CENTRAL GRAND CONCERT COMPANY

First Number of Entertainment Course Will Be Given Monday, November 8th.

The Central Grand Concert Company, comprising four of the most notable artists in the United States today, will appear at the Angeles opera house one week from Monday in a program of instrumental and vocal music. Maximilian Dick, on whom high honors have been showered by the musical centers of Europe, stands unrivalled among American violinists. Miss Edith Adams has won for herself the distinction of being one of the most artistic and brilliant woman 'cellists of the age. Miss Margery Knowles, with her wonderful contralto voice, already ranks with the greatest singers of America, with the best achievements of her life before her. Adolph Knauer is a master of the piano whose performances hold his auditors spellbound with amazement and delight. Altogether the material of which the Central Grand Company is made up is sufficient to insure it a grand ovation wherever it appears. Every one of the artists is a great soloist, but while solo numbers will be included in the program a special feature will be the concerted numbers.

The price paid to secure this company of four artists, $200, would place it beyond the reach of the music lovers of Angeles were it not for the fact that it is included in a course of three entertainments, the talent for which is furnished by the same bureau that sent us the Dunbars, Opie Reid, Germain, and others, the past winter. The other entertainments will be Edward Elliott in Stories from the Stage, and the Clare Vaughn Wales Concert and Comedy Company. Mr. Elliott is not a lecturer. He takes some play that has been a great success and credit to the stage, arranges it into a concise story told by the characters, and acts it out as vividly as tho by a company of players. This will be his nineteenth year in his art.

The course this winter has been guaranteed by a dozen of the professional and business men of the town, and will be under the immediate supervision of Miss Annette Trumbull. The price of season tickets has been placed at $1.50 for reserved seats.

ENTERTAINMENT COURSE

To Be Given by Pupils and Teachers of the Public Schools.

The entertainment to be given by the public schools is meeting with great favor at the hands of all who have been asked to patronize it. This year tickets for the entire course will be sold and those who hold season tickets may reserve seats for the entire course when the first number is given. The course will consist of three numbers, two numbers by the pupils of the public schools, under the supervision of the supervisor of music, Miss Marsh, and one number by the faculty. Tickets for the entire course will be one dollar. The proceeds of these entertainments will be devoted to the payment of the balance on the piano, payment of balance on the Tum Tum and toward buying pictures to decorate the walls of the school rooms. Very little canvassing has as yet been attempted, but we understand that about fifty course tickets have been sold. It is to be hoped that the pupils of the school and the teachers as well as those who can give their patronage will make this entertainment course a success. The dates for these entertainments have not yet been set, but it has been decided that one will be given before Christmas and the other two after the holidays.

Hallowe'en is properly the vigil of Hallowmas or All Saint's Day. So far as history sets forth, it is of Scottish origin, although it has its counterparts in Denmark, Germony and other North European countries. In Scotland the principal observation of the day is in the lighting of fires in front of every home as evening falls. It is believed that this custom decends from the very ancient custom of lighting sacred fires to mark the processions of the seasons. It was alsa the ancient belief that All Swallow's eve was the most propitious time to consult oracles, and that on this night, more than any other of the year, faries and goblins were in the most beneficient mood.

SILVER AND BRONZE MEDALS FOR APPLES

Grand Prize and Gold and Bronze Medals for Vegetables. Gold Medal for Coal Exhibit.

The joint exhibit of Clallam and Jefferson counties at the A.-Y.-P. has proven, in the way of results attained, a surprise not only to the people of the two counties, who might easily have done far more and even better, but has astonished the representatives of the older and wealthier counties who had several times as much to expend in the assembling and maintaining of exhibits. The result is not only most satisfactory; it is an achievement in which we can all take honest pride. While not as extensive as many others, the high quality of the exhibits more than offsets the greater wealth of display, and it should be noted in passing that the arrangement also came in for its share of the honors, a silver medal being awarded for installation of exhibits. The fact that we won three grand prizes in competition with the whole country shows the standard of our exhibits.

