THE TOWNSEND ROAD.

Bonds of the Port Townsend Southern Placed.

PORT ANGELES RAILWAY

The Commencement of the Port Townsend Southern Means the Same for the Angeles Southern—All Ready to Commence Work.

Private dispatches received by parties in Angeles from Port Townsend give very favorable accounts of the Port Townsend Southern railroad, whose bonds have been placed in the East, on account of which Port Townsend is in a state of rejoicing.

The prospect of having work commenced immediately has caused the people of that city to lay aside their gloomy aspect, to believe that at last the dawn of an era of railroad progress is breaking for them.

The fate of the Port Angeles Southern railroad is wholly dependent upon that of the Port Townsend Southern, as without its completion, the Port Angeles Southern would have no Eastern connection. The citizens of this county who have subscribed liberally to this road, have been assured upon the best authority that as soon as work should be commenced upon the Port Townsend road, this company would immediately commence the building of the road which is to make this city.

The directors of the Port Angeles Southern have every detail of the work in readiness to begin operation, and are only waiting for our neighbors to take the initiatory step, when they will follow with a degree of alacrity that will prove a most comfortable sight to the friends of the road in Angeles.

Those of our citizens who have heretofore borne the burden of greatest doubt regarding the building of the Angeles Southern now admit that the dream seems most likely to be realized, and in regard to the news received from Port Townsend their doubts have been dispelled, and the road wears all the habiliments of certainty.

Good news is like trouble, never coming singly, but in batallions, and in the wake of such favorable reports from the railroad, a few of our enterprising citizens are rejoicing in a rich find of coal within a few miles of the city, upon which the work of development is being vigorously prosecuted. The prospectors are very reticent regarding the location of their find, which is in itself the very best guarantee of their faith in the importance of their discovery. Specimens from their vein have been shown to but few, and publicity has been avoided as much as possible, but those who have been so favored, have been unanimous in pronouncing it a fine quality of bituminous coal.

The Tacoma News in refering to the Seattle campaign says:

A central figure from start to finish has been James Hamiltom Lewis, a young Southerner of fiery eloquence who has never failed to excite the greatest enthusiasm wherever he has spoken throughout the entire campaign. Short of statue, of a nervous temperament, a penetrating eye that speaks with the enthusiasm of a zealot, of faultless attire, he is a man who if he were of less forceful character and less earnest of effort and truth of purpose would be called a dandy. But in the man himself is lost all thought of scrupulous neatness of his personal attire. His shiny silk hat excites no derisive comment as it would from a more pretentious person. His style of beard, parted in the middle, and his dapper neatness does not in any way detract from his popularity. He speaks with the directness and force of a trained mind. and with the precision and assurance of a man sure of his facts and of the correctness of his conclusions; logical, eloquent and fearless, he has excited wherever he has lifted his voice the greatest enthusiasm and has done as much as Ronald to win the great battle.

Bandits of Mexico.

Arthur T. Williams, a Chicago tourist traveling in Mexico, was killed and robbed by bandits in the State of Oaxaca. He left the City of Mexico January 29, intending to visit the Nitla ruin and other places of interest. Nothing was heard of him until his remains were found in a canyon near Tehucan The body was conveyed to Puebla, where it was interred. and where, according to Mexican law, it must remain for a period of five years before removal will be permitted.

Horrors in a Coal Mine.

A frightful disaster occurred at the Anderlues collery, near Brussels, on the 11th inst., by which nearly 300 miners were entombed, the explosion apparently closing all avenues of escape. Of this number forty escaped by means of second shaft, and sixteen others were rescued in a fatally injured condition.

AT THE CAPITOL,

WASHINGTON, March 7, 1892.

Mr. Harrison is engaged in engineering another gigantic war scare, with the same old object in view; but as Secretary Blaine is having a fight with the grip, the little man in the White House is trying to run the machine alone, and there is danger that it may not work as it did in the Chilean business; it certainly will not if similar ultimatum buncom is used by Mr. Harrison. Details are scarce as to why this country is in the great danger with Great Britain that the administration people say it is. All that is known is that Lord Salisbury has notified the department of state that he approved of the arbitration treaty that was signed by Mr. Blaine and Sir Julian Pauncefote last Monday, but that he declined to renew the modus vivendi for the coming sealing season in the Bering sea, and suggested in lieu thereof a close season within thirty miles of Pribylof island.

There is no booming of cannon or sounding of the charge in that, so far as an ordinary folk can see or hear, but it was enough to bring Mr. Harrison tearing home from his hunting trip and to cause him to call his cabinet hurridly together for a night meeting, which was of itself enought to start the most sensational stories agoing over the newspaper special wires, and the hints dropped by those close to Mr. Harrison, of impending danger to the American Eagle, did the rest in a manner that was probably higher pleasure to that gentleman; but now that he has his war scare fairly on its feet, what will he do with it?

Do Treasury officers make a practice of withholding payment of contracts and other public expenditures between the middle and last of the month, in order to make a better showing than actually exists, in the monthly statement issued at the close of business on the last day of the month? Evidently Representtive Butler, of Iowa, believes there is something in the charge that they do, for he has offered a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for a detailed statement of the requisitions for money for the public service presented to the Treasury between Feb. 15 and 29, and of payments made on the same prior to March 1.

The legalizing of his "counted quorum" by the Supreme Court so puffed up the ex-Czar with impudence and conceit that even the patience of so even-tempered a man as Speaker Crisp was completely exhausted. and the Maine man found himself being artistically flayed by the Speaker, to whom he had been trying to dictate. And the general verdict, joined in by many republicans, is that it "served him right."

