attempting to overpower Mr. Barcus. In less than a minute they were both overboard.

"And just for this," Alan said before getting out of earshot—"I'm going to treat my party to a joy-ride in your pretty powerboat."

He concluded this speech abruptly as Barcus brought them up under the quarter of the power cruiser.

Within two minutes the motor was spinning contentedly, the mooring had been slipped, and the motorboat was heading out of the harbor.

Within five minutes she had left it well astern and was shooting rapidly westward, making nothing of the buffets of a very tolerable sea kicked up by the freshening southwesterly wind.

"My friend," observed Alan, "as our acquaintance ripens I am more and more impressed that neither of us was born to die a natural death, whether abed or at the hands of those who dislike us; but rather to be hanged as common pirates."

"You have the courage of ignorance," Barcus replied coolly; "if you'll take the trouble to glance astern I promise you a sight that will move you to suspend judgment for the time being."

At this Alan sat up with a start.

Back against the loom of the Elizabeth islands through which they had navigated while he nodded, shone the milk-white sails of an able schooner.

Sheets all taut and every inch of canvas fat with the beam wind, she footed it merrily in their wake—a silver jet spouting from her cutwater.

CHAPTER XX.

Hell-Fire.

But by this stage in his history Mr. Law had arrived at a state of mind immune to surprise at the discovery that he had once more failed to elude the vigilance and pertinacity of the woman who sought his life.

He viewed the schooner with no more display of emotion than resided in narrowing eyelids and a tightening of the muscles about his mouth.

"Much farther to go?" he inquired presently, in a colorless voice.

"At our present pace—say, two hours."

"And will that enable us to hold our own?"

"Just about," Barcus allowed, squinting critically at the chase; "she's some footer, that schooner; and this is just the wind she likes best."

"How much lead have we got?"

"A mile or so—none too much."

"Anything to be done to mend matters?"

"Nothing—but pray, if you remember how."

In the end they made it by a narrow margin. The face of Judith Trine was distinctly revealed by the chill gray light of early dawn to those aboard the power cruiser as she swept up through the reaches of New Bedford harbor and aimed for the first wharf that promised a fair landing on the main waterfront of the city.

There was neither a policeman nor a watchman of any sort in sight.

Nor was there, for all his hopes and prayers, based on the telegram to Digby, a sign of a motor car.

Still, not much of the street was revealed. The docks on either hand were walled and roofed, cutting off the view.

If they ran for it, they must surely be overhauled. Something must be done to hinder the crew of the schooner from landing.

"Here!" he cried sharply to Barcus. "You take Rose and hurry to the street and find that motor-car. I know she's there. Digby never failed me yet!"

"But you—"

"Don't waste time worrying about me. I'll be with you in three shakes. I'm only going to put a spoke in Judith's wheel. I've got a scheme!"

As for his scheme—he had none other than to give them battle, to sacrifice himself if need be, to make sure the escape of Rose.

Sheer luck smiled on him to this extent, that in turning his eye lighted on a four-foot length of stout, three-inch scantling, an excellently formidable club.

THE TREY O' HEARTS

But now, though he was all unconscious of the fact, he went no more alone.

His shadow in the moonlight kept him company upon the sands; and above, on the edge of the bluffs, another shadow moved on parallel course and at a pace sedulously patterned after his.

He found his sweetheart and his friend much as he had left them, with this difference—that Mr. Barcus now lay flat on his back and snoring lustily.

He was wakened quickly enough, however, by Alan's news.

But when it was the turn of Rose—they faltered. She lay so still, betrayed her exhaustion so patently in every line of her unconscious posture, as well as in the sharp pallor of her face upturned to the moon, that it seemed scarcely less than downright inhumanity to disturb her.

None the less, it had to be done. Alan hardened his heart with the reminder of their urgent necessity, and eventually brought her to with the aid of a few drops of brandy.

Between them, they helped her up the beach, past the point, and at length to the door of the hotel, where—reanimated by the mere promise of food—Rose disengaged their arms and entered without more assistance; while Barcus was deterred from treading her heels in his own famished eagerness, by the hand of Alan falling heavily upon his arm.