The joint display of grains, grasses and forage plants which won the gold medal has been donated to the Seattle Chamber of Commerce permanent exhibit and to the C., M. & St. P.'s exhibit car, and the trout exhibit to Stanford University.

Jefferson county received a large number of medals in the stock show, art exhibit, etc., as well as winning the grand prize for cut flowers. Exhibitors from Jefferson county also won medals for fruit and vegetables, potatoes, strawberries, blackberries, gooseberries, squash, cabbage, etc., and the joint exhibit of elk and deer heads was awarded a silver medal.

The Glendale creameries received a gold medal for cheese and butter.

The following awards were made to residents of Clallam county:

Guy Vooys, grand prize, bulbs.

E. Dermul, grand prize, celery and cauliflower.

D. McInnes, gold medal, vegetables.

Mrs. L. A. Jones, silver medal, apples.

J. A. Adams, bronze medal, apples.

M. Draper, bronze medal, vegetables.

Clallam Coal Co., gold medal, coal.

Angeles Brewing Co., gold medal, beer.

Port Angeles Stone Co., bronze medal, sandstone.

Washburn & Co., silver medal, Indian handiwork.

A SPLENDID SHOWING OF COMMERCIAL APPLES

Stephen Land is another Clallam county rancher who believes that good commercial apples can be successfully grown here. He h s an orchard of about forty young bearing trees on his place adjoining the city south of town where he is demonstrating this fact. While this has usually been considered an off year for apples in this section, the samples of Alexander, Pewaukees, Yellow Bellflowers, Kings, Wealthys, Baldwins, Northern Greenings and Newton Pippins Mr. Land brought to this office will compare favorably with the same varieties grown anywhere. His Alexanders, Wealthy and King samples were all highly colored, of good size and quality. The Baldwins, although smaller, are more highly colored, and therefore better sellers on the market, than the same varieties as usually grown in Michigan and New York orchards. His Bellflowers and Pippins are grand specimens of the species. Mr. Land's samples of pears were also fine. He has a number of varieties, of which the Bond of Jersey and Flemish Beauty he especially recommends. He has a great crop of this fruit this year, much of it going to waste, the ground being covered with pears at the present time, and he is looking forward to the day when a fruit cannery will be in successful operation in the county.

Speaking of fine samples of fruit, there's the quince, one of the most useful and yet most generally neglected trees, one of which, at least, should be in every home orchard. It is not only a splendid pie fruit, but makes the very best jelly, or, used with apples, it adds greatly to their flavor. That the quince is easily grown and an abundant yielder, is proven by the experience of John McDonald of Eighth and Vine, who is exhibiting a sample weighing over a pound and measuring 14 inches around. He says there are many on his tree that are but a trifle smaller.

WATERWAY BONDS

TAFT FAVORS ISSUE FOR IMPROVEMENT OF INLAND RIVERS.

Would Help Control Rates of Railroads — Executive Declares Work on Aquatic Highways So Far Has Been Mere Procession of "Jerks," Due to Politics.

Corpus Christi, Tex., Oct. 23.—In an address here before the Interstate Inland Waterways League and citizens of Corpus Christi, President W. H. Taft announced himself as strongly favoring a permanent and practical system of inland waterways as means of controlling railroad rates and said he favored a bond issue policy for carrying out a practical system of improvements.

Up to the present time, Mr. Taft declared, congress has provided for improvements in piecemeal fashion, and the work on improvements has been nothing more than a "procession of jerks."

Before any project is entered upon, the president declared, it should be thoroughly considered by a board of engineers as to its feasibility.

Once the improvement is declared desirable and the communities which it is to serve can convince congress that their growth has been such as to justify the expenditure of a large sum of money to take care of increasing trade, bonds should be issued so that the improvement might be begun at once.

Not Different from Panama Canal.

The president said he could see no difference between improving inland waterways and digging the Panama canal. Each project should be separately considered to determine whether or not it is worth doing, he said.

Mr. Taft referred to the fact that in the Ohio River improvements were under way to secure a 9-foot stage from Pittsburg to Cairo. An intercostal 9-foot canal, he declared, would be of great service to the entire country.