The anti-Harrison republicans are somewhat at sea as to whom to take up for a candidate, and the names that are constantly being put forward in that connection are but feelers of the public pulse. The latest feeler is in favor of J. S. Clarkson, chairman of the Republican national committee, the man who was backed by Quay and the entire national committee for a place in Mr. Harrison's cabinet, and yet was most pre-emptorily turned down. There is little doubt Mr. Clarkson would take great pleasure in taking the nomination away from Mr. Harrison, if he could; but Mr. Clarkson's mental caliber is hardly large enough to make him a Presidential nominee, even of the Republican party.

The House Committee on Appropriations may decide to abolish two entire divisions of the Treasury department, those on Public Moneys and Loans and Currency, because the work done by them is but a duplicate of what is done by two divisions of the Treasurer's office. All that is necessary to abolish them is to leave them out of the annual appropriation bill upon which the committee is now at work.

Although the Pension Office investigation has just begun to get into the interesting stage, It has already been shown pretty conclusively that things are not being run as they should be. It has been acknowledged by official witnesses that men recommended for dismissal, for cause, have not only been kept in office, but actually promoted; it has been acknowledged that the private secretary of Assistant Secretary Chandler has regurlerly visited the Pension Office to push the claims represented by a certain attorney, and that an employe who feloniously broke the lock of the desk of one of his superior officers in order to see some papers therein was afterwards promoted. And there is more and worse to come. Mr. Enloe has introduced a bill for the protection of witnesses in the employ of the Government, which if it becomes a law, as it should, will add much important testimony which otherwise will not be obtained in this investigation.

Three appropriation bills passed in in one week. Where is the man who accused the majority of the House of being slow?

Fred Douglass has been selected by the government of Hayti as the representative of that country at the World's Fair.

GETTYSBURG HOTEL.

A Big Celebration at the Opening.

THREE LOGGING CAMPS.

A Small Section of Clallam County Rich in Timber and Yielding One Hundred Thousand Feet Per Diem—Some Enterprising Firms.

Gettysburg presented a gay scene last Friday evening, when the settlers from far and near gathered themselves together at that point to celebrate the opening of the new hotel. Boat after boat dischargd its freight of merry-makers and all the tributary country, from Port Crescent to Deep creek, sent a delegation to represent their community at the festivities.

When the music began about 150 people were present. Set after set was formed upon the floor of the dining and receptions rooms. and "joy was unconfined" from 9 o'clock in the evening until broad daylight, when the weary feet, declined to obey any further demands made by the inspiring strains of the violins.

An elegant supper was served about midnight, but the dance stopped not for such a cause; while some were eating others were dancing and the occasion proved a gala day for Gettysburg, which never before received so many visitors.

Gettysburg has for two years been a very important point upon the straits and is probably one of the busiest towns in the state. The postoffice was established about two years ago, prior to which time the settlers were compelled to go to Port Crescent for their mail and provisions. R. N. Getty the proprietor of the ranch, which lies along the straits, and where the tides have formed a spit which with about 300 feet of a breakwater forms a very snug little harbor, where logs are boomed and sent to all parts of the coast. The industry of logging in connection with the large amount of good timber land in the immediate vicinity has caused a great deal of travel into Gettysburg, which has assumed such proportions that Mr. Getty deemed it necesssary to erect a larger building, and now there stands upon the beach a fine structure containing twelve rooms, where the weary logger, homeseeker or traveler may be supplied with bed and board equal to any in the state.

The postoffice was given the name of the first settler upon the spit, R. N. Getty, who for years has been engaged in logging upon the Straits, and who came from the historic Gettysburg, Pa., and to that place, made memorable as having been the scene of one of the most terrible battles of the civil war, R. N. Getty's great-grandfather gave his name.

Hall & Bishop have leased the logging privileges at Gettysburg, and now have two crews of twenty men each busily at work, who will cut from 40,000 to 50,000 feet of lumber per day. This firm has purchased much of the timber in township 31, north range 9 west, and their timber belt is considered to be equal to any in the state. Two teams are constantly drawing logs onto the landing, and two skidways are being carried back farther South day by day, and will penetrate the fine timber of township 30, in the same range.

VanAllen & Myers, another logging firm, have opened a camp at the mouth of Lyre river, and are employing a crew of twenty-five men, working along both banks of the river.

Peter Mohndick conducts another camp two miles farther west, and employs a crew of twenty men, and will cut from 20,000 to 30,000 feet per day.

These three camps are tributary to Gettysburg, where they receive their mail, and the adjacent country is well filled with the very best class of settlers. During the coming season a million feet of logs will be towed away from this section every ten days.

The Creator's Mistake.

When the creator made this little terrestrial ball of ours he so constructed it that while part of it produced date and fig, another produced only corn and wheat. That while some parts of it was covered with heavy forests other parts consisted of treeless prairies.

Over 1800 years after he had finished his good work and pronounced it well done, come the Republicans who declare that the creator, made a mistake, that he forgot to put a wall around the United States to prevent his fool creatures here from trading with those barbarous Russians. That it is not right to help those creatures by trading with them. That the proper way to take care of those people is to injure them all you can by closing the markets of the world against them and when they come down to starvation donate them half a million dollars of our people's money.—Snohomish Democrat.

A Lost Art.

A Vienna glass manufacturer claims to have produced a substitute for glass, which contains all the properties for which glass is valuable, and possesses the greater advantages of being pliable and to a great degree is infrangible.

G. Diebel, a well known caterer of New Haven, Conn., is being sued by C. M. Chappell, a colored waiter, for $10,000,000. Chappell made a contract February 15 to work for Deible as waiter for 1 cent for the first day and to be doubled each succeeding day, and now Chappell claims $10,000,000

A terrible explosion occured in the Revenue tunnel near Ouray, Col., by which two men were instantly killed, two injured seriously, one of whom will die. The explosion was from fifteen holes all charged with powder, which was caused to ignite by the heat imparted to the rock by drilling.