"Wait!" the latter admonished in a half-whisper. "Look there!"

Barcus followed the direction of his gesture—and was transfixed by the sight of a rocket spearing into the night-draped sky from a point invisible beyond the headland of the lighthouse.

The two consulted one another with startled and fearful eyes.

As with one voice they murmured one word: "Judith!" To this Alan added gravely: "Or some spy of hers!"

Then rousing, Alan released his friend, with a smart shove urging him across the threshold of the hotel.

"Go on," he insisted, "join Rose and get your supper. I'll be with you as soon as I can arrange for a boat. Tell her nothing more than that—that I thought it unwise to wait until everybody was abed before looking round."

He turned to find his landlord approaching from the direction of the hotel barroom. And for the time it seemed that the wind of their luck must have veered to a favoring quarter; for the question was barely uttered before the landlord lifted a willing voice and hailed a fellow townsman idling nearby.

"Hey, Jake—come here!"

Introduced as Mr. Breed, Jake pleaded guilty to ownership of the fastest and stanchest power-cruiser in the adjacent waters, which he was avariciously keen to charter.

They observed haste religiously; within ten minutes they stood upon a float at the foot of a flight of wooden steps down the side of the town wharf, while the promised rowboat of Mr. Breed drew in, at most leisurely pace, to meet them.

Aboard and away from the wharf, the burden of Alan's solicitude seemed to grow lighter with every squeal of the greaseless oarlocks, with every dip and splash of the blades which, wielded by a crew of villainous countenance, brought them nearer the handsome motorboat which Mr. Breed designated as his own. It was not until Alan looked up suddenly to find Mr. Breed covering him with a revolver of most vicious character that he had the least apprehension of any danger nearer than the offing, where Judith's schooner might be lurking, waiting for its prey to come out and be devoured.

"I'll take that money-belt of yours, young feller," Mr. Breed announced, "and be quick about it—not forgetting what's in your trousers pocket!"

In the passion of his indignation Alan neglected entirely to play the game by the rules. The indifference he displayed toward the weapon was positively unprofessional — for he knocked it aside as if it had been nothing more dangerous than a straw. And in the same flutter of an eyelash he launched himself like a wildcat at the throat of Mr. Breed.

Before that one knew what was happening—

But soon, disarmed, his case was desperate—and there were two already safe upon the dock and others madly scrambling up to reinforce them.

Wildly he cast about for some substitute weapon, he leaped toward a small pyramid of little but heavy kegs, and seizing one, swung it overhead and cast it full force into the midriff of his nearest enemy; so that this one doubled up convulsively, with a sickish grunt, and vanished in turn over the end of the wharf.

His fellow followed with less injury. But Alan had no time to wonder whether the man had tripped and thrown himself in his effort to escape a second hurtling keg, or had turned coward and fled. It was enough that he had returned, precipitately and heavily, to the schooner.

The keg, meeting with no resistance, pursued him even to the deck, where the force of its impact split its seams.

None of the combatants, however, Alan least of all, noticed that the powder that filtered out was black and coarse. Alan, indeed, had only the hazlest notion that they were powder-kegs he used as ammunition. That they were heavy and hurt when they collided with human flesh and bone was all that interested him.

In the same breath he heard a friendly voice shout warning far up the dock, and knew that Barcus was coming to his aid.

A glance over-shoulder, too, discovered the cause of the warning; two men who had thus far escaped his attentions were maneuvering to fall upon him from behind. The bound required to evade them brought him face to face with Judith as she landed on the dock.

"Oh," she cried, "I hate you, I hate you—"

"So you've said, my dear, but—"

His final words were not audible even to himself. In his confidence (now that Barcus was taking care of the others) and his impatience with the woman, and in his perhaps unworthy wish to demonstrate conclusively how cheap he held her, Alan had tossed the pistol over the end of the wharf.

It was an old-fashioned weapon, and the force with which it struck the deck released the hammer.