The president said he recognized the danger of issuing bonds indiscriminately and said the people must not lose sight of the fact that some day the bonds must be paid. But he declared his great faith in the conservatism of congress and the American people, and said he did not believe they would go into the improvement of waterways by means of a bond issue on a haphazard basis, but would conservatively calculate whether or not the time had arrived to do the work. He said that more than $600,000,000 has been spent in improvement of waterways in the past. Instead of working toward a great avenue of commerce, however, the money had been spent in piecemeal projects provided for by congress in response to a clamor from home, or as a matter of party consideration.

Criticism of Engineers Unjust.

Criticism of the army engineers for their policy of waterway improvement, the president declared to be unjust.

The committees of the senate and the house are responsible for the current policy, he declared. As long as the limitation of home clamor and party considerations continue, the president said, only piecemeal work could be expected. The matter should be looked upon from a business point of view, which, after all, he declared to be a patriotic point of view.

While improved waterways are the best method of controlling railroad rates, the president said, they were not the only means, and the interstate commerce laws should be amended so as to make these laws effective.

The president said he did not believe in radical laws that would cripple railroads, and he thought all wise persons would agree that the best policy was a square deal for the railroads, that they should be allowed rates which they ought to have and that popular prejudice should not be permitted to deprive them of a reasonable profit.

"We are a funny people," remarked the president. "Before the railroad comes everybody is in favor of it. A month after it comes, you can't find anybody in the country in favor of it, unless it be the local counsel."

Five Years for Oregon Banker

Salem, Or., Oct. 23.—The supreme court has handed down an opinion affirming the decision of the lower court in the case of J. Thorburn Ross, convicted of violating the state banking laws. Ross was president of the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, of Portland, and the failure of the bank several years ago revealed a state of affairs which was taken cognizance of by the district attorney of Multnomah county, with the result that Ross was convicted on various counts and sentenced to an aggregate term of 500 years in the penitentiary. The decision reverses the extreme sentence, but affirms a sentence of five years, which Ross will have to serve.

Vancouver, Wash., Oct. 25.—The laying of the cornerstone of the new $125,000 St. Joseph's hospital, a Catholic institution, being built at the corner of Thirteenth and Reserve streets, will be celebrated at 3 o'clock Sunday, November 7. The ceremonies will be in charge of Bishop O'Dea of Seattle, and appropriate exercises will be held.

ITO, JAPANESE LEADER KILLED BY KOREAN

Tokyo, Oct. 26—News has been received here that Prince Ito, the famous Japanese statesman, has been assassinated by a Korean at Harbin, Manchuria.

The news was received at Tokyo at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The dispatch contained only the brief announcement that Prince Ito had been assassinated. It has caused great grief and consternation.

Prince Hirobumi Ito was perhaps the greatest statesman of New Japan. The achievement with which his name has been chiefly associated in the minds of Occidentals was the framing of the imperial constitution, by virtue of which Japan took her place for the first time in the rank of modern civilized states.

As the emperor's trusted adviser and the medium through which the state was placed on a constitutional basis, he must be regarded as one of the positive factors which have helped to win for Japan her present standing among the nations.

Prince Ito was 68 years of age. It was in 1863 that he made his celebrated pilgrimage to England, at a time when it was against the law of the country to go abroad, and the penalty of infringement was death. Nevertheless, inspired by a patriotic feeling and a desire to learn the secret of Occidental supremacy, he undertook the trip which proved so beneficial to his country later on.

To Meet Russian Minister.

Prince Ito, who was president of the privy council of Japan, left Tokyo October 16 for a tour of Manchuria. He was to have arrived at Harbin today (Tuesday), where he was to have met M. Kokovsoff, Russian minister of finance. The conference, it was said, was at the behest of Japan and Russia. Foreign diplomats have attached great importance to it, although the exact motives impelling Japan to propose the conference were not known.

The subjects to be discussed were not stated in the Japanese overtures and M. Kokovsoff, it was said, had barred political questions. He said that he was competent to discuss only financial and technical subjects.