On an estate near Port of Spain, Trinidad, a coolie farm hand suspected his wife of intimacy with a white man, and when accused of infidelity she fled from his house. By numerous presents he induced her to accompany him fishing, where he killed her, and cut the body up, which was used for fish bait.

A negro girl 15 years old living near Rayville, La., became offended at the actions of a colored man employed on the same plantation, and put rat poison into the family coffee pot. Nine persons drank the concoction and all came near dying. A party started to take the girl to jail at Rayville, but had not proceeded far before some masked men overtook it, and strung the girl up to a limb.

An old farmer in Morgan county, Indiana, was busy in his clearing some years ago, writes a correspondent of the Youth's Companion, rolling logs together stacking brush, pulling stumps and the like, when two hunters emerged unexpectedly from the bushes.

They "passed the time of day" with the farmer, and the younger of them said to his companion:

"Did you ever do any work of this sort, Judge?"

"Yes indeed," answered the second man.

"Well," said the first speaker, "so did I, a good many years ago. Let's try our hands at it now."

"Agreed," said the Judge, and the two men laid aside their guns, took off their coats and went to work upon the logs with a will. At the end of an hour they had finished their stint and the farmer offered to pay them.

"Oh no the stranger said, "you are welcome to what we have done."

"Well, I don't know your names, gentlemen, nor to whom I have to thank, but——"

"My name is Elliott," the judge broke in "my friend here is Senator Harrison."

"You don't mean it!" exclaimed the farmer, and as the United States senator and the judge of the Supreme court started into the woods he said to himself:

"Well, now, I've read a good deal in the papers about these politicans a-log-rollin', but I'm blest if I thought they ever really did it!"

MR. CLEVELAND'S LETTER.

Grover Cleveland's letter to General Bragg on his presidential candidacy is characteristic of the man. It is such a letter as few statesmen of recent years could write and tell the truth. Mr. Cleveland's ideas of politics and statesmanship are of a high standard—too high, indeed, for those less zealous for their country's good to understand. Mr. Cleveland thinks the office one that should not be sought, but that the people should make their choice unhindered. He believes that all citizens should take an active part in the politics of the country, and that they should select the candidates for the principles they represent.

Grover Cleveland is certainly the broadest minded and most unselfish statesman who has taken as prominent a part as he has in American politics for many years. The circumstances which seem to make Mr. Cleveland unavailable as a presidential candidate are indeed to be regretted. Mr. Cleveland has done more than any other man to raise American politics from personalities to principles.

As a president, none but the ignorant or falsifiers ever accused him of being other than honest; but all who were in the least disposed to be at all fair gave him credit for honesty, consistancy and earnestness in all his public actions.

As a Democrat, Mr. Cleveland is a representative of all that is Democratic, on every issue, excepting perhaps the coinage of silver.

Had Mr. Cleveland been a politician rather than a statesman there is no doubt but that he would receive the nomination for president.

But Mr. Cleveland is not an office seeker. "I cannot," he says, "bring myself to regard the candidacy for the place as something to be won by personal strife and active self assertion."

However, it is not at all improbable that even yet, despite the efforts of the politicians, the people of the country will demand the nomination of Mr. Cleveland.

"M'GRAWISM."

Despite the overwhelming defeat of John H. McGraw's Seattle ring on the 8th. inst., that demagogical politician still controls Republican politics in Seattle. At the Republican primaries last Saturday the delegates elected to the county convention are nearly all known to be McGraw men.

If the people of this state do not want the corrupt gang of boodlers and plunderers, who have been so effectually repudiated by their own town, to use this state for their own financial and political ends for the next four years, they must elect the Democratic state ticket.

Washington has been virtually controled by this man, who is not better than a common highwayman, for the last three years. Mr. McGraw gave us Governor Ferry, he controlled Governor Laughton, and he chose our United State senators. He almost controlled legislation. He has sat upon his throne and ruled with an iron hand.

If the citizens of this state wish to rid themselves of this high-handed boodler, they will have to do as his neighbors have just done in Seattle—all vote with the Democrats.

THERE is a whole lot about national politics that is unknown to the Seattle Post-Intelligencer. In estimating Cleveland's strength it gives him Rhode Island, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Indiana and Wisconsin only. The Democrats of Ohio, Michigan and Minnesota are enthusiastically for Cleveland, as they are also in Texas, West Virginia and other Southern states.

THE TRIBUNE AND THE GANG.

The People of Clallam county should not forget that the Tribune, of this place, is still the organ of a dangerous ring of politicians, amongst whom are a majority of the board of county commissioners.

Its pretended fight against the "gang" is really only a personal fight against Auditor Baker and Deputy Auditor Hoole, and for personal reasons only. The Tribune has too often given evidence of the fact that "rings" and "gangs" are alright as long as it is in the ring or gang. A few short weeks ago it was spoiling to get into a fight to defend the auditor's office. It is now bubbling over for a fight with that office. Is it because the Tribune has discovered anything more corrupt than has existed for the last year there? No. Is it because the paper has experienced a change of heart as to gangs and rings? Certainly not, as it is still supporting the county commissioners and the McGraw ring in state affairs. Then why this attack? It is purely personal. Mr. Baker and Mr. Hoole refused to take stock in the Tribune company, and then Mr. Hoole refused to support the editor of the Tribune for state committeeman. This made the Tribune mad, and it shows its personal spite in attacking the auditor for a state of affairs that has existed for a long time, and for which the county commissioners are as directly responsible as the auditor.

The Tribune certainly belongs to the ring—is in fact, a part of a dangerous ring, who are trying to retain control of county affairs for their own personal ends.