Instantly the .44 cartridge blazed into the open head of a broken powder keg.

And with a roar like the trump of doom and a mighty gust of flame and smoke the decks of the schooner were riven and shattered; her masts tottered and fell . . .

CHAPTER XXI.

Anticlimax.

Alan came to himself supported by Barcus—his senses still reeling from the concussion of that thunderbolt which he had so unwittingly loosed—the cloud of sulphurous smoke and yet dissipated by the wind.

Judith lay at his feet, stunned; and round about other figures of men insensible, if not, for all he could say, dead.

And then Barcus was hustling him unceremoniously down the wharf.

"Come! Come!" he rallied Alan. "Pull yourself together and keep a stiff upper lip. Rose is waiting in the car, and if you don't want to be arrested you'll stir your stumps, my son! That explosion is going to bring the worthy burghers of New Bedford buzzing round our ears like a swarm of hornets!'

His prediction was justified even before it was made; already the nearby dwellings were vomiting half-clothed humanity; already a score of people were galloping down toward the head of the wharf; and in their number a policeman appeared as if by magic.

And while the man hesitated Alan grabbed him by the shoulder, threw him bodily from the car, dropped into his seat, cried a warning to Rose, and threw in the clutch. The machine responded without a jar; they were a hundred feet distant from the scene of the accident before Alan was fairly settled in his place.

As he grew more and more calm, he congratulated himself on having drawn an excellent car in the lottery of chance. It was light, but the motor ran famously, and if not capable of a racing pace it would serve his ends as speedily as was consistent with reasonable care for the life of the woman he loved.

Yet his congratulations were premature; they were not ten minutes out of the environs of the city when Rose left her seat and knelt behind his, to communicate the intelligence that they were already being pursued.

A heavy touring car, she said it was, driven by a man, a woman in the seat by his side—Judith the latter, the man an old employe of her father's by the name of Marrophat.

Marrophat!

Alan remembered that one.

He could only trust in his skill as a driver, and skill is the lesser factor in such a race.

They could overtake the fugitives practically when they would.

But for some weird, incomprehensible reason they chose to hang a certain distance in the rear, a distance that could readily be bridged by two minutes of furious driving.

Why?

In the succeeding quarter-hour the calmness of fatalism became Alan's. They were biding their time for some secret and fatal purpose. The blow was predestined to fall, but cruelly deferred.

For his own part, he drove like an exceptionally cunning madman. . . .

And then, quite clearly, he recognized the time and the place and the character of the road that lay before him as the car sped like a dragon-fly down a slight grade.

From the bottom of the grade it swung away in a wide, graceful curve, bordered for some distance by railroad tracks on a slightly lower level.

He had guessed the fiendish plan of the other driver only too truly.

As they approached at express speed the stretch where the road paralleled the tracks Alan sought to hug the left-hand side of the road, but in vain.

Roaring, with its muffler cut out, the pursuing car swept up and baffled him, bringing its right forward wheel up beside the left rear wheel of his car, then more slowly forging up until, with its weight, bulk and superior power, it forced him inch by inch to the right, toward the tracks, until his right-hand wheels left the road and ran on uneven turf, until the left-hand wheels as well lost grip on the road metal, until the car began to dip on the slope to the tracks.

He heard the far hoot-toot of a freight locomotive . . .

There followed a maniac moment, when the world was upside down. Alan's car slipped and skidded, swung sideways with frightful momentum toward the railroad tracks, caught its wheels against the ties, and . . .

The sun swung in the heavens like a ball on a string. There was a crash, a roar . . . There was nothing—oblivion . . .

The car had turned turtle, pinning Rose and Alan beneath it.

"Alan!" she gasped. "You are not killed?"

"No—not even much hurt, I fancy," he replied. "And you?"

"Not much—"

The deep-throated roar of the locomotive bellowing danger silenced him. He closed his eyes.

Then abruptly the weight was lifted from his chest. He saw a man dragging Rose from under the machine, and saw that the man was Marrophat. And almost immediately someone lifted his head and shoulders, caught him with two hands beneath his arm pits and drew him clear of the machine.