In some quarters it was believed the tour of Prince Ito was to have been political, and that it had as a basis an attempt to forestall the protests of the powers against Russian domination of the Manchurian railroad zone under her agreement with China by effecting a complete understanding between Japan and China. It has been stated that China had sent several high officials to Harbin to confer with Prince Ito.

Prince Ito passed Saturday and Sunday at Mukden, where he had conferences with Hsi Liang, the viceroy.

Visited United States in 1870.

Prince Ito visited the United States in 1870 as a commissioner to investigate the financial and banking systems. On his return to Japan he was appointed vice minister of public works. In 1880 he negotiated with Li Hung Chang on the Korean question, and concluded the treaty which formed the basis of Japan's justification for her war with China in 1894. Later he negotiated a treaty of peace with China and at the close of the war was made a marquis.

LABOR MAKES DEMANDS FOR CABINET MEMBER

Washington, Oct. 23.—That the vast army of wage-earners in the country may have one of its representatives in the president's cabinet, labor leaders have decided to wage its fight with renewed vigor before congress to obtain legislation to establish a department of labor, with a secretary coequal with the secretaries of other departments.

This question was the foremost topic before the executive council of the American Federation of Labor yesterday and that body authorized the preparation of a bill which will be introduced soon after congress convenes.

LINE BEING RUSHED INTO WHEAT BELT

Wenatchee, Oct. 23.—Contractors are pushing work on the new Waterville-Douglas railroad very rapidly, and it is expected that the grading will be done within the next thirty days.

From seventy-five to one hundred teams will be put on the work next week, but considerable difficulty is experienced in getting men. The rails, ties and rolling stock are now at Columbia siding waiting for delivery at Douglas, having been taken there over the new branch recently built by the Great Northern. The laying of the track on the six-mile stretch of road will not take very long and it is expected that the road will be completed in time to get the big wheat crop out of the Big Bend section, which is now stored in warehouses at Douglas, Witherow and Mansfield.

This will be a new experience for the wheat growers in the Big Bend, who for years have hauled their loads twenty-five and thirty miles to market, necessitating two or three teams to a load, with the roads so dusty that bells were needed on the horses to give signals in order to avoid collisions.

Renton, Oct. 25.—Voters of the city of Renton, at a special election to be held December 7, will vote on the question of issuing bonds in the sum of $12,000 to secure funds for the completion of the municipal water system, work upon which has been commenced.

Answers to Farmers

By George Severance Professor of Agriculture Wash. State College, Pullman.

Goldendale: "I wish to consult an authority on the smut question. Some beardless spring barley I have sown in the fall always has considerable loose smut in it. Last fall I treated it twice to a bath of formaldehyde, stronger than that I used on the wheat. This year, however, I had more smut than ever. The 'hot water' treatment has been recommended to me, and I would like to know a practicable way of treating grain in this manner. How many degrees may I go above the temperature needed to kill the smut germ without doing injury to the barley? and is it necessary to pick out all the smut balls? J. H. B."

"The range of temperature permissible in treating for smut by the hot water method is very limited. A common procedure is to secure two barrels, place them side by side, and set a post near them to serve as a pivot on which a pole may swing with which you may let a bag of grain into one barrel and raise it over into the next at your pleasure. Keep the water in the first barrel at a temperature of 115 degrees to 120 degrees, and keep the sack of grain in this water just long nough to warm the grain. Then lift the sack into the other barrel in which the water shall be maintained at a uniform temperature of 133 to 135. The purpose of warming the grain in the first barrel is to prevent a sudden drop of the temperature of the water in the second barrel. It will be necessary to keep close at hand a supply of hot water with which to keep up the temperature of the water in the second barrel. The sack of grain should be held in the second barrel about five minutes. In my judgment it is necessary to get rid of all the smut balls, if you are to be practically free from smut, because any application that you use for killing the smut spores can scarcely be expected to destroy the spores in the middle of a smut ball if the application is not strong enough to destroy the vitality of a whet kernel.