Citizens of Clallam county, you have the same job on your hands that the citizens of Seattle had. You have a gang that is, at least, extravagent, wasteful and neglectful of your interests to down. Will you down it?

NEWS AND COMMENT.

Recent cablegrams state that Berlin experienced a regular American blizzard.

On the 14th inst, the ports along the straits experienced a regular London fog. Don't cher know? and chappie and Cholly were happy.

President Harrison has determined to protect the seals by policing Bering sea in case Lord Salisbury refuses to renew the modus vivendi.

Salisbury's position seems to be, that if the seals are his, he wants them, or, if they belong to someone else, he wants them just the same.

If such becomes the custom the political record of Judge Woods, in connection with the "blocks-of-five," will receive a ventillation which will fill Benjamin and Dudley with admiration.

The German empress, it is said, is so severely afflicted with religion that she rarely smiles.

The supposition is, that the empress has retired from the field and allows William to do all the "smiling" himself, After each "smile" a speech follows whose burden is to pulverize Russia and not, "Let's have another," neither is it "Fill 'em up again."

Port Townsend has been considerably stirred up over a rumor that Captain R W. De Lion, was endeavoring to move the Chilian consulate from that city to Tacoma. Peace now reigns upon the assurance from the Captain that a vice-counsul has been oppointed and that the important counsulate would remain.

Let us hope that Port Townsend will also remain and not follow the counsul to Tacoma.

It is rumored in naval circles that the United states intends to make a naval demonstration, with Puget Sound the base of operations. The Mohigan and Nipsic have already arrived.

The former achieved distinction by running aground near Port Townsend, while the Nipsic is the corpse, now doing duty as a war vessel, which was once buried 'neath the seas in the harbor of Apia, but, thank goodness! the Davie Crockett is still left and unknown to such fame, and may be depended upon.

Frank J. Myers, editor of the Juneau Mining Record, and C. H. Schoops, editor of the Sitka Alaskan, were arrested for criminal libel on complaint of Governor Lyman Knapp, of Alaska, for having printed in their papers a clipping from the Port Townsend Leader, to the effect that William Knapp, the governor's son, was not mentally very brilliant.

If such things can be, and governor's hold their jobs, a few more years of Republicanism will produce a state of affairs which will muzzle the press of this country as it is in Europe, or will force the press to allude to every officer, his sisters his cousins and his aunts, as brilliant all and bright beyond compare. This is the autocratic rule of the barons.

It really seems to the constituency in the back districts or rather the jumping off places, that a four hour discussion should be prolific of incident.

A DEMOCRATIC OUTING.

The most delightful sensations of perfect contentment which cheer the pilgrim in this weary world are those experienced after having convalesced from a horseback ride over "Burley's" county road.

Think of it, for two whole days after having acquired this experience, during which time you have been constantly entertained by taking an inventory of damages inflicted upon your anatomy by a trotting horse, you unanimously conclude that the whole structure is strained into utter uselessness and needs repairs, which cannot be made either walking, standing, sitting up or laying down; and at every move you discover a brand new pain, not before innumerated in your list; which at the start was too long to be funny. It is the surcease from pain which floods your days with pleasure; after you have ached so long and so hard as to be induced to believe that you are a municipal corporation under Republican rule, when a comfortable "sit down" sounds to you like a Democratic victory in the municipality, and reforms are immediately instituted. Then life seems as rosy to you as it does at present to the taxpayers of Seattle, and as it will to the taxpayers of Clallam county next fall.

All of the above experience—and more too—was enjoyed by eight citizens of Angeles, viz: Messrs. Brumfield, Myers. Ritchie, Grimes, Church, Gould, Troy and Dedman, who became possessed of the insane desire to go to Gettysburg on horseback and view with their own eyes the county road.

The ride was simply intoxicating as long as the tramway out to the Dry creek mill was followed, but when once the county road was reached, trouble overwhelmed the brave eight, who for several miles were busily engaged in persuading their steeds to struggle just a little more that they might become "unbogged."

A county commissioner would hardly believe that a horse sank nearly out of sight in the middle of the county road, but such is the case. Well, it is paid for, so there is "no kick a-coming." It was a relief when we reached the road constructed by the settlers, for such calamities as a horse miring in the road were left behind.

The timber along this road is certainly as fine as any in the state and there is such a large body of it that many sawmills could draw upon it for years. Several splendid ranches were passed, all having substantial improvements and certainly indicated prosperity.

We paid our erring (politically) brother Carrigan of the Leader at Port Crescent a visit, who seeing our delapidated condition kindly dispatched a messenger to the Markham-house with an order for sixteen square meals to be gotton ready as soon as possible believing that each of our party would eat with both hands and would require a meal for each hand.

The big, warm heart of mine host Richard McDonald of the Markham house feeling great pity for us used his influence and procured a boat with which we finished the journey to Gettysburg where Bob met us on the beach with a smile and by a strange intuition knew exactly how we liked it mixed.

After a good supper we were presented to a number of good Democratic brethren and a general love feast was the order until a late hour when we were escorted to a comfortable bed. A good breakfast next morning put us in good condition for our return, and reluctantly good-byes were exchanged with our many friends. At Port Crescent we decided to return by the beach not caring to lose half our horses in the mud of the county road.

The familiar haunts of Angeles were welaome sights, to the eight, at 5.30, Sunday afternoon when the trip was completed, which had mingled lots of fun with plenty of pain.

"Some things are of that nature as to make,
One's fancy chuckle while his (back?) doth ache."

A New Association.

The physicians of the city met at the office of Dr. D. H. Poyneer, March 12, to organize a county medical association. Dr. Poyneer was elected temporary chairman and Dr. Lewis, secretary. The following were elected as officers of the society: Dr. D. H. Poyneer, president; Dr. A. B. Lult, vice president; and Dr. I. R. Herrick, secretary and treasurer.