And the face of his rescuer was the face of Judith Trine.

The crash he had expected, of the car being crumpled up by the oncoming locomotive, did not follow.

As he scrambled to his feet, his first glance was up the track, and discovered the train slowing to a halt.

His next was one of wonder for the countenance of Judith Trine as she stood, at a little distance, regarding him; her look almost illegible, a curious compound of passions coloring it—relief, regret, hatred, love . . .

His third glance descried beyond her the figures of Marrophat carrying Rose in his arms, stumbling as he ran toward his car on the highroad.

He moved precipitately to pursue, but found his way barred by Judith.

"No!" she cried violently. "No, you shall not—!"

Her hand sought the grip of a revolver that protruded from her pocket.

With a short, hysterical gasp, he began to laugh.

"What!" he taunted her—"again?"

"Think what you like!" she cried in a frenzy. "You saved me once—now I spare you. We're quits. But next time—"

"O—rot!" he interjected. "You will never have the courage to pull that trigger when I'm helpless in your hands!"

The Face of Judith Was Distinctly Revealed.

The hot blood mantled her exquisite face like red fire. She caught her breath with a sob, then flung wildly at him:

"Well, if you must know—it's true. I can't bring myself to kill you. I would to God I could. But I can't. For all that, you shall die—I could not save you if I would! And this I promise you—you shall never see Rose again before you die!"

And while he stood gaping, she swung from him and ran, quickly covering the little distance between him and the car.

As she jumped into this and dropped down upon the seat beside her half-conscious sister, Marrophat swung the car away.

It vanished in a dust-cloud as a throng of railroad employes surrounded and assailed him with clamorous questions.

ORDERS LINE TO REDUCE FARES TO PORT ANGELES

The public service commission yesterday established uniform single and round trip fares between Seattle and Port Angeles after a hearing in which the Port Angeles Transportation Company, operating the steamer City of Angeles, entered a petition against the Puget Sound Navigation Company, operating the steamers Sol Duc, Sioux, Waialeale and Bellingham. The passenger rate was fixed for all steamers at $1.50 one way, and $2.50 a round trip.

In its prayer the Port Angeles Transportation Company recited that on the steamer Sioux, operating on daily schedule, on a closer competitive basis than the other rival steamers, the $1.50 and $2.50 rate was in force, but that on the steamer Sol Duc, Waialeale and Bellingham, $2 one way and $3.50 round trip was the fixed rate.

Charles A. Reynolds, chairman of the commission, ruled the lower rate was just and equitable, and fixed a uniform rate. The petitioner asked that the commission also make the schedule of the companies, but Commissioner Reynolds declared this was outside of the jurisdiction of the commission.—P.I.

Bring your catalogue with you, select your harness and we will furnish you a duplicate at the same price, minus the freight. Isn't that fair enough? Come and see Nicholson & Meredith about it at their Harness Shop on the Peoples' Wharf.

W. Edgar Graham, eldest son of Street Superintendent Graham, and well-known thru long residence here, was elected at the recent election as State Senator of Ada county, to the Idaho State Legislature. Mr. Graham was elected on the Progressive ticket, with practically all of the Republican ticket winning out, which speaks volumes for his popularity. The district includes the city of Boise, Idaho, and a large and densly populated country. Speaking of the election and giving a fine two-column picture of Mr. Graham, the Boise News says his election proved a complete rout of the Republican candidate, being overwhelming, almost unanimous. The many friends of Mr. Graham in this city who know his sterling qualities will rejoice with him in his success. Mr. Graham is in charge of the Anderson Company's chain of Golden Rule stores in Idaho, with headquarters in Boise.

TO THE VOTERS OF CLALLAM COUNTY

I desire to express my appreciation of the splendid support given me at the General Election, November 3, which resulted in my election to County Treasurer.

It shall be my aim during my term of office, to give the public perfect service in this department and at all times to give just and impartial treatment to all.

Yours sincerely,
HERBERT H. WOOD.