The name adopted is "The First Regular Medical Society of Clallam County."

The objects of the society are to give frequent and united expressions of the views and aims of the regular medical profession in said county; to cultivate and advance medical knowledge; to elevate the standard of medical science; to promote the usefulness, honor and best interests of the medical profession; to incite and encourage emulation and concert of action in the profession, and to facilitate and foster friendly intercourse between those who are engaged in the profession and for the mutual protection of its members. ### MR. CLEVELAND SPEAKS.

The Great Reform Statesman--Belongs to His Country.

In answer to a letter from General Bragg of Wisconsin, Mr. Cleveland announces his position as to the Democratic nomination as follows:

Your letter of the 5th is received. I have thought I might continue silent on the subject you present to me. If in answering the question, I might only consider personal desires, individual ease and comfort, the response would be made without the least preservation or difficulty, but if you are right in suposing that the subject is related to the duty I owe the country and the party, a condition exists which makes such private and personal considerations entirely irrevelent. My experiance in the office of president has so impressed me with the solemnity of the trust and its awful responsibility that I cannot bring myself to regard the candidacy of the place assomething to be won by persoal strife and active self-assertion.

I have also an idea that the presidency is pre-eminently the people's office, and I have sincere in constant advocacy of effective participation in political affairs on the part of the citizens. Consequently I believe the people should be heard in choice of their prtty candidate, and that they themselves should make the nominations as directly as possible as is consistent with open, fair and full party organization and methods. I am confident success is still within our reach, but believe this is the time for thoughtfulness and deliberation, not only as to the candidatis, but concerning party action upon questions of immense interest to the patriotic and intelligent voter of the laud, who ask for our country's safety as the price of their confidence and support.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

The Masquerade.

The grand masquerade ball given by the Gate City band last night was a success The masques were most tastily and well arranged.

Special mention may be made of Mrs. L. H. Smith, as Sunflower; Mrs. John Church and Miss Nailor, as the Times; Miss Addie Rayburn and Miss Sullivan, as THE DEMOCRAT; and Miss Wrigley, as Maud Muller. S. A. Hall, C. E. and J. L. Bell made quite a hit by establishing a real estate office in the hall. Likely persons were dragged in from the dizzy waltz to be bored about Angeles realty. H. B. Crockett as St. Patrick, represented the Irishman perfectly, and was probably the most striking figure present. It remained for Charlie Ulmer and Ed. Hatch to break the boys' hearts. Dressed as charming maidens, with flowing tresses, they mashed all the single gentlemen and many of those married in the hall. One can better imagine than explain the chargine expressed in the countances of the gallants when they beheld those whom they had grasped more firmly than was absolutely necessary during the dance. John Church as a negro wench and George Meagher as an old darkey were prominent features.

LOCAL.

The steamer Angeles missed her regular trip last Tuesday, having gone to Seattle for repairs.

The steamer Michigan has been leased by the Well's line, and will run from San Francisco to the Sound ports.

The rate cutting as inaugurated by the Union Pacific, if persisted in will result very beneficially to the traveling public. The Hermosa being compelled to scale down to the reduced rate last Monday by the passengers who refused to ride unless the reduced fare be demanded.

The family of Mr. McCoy came in on the Hermosa last Moday from Cheney, Wash., and will make Angeles their home.

The "spook show" last Sunday night at the opera-house drew a large audiance and was very entertaining by its depths of mystery.

The Port Angeles Band, gave an open air concert yesterday afternoon on Front Street. A large concourse of people enjoyed the music.

W. R. Hoole, who has been in delicate health since his return from the east, a few weeks ago, while in attendance Wednesday night at the opera house suffered an attack of palpitation of the heart which rendered him unconcious for a short time. Friends of Mr. Hoole immediately removed him from the hall, where the fresh air soon restored him to consciousness.

The Angeles Club gave their usual hop at the opera house last Friday evening, and a large attendance attested the amount of enjoyment afforded by these hops. Nine sets graced the floor at each quadrille, and every round dance met with many responses from those who can drink deeply of its poetic motion.

The young ladies of the Congregational Church will give a necktie party at the church Tuesday evening. The price of admission will be 25cts, including supper.

The Fisk Jubilee Singers gave their royal entertainment in the Opera House Wednesday night, under the auspicies of the Y. M. C. A. They were greeted by a good and appreciative audience.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Congregational church will give their grand musical and Dramatic entertainment in the Opera House Tuesday March 29.

Song Service.

At the Congregation church next Sunday evening, after a short address by the pastor, the time will be devoted to singing. All are cordially invited to come and take part. Some special music will be rendered by the choir.

OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

Interesting Items from Forks, Sequim, Texas Valley and Quillayute.

QUILLAYUTE, Wash., March 12.—[Special.]—A public meeting was held in the Quillayute schoolhouse Saturday evening. Feb. 27, for the purpose of organizing a Democratic club. A large majority of the settlers in the Quillayute precinct were present. On motion of H. Schectka John D. Hagadorne was elected chairman by a unanimous vote, and H. Hansen was elected secretary.

Upon calling the meeting to order John D. Hagadorne spoke of what he observed while attending court in Port Angeles. That the management of the county affairs were of a deplorable character; that the sentiment of the people throughout the county was strongly opposed to the Republican ring rule in Port Angeles; that the people of Clallam county have resolved to break the Republican ring at the coming election; and that the surest and best way to do this is to organize Democratic clubs everywhere in the county, and on the coming election day snow under the Republican ticket, and elect capable and honest men on the Democratic ticket, who would work for the welfare of the toiling masses.

When the chairman took his seat, after calling on the boys to sign their names as members of the Democratic club. They responded to his call at a lively rate, and after a few minutes the secretary announced that the club had been organized with forty-two members. It being late in the evening it was agreed to adjourn and meet on the following Saturday evening and elect officers of the club and transact other business toward completing the organization of the Democratic club of Quillayute.

LATER—The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. The secretary then read the names of all members belonging to the club, which numbered fifty-one. The first business in order was the nominations for president. E. Madison nominated John D. Hagadorne, no other name being presented, he was elected unanimously. Charles Vanhorn and Shaster were both nominated as first vice-president. A ballot was then taken, Mr. Vanhorn receiving a majority of twelve. W. R. Hicks was elected second vice-president; O. Erickson, secretary, H. Hansen, corresponding secretary, John Van Busey, treasurer.

A speech was then made by Mr Hansen on Thomas Jefferson, as being the author of the Declaration of Independence, and also the founder of the Democratic party, and as Jefferson's name is respected and will remain so as long as liberty as a friend, so is the Democratic party a living party, that never will vanish, but has a mission to fulfill in working for the progress and welfare of this wonderful land.

Motion was made and carried that the club adopt the following name: "The Thomas Jefferson Young Men's Democratic Club of Quillayute." The meeting then adjourned subject to the call of the president. HANS HANSEN.

UNENTHUSIASTIC REPUBLICANS.

The Republican Primary at Forks Attended by Three Republicans.

FORKS, March 15—[Special]—The Republican primary was held Saturday to select a delegate to the convention. But little interest was shown only three persons besides THE DEMOCRAT'S representative being present.

M. D. Whittier was chosen chairman, L. M. Ford, secretary.

W. D. Waterhouse was chosen as delegate; he was under the painful necessity of seconding his own nomination.

L. M. Ford was recommended as local representative of the central committee.

The weather continues good, many are plowing.

La grippe has a goodly part of the community in his grasp, but no fatal results so far.

There was a water "witching" on the prairie a day or two ago. The steed was inclined to "kick" and the operator found it necessary to use the quirt and spur him occasionally.

There were some scoffers present, but did not deter the "witch." In the hands of THE DEMOCRAT man the divining rod persistantly pointed upward; as it was sprinkling there was no doubt about its pointing to water.

It was claimed that in this stronghold of Republicanism, that no charm, however effective, would work in the hands of a Democrat.

Texas Valley Settlers do not Let Moss Accumulate—Road Building.

TEXAS VALLEY, Wash., Mar. 15—[Special]—The citizens of this neighborhood have completed the bridge across the Dungeness river. It is the best bridge that crosses this river, and has cost the county only a small sum for iron.

Besides this the settlers here have built five miles of county road since January 1, besides numerous private roads. Messrs. Duncan, Laughlin and others have built a road two and a half miles up the river. Messrs. Donnell and Clay have built one and a half miles of road to their places and some families, lately from Seattle, living on McDonnell's creek are building a road to connect with the county road.

A great number of fine fruit orchards have been planted in this neighborhood since fall.

Farmers are getting ready to put in crops

The New Town of Dungeness.

DUNGENESS, Wash., March 17.—[Special]—The Farmers' Mercantile Company, of Dungeness, have under consideration plans for a two story brick store building to be erected at once at the new town of Dungeness. The plans provide for a fine store room and warehouse on the first floor and a commodious hall and ante rooms taking up the second story.

A. U. Davis, of Dungeness, is now up Sound making arrangements for the speedy erection of a hotel building on the new townsite. Several other building are projected and everything points to a prosperous summer in the new town of Dungeness.

The Dungeness sawmill is running extra time and is unable to keep their orders filled. They are getting out most of the lumber for the new wharf.

Abettors Were Brutes.

A prize fight occured in a field near Portland March 13, the principals being two boys, both under 17 years old. A purse of $70 was raised by the spectators. In the twenty-third round Bell fouled Henderson, when the purse was awarded the latter. Half an hour later Henderson fainted and died shortly after the arrival of a doctor.

Bell returned to Portland and went to work as usual. Upon learning of Henderson's death he disappeared, but was successfully located and arrested.

Henderson's father does not blame Bell, but is greatly incensed against the abettors, and will have all arrested.

Teachers' Meeting.

The Port Angeles Teachers' Meeting was called to order Friday evening by Prof. Taylor, who opened the discussion of "The Advisability of Organizing a County Teachers' Association," Mr. Taylor called for the opinion of the teachers, and Mr. Wagner was the first to respond. He said; If a Teachers' Association is organized only to interest the teachers of Port Angeles, it will be no better than our weekly meeting. If it is to include all the county teachers it might be beneficial." Also thought that one meeting each month on Saturday, might be advisable. Teachers ought to be willing to give one day a month to mental improvement. J. B. Taylor favored Friday evening for time of holding session. Said Saturday would grow monotinous, and others might as well attend on Friday evening as on Saturday.

Mrs. Botsford—"The teachers cannot spare the time for such a meeting once a month. They have too much to do and need the time for rest."

Mrs. Wilcox—"The Association was suggested for the benefit of the teachers. The teachers of Clallam County do not know each other, even by name. An Association would bring them together and an interchange of methods and ideas would be beneficial to all, besides being the means of improving the schools of our country, and giving the teachers better opportunities for work, and through better work a chance for better wages.

Mr. Merrifield—"There are objections to an Association. Now, I think once a month too often, and would favor a meeting once in three or four months. I should favor open meetings. Complaints are being made against the Port Angeles teachers, and the only way that we can do to show the people what we are doing is by holding open meetings."

J. B. Taylor—We are here and people know it. We have been here some time. If they want to know what we are doing let them visit our schools and see. They are welcome."

Mr. Sullivan—The expense to teachers attending would be too heavy. I would not be willing to attend meetings in another part of the county."

Mr. Maine—"Probably the people won't know any more about the teachers after an Association is formed than before, because they won't attend."

Wilcox—"What are your objections to organizing?

Maine—"Because the teachers are so scattered that it will be impossible for many of them to attend."

Wilcox—"Organization and monthly meetings will benefit those who do attend and those for any reason who are unable to attend will be just as well off as they are now. It is at least worth a trial."

Wagner preposed organizing and calling a meeting to get the general idea of the teachers of the county.

Wilcox suggested that the meeting be called first that all the teachers in the county might have a hand in organizing the association.

After some further discussion, Prof. Taylor appointed a committee consisting of Mrs. Wilcox, Mr. Wagner and Mr. Merrifield to prepare a programme and issue a call for a meeting.

The remaining time was devoted to an interesting paper on New Zealand by J. B. Taylor, and a few general questions on school work.

The programme for next meeting is a paper by Mr. Sullivan, "General Discussion of Pronouns."

Teachers and all others interested in school work are invited to attend.

MY MISTAKE.

It was on the 5th day of November—Guy Fawkes' day in the old almanac that hung above the mantel in maternal grandmother's long-disued room up-stairs. In this northern home to which we had recently removed, falling heirs to it through that very ancestress' will, the dwellers regarded November rather as a winter than an autumn month and today the wind howled and the rain pattered with a persistence marvelous to behold.

And, as it happened, I was alone in the house. Father had gone to take his russet apples to market—the apples that I myself had helped to harvest and pack into the barrels and was not expected home until to-morrow night at the earliest. Jack, my brother, was in Montreal fitting up the law office which was henceforth to be his abode. Jean, our hard-featured, cross-grained old servant, had gone home with the "rheumatics," as she termed it, to be treated by a certain ancient Indian herb doctor and just about dusk Peter, our "useful man," had thrust his shock head unceremoniously in at the door.

"I say Miss Ruth," he said, "there's plenty of wood and everything's all snug for the night and I'm going over to Stephenson's. They're in trouble there."

"Trouble, Peter? What kind of trouble? Is the old man sick?"

But in answer to my query Peter only uttered an indistinct remark and went out slamming the door behind him.

I stood in front of the fire looking down at the glowing embers and pondering within myself. The Stepensons, who lived in an old graystone house on the other side of the precipitous glen, had always been a riddle to me.

The family was small, consisting of only a crabbed old man, his portentously silent wife and two tall, ungainly sons, and what on earth they did with all the big, echoing rooms, or how they contrived to live, perched like eaglets on the side of the rock, I could not form the least idea. "City boarders," Peter had once grunted out in answer to my persistent interrogations.

But if they kept city boarders why did they not leave these dreary mountain fastnesses when the leaves fell and the dismal autumn fogs gathered above the cliffs? Altogether, there was a certain atmosphere of mystery about these "Stephensons" that aroused all the Eve-like instincts in my nature.

While I stood thinking a soft tap sounded at the door. I opened it at once, never once remembering that I was alone in the house.

"Ye never ought to do that, Miss Ruth," said the well-known accents of Mrs. Gludge, Farmer Gludge's buxom wife.

"Do what, Mrs. Gludge?"

"Open the door after dark when you're alone in the house without askin' who's there."

"How did you know I was alone in the house?"

"I just met Peter goin' to Stephenson's."

"Oh!" said I. "But we don't have tramps here, Mrs. Gludge."

"I'm not so certain o' that," said the farmer's wife. "Your folks hain't lived here as long as I have. We're just nigh enough to the Canada line to have queer characters prowlin' about when ye least expect 'em. And then there's Stephenson's.

"What of Stephenson's?" I cried, eagerly. "Who is Stephenson, anyway? Do tell me, Mrs. Gludge."

"Well, I declare!" said Mrs. Gludge. "Is it possible, now, that they hain't told you?"

"They have told me nothing," said I.

"Well, it's likely they didn't want to scare you or make you nervous," said Mrs. Gludge. "But all the same, I think you oughter know."

"Mrs. Gludge," cried I, seizing her arm, "what is it? Do tell me!"

"It's a private home," said Mrs. Gludge, lowering her voice to a whisper, as though the raindrops and the rustling fir boughs could overhear.

"A what?" I gasped.

"For people of feeble mind," explained the woman, "and lunies," tapping her forhead as she spoke.

I stared at her.

"Then," cried I, "that's what Peter meant when he said that—that——"

"One of the poor creatures has somehow given 'em the slip," said Mrs. Gludge, "an English gentleman from Montreal, as has only been there a few days. Nobody knows just how it happened, but happen it did. My man's gone over with a lantern to help hunt for him, so has Peter."

"He might have told me," I cried indignantly.

"Anyway, I don't think he ought to have left you here alone." said Mrs Gludge, severely.

"But you've come to stay with me, Mrs. Gludgeb"

"Bless your heart, Miss Ruth, no! I'm on my way to carry a letter to Mr. Romney's, up the road—a very important letter with 'in haste' writ on it." For in addition to her duties as a farmer's wife and mother of a large family of little children Mrs. Gludge helped her husband in the care of the obscure little country postoffice a mile down the road. "And—by the way I'd nearly forgot it—I've got a letter for you, too, That's what brought me here."

"For me, Mrs. Gludge?"

Instinctively I put out my hand to grasp the treasure, while the woman fumbled first in one and then another of her pockets.

"It's very strange," said she. "I made sure I had it. I did have it when I started away from home, but now I remember. Just at the foot of Gibb's cliff I took out my handkerchief to tie around my neck—the wind came so keen around the rock—and I must a pulled it out with that and everything around me too pitch dark to see. Oh, Miss Ruth, I'm so sorry! Please don't report me, that's a good young lady, or I shall lose my place."

I swallowed down a great lump of discomfiture in my throat and tried to laugh.

"Report you, Mrs. Gludge?" said I. "Of course not. It wasn't your fault. If you hadn't kindly thought of me and started to bring it on your way to Romney's you would never have lost it."

"And quite true," said Mrs. Gludge, ruefully; "but all the same I wish I hadn't been so thoughtless. I'll send the boys out to look for it just as soon as——"

"Oh, never mind the letter!" I interrupted. "I dare say it's only from Jack. To-morrow morning will do very well for that. But, Mrs. Gludge, you'll come back and stay with me till Peter comes back? Jean is away, you know, and——"

"Yes my dear, I'll do that," asserted the woman, evidently relieved to be let off so easily on the score of the letter. "And it won't be long first. It's only a short half-mile to Romney's if the wind didn't blow so like all possessed."

With a good-humored nod she disappeared into the rain and darkness and I ran back to pile fresh logs on the waning fire. Bank burglars, extradited wanderers, a lunatic at large—with all these possibilities whirling in my brain it is not strange that I lighted a second lamp in order effectually to banish all lurking shadows from the angles of the room and started nervously when a sudden blast of wind shook the window-shutters as if with some imperious hand.

"I'll go up to the garret and bring down some butternuts," thought I, and then I'll get some cider from the cellar. It will be fun to crack the nuts and watch the shells blaze in the fire, and Mrs. Gludge would like a drink of cider when she comes back all wet and chill."

Cheered by this happy thought I caught up a lamp and flew to the garret, where my father had bestowed all the nutty treasures. Somehow Priscilla, the cat, had got locked into the garret and I had to release her from duration vile and replace a box or two which she had knocked off from the window-sill, before I came down, driving her catship before me, with the lamp in one hand and an apronful of nuts in the other.

Through the open keeping-room door streamed a ray of ruddy light into the Cimmerian darkness of the hall. I stopped abruptly. Surely I had closed that door when I came out, remembering a certain trick it had of slamming to and fro in windy weather. And at the same time a curious consciousness of some human presence near by crept over me like an unseen magnetic current.

Nor was it a false premonition. As I stretched my neck to peep cautiously into the room I saw seated before the fire a youngish gentleman, pale, black-haired and, as I thought, rather unsettled of aspect. And a decidedly wet and mud-bespattered gentleman, whose raiment steamed in the glorious blaze and crackle of the pine logs, as he sat there holding out his hands to the genial warmth.

How had he gained an entrance? Had I carelessly neglected to bolt the big door after Mrs. Gludge's departure? Yes, I must have done so. For a second I stood there quailing and quaking, my heart thumping like a triphammer and a cold sweat breaking like out upon my forehead before I decided what to do.

I had never seen a bank burglar, to be sure; but I was pretty certain this black-haired gentleman could belong to that race. And I didn't think he looked like any other scoundrel who was fleeing from the law. He must be the English gentleman gone wrong in his head, who had "escaped" from the Stephensons.

I was alone in the house with a maniac! And at the idea my heart beat more violently and the drops grew colder on my brow.

With a sudden instinct I decided there was nothing for it but flight. The worse feature was that I could not get out of the house (be it remembered that Peter had taken away the key of the back kitchen door in his pocket) without passing directly through the room where the escaped lunatic sat basking before the fire.

This, however, must be faced. There was no remedy for it, and with one blind rush I precipitated through the room, tumbling over the cat and scattering a shower of nuts as I went and darted headlong through the door with an involuntary shriek that might have rent the ceiling.

Directly in the arms of—Jack, my own brother Jack, who was coming in from the van with a light valise in one hand and a dripping carraige-robe in the other.

"Halloo!" bawled Jack, staggering under the blow of my very unexpected appearance. "Why—what the—I declare if it isn't Ruthy!"

"Oh, Jack! Oh, Jack!" I screamed, clutching at him like a drowning man at the proverbial straw.

"Where are all the folks? What has become of the stable keys? What have you done with Carlton?" he demanded. But I paid no heed to his interrogatories.

"Come Jack!" I cried; "come quickly. The escaped lunatic! He's right there in the keeping-room! Oh, Jack, I do hope you've got your revolver!"

"What?" roared Jack. "An escaped lunatic? Where the deuce has he come from? Has he hurt Carleton?"

He made a spring toward the keeping-room, in whose door stood the tall, pale man, straining his eyes out into the night.

"Where is he?" shouted Jack.

"Where's who?" said the escaped lunatic in a pleasant, slightly drawling voice; "it wasn't he. It was a she. And she cleared the floor with a single bound, and—oh, I'm sure I beg a thousand pardons," as he caught sight of me.

"But, please, what is the matter?"

In a second my mental vision became as clear as crystal. I saw it all and I envied Pricilla, because I could not vanish under the cupboard as she did and be gone.

I could only blush and hang my head and stammer out incoherent apologies amid the laughter of Jack and the polite apologies of the friend whom he had unexpectedly brought from Montreal with him, and whose coming had been announced, as it seemed, by the very letter Mrs. Gludge had lost.

Father declared that he would never risk such a thing again and discharged Peter on the spot—but Peter came back to work again next day, just as usual, and he is here still. Mr. Carleton was very nice and apologetic for coming in without knocking, to dry himself while Jack was leading the horses to the barn, but he has not fallen in love with me, as an orthodox hero ought to do.

The genuine escaped lunatic was eaptured near Stephenson's and taken to Montreal under the impression that he was the governor-general going to take possession of his vice-regency. And just half an hour after we had settled down to the cracking of butternets and drinking sweet cider that night, a merry group, a sepulchral knocking sounded at the door and Mrs. Gludge's voice was heard saying:

"If you please, miss, I've come to keep you company."