"Seed Grader" Without Sieves

"After treating the grain, the smut balls are pretty sure to be broken more or less in passing through the drill, and in being handled prior to placing in the drill, so that your seed is likely to be reinoculated to a greater or less extent, depending upon the abundance of smut balls in your seed. I have in mind a certain 'seed grader' which is a very good machine for cleaning out smut balls. It contains no sieves, the separation being made by the seed dropping in a thin stream into an upper blast of air that may be varied in strength at will, permitting you to blow out all of the smut balls and a large per cent. of the lighter grains, or merely to blow out the very lightest material if you so desire. any machine working on this principle should be valuable for removing smut."

Mohler: "I have a field that yielded twenty-four bushels of wheat per acre this year. The soil is shallow, the field being located just at the edge of a scab rock draw. I want to seed this field to peas next spring, and have a double-action cutaway harrow that I desired to use this fall to cut up the ground. Having doen this, I would drill the peas in in the spring. I would like your opinion as to the advisability of cutting the ground this fall or spring plowing, and also the best variety of peas to sow in this part of the state. G. K."

Canada Field Peas Best

"If you intend to sow peas next spring, we would prefer fall plowing to discing, as the winter rains will be more completely absorbed, and will at the same time settle the furrows very nicely. If you cannot fall plow, the next best thing is to disc, as you suggest. We doubt if you would be successful in growing peas over the scab rock, as they are not as well adapted to thin soil and real dry conditions as is wheat. If you grow them at all, I should advise you to grow them on your deepest and moistest soil. The best peas that I know of for common field crops are the Canada field peas."

Seattle: "We are undertaking the improvement of several hundred acres in lower Benton county, on the banks of the Columbia river, and are confronted with great difficulty in holding the soil against the prevailing winds in that section. Can you recommend any grain or grass that will start and grow there without irrigation? "A. D. W."

Rye Most Feasible

"This problem has been worked on for many years with indifferent success. One of the best grasses for that purpose is quack grass, but as it is one of the worst of weeds, great caution should be used in sowing it where the seed is likely to be scattered over the country by the winds or running water. Another grass that is tolerably well adapted for this purpose is brome grass, though it is not really well adapted to quite the conditions found in the drifting sands along the Columbia. Of the grains, the most feasible crop for such conditions is rye. It makes a very quick growth, and will produce a large amount of vegetation with less water than any of the other cereals. This, as you may know, is often used in such portions of the irrigated belts as are subject to drifting. Rye is seeded in these localities as a protection for alfalfa. Another grass that is sometimes used for such purposes is commonly called beach grass (Ammophila arenaria). I would suggest that for a trial you seed a combination of winter rye, brome grass and beach grass as soon as we have had enough precipitation to moisten the soil nicely. This is the best suggestion that we can make, but we would in no sense guarantee the success of such trials."

FEDERAL SUPREME COURT JUSTICE PASSES AWAY

Albany, N. Y., Oct. 25.—Rufus W. Peckham, justice of the United States supreme court, died at his summer home at Altamont at 8:15 last night. Death was due to a complication of diseases.

Washington, Oct. 25.—The announcement of the death of Justice Peckham, while expected, came as a shock to his associates on the bench and in official circles.

Justice Peckham was a Democrat, and before taking a seat on the bench gave considerable attention to politics in New York. He was born in Albany, N. Y., November 8, 1838, and had been on the bench, state and federal, for twenty-six years. He came from the court of appeals of his native state.

Mr. Peckham's first office was that of district attorney of Albany county. He was elected to that position in 1868. He afterwards became in succession, a corporation counsel for Albany, member of the supreme court of the state, and associate justice of the state court of appeals. He was the last of President Cleveland's Democratic appointees to the federal supreme court. Chief Justice Fuller and Justice White being the other two. He took his seat in January, 1896.

Gave Entire Time to Duties.

His chief distinction was that of giving his time exclusively to the duties of the court. He accepted no outside appointments and undertook no work not connected with the high tribunal. He was in constant attendance on the court, and gave the most careful attention to all matters before it. He was married, but went little into society. He accepted no invitations to public functins and made no public addresses after taking his seat as a justice.

Cases involving corpoartions received special consideration at Justice Peckham's hands, and he was the author of some of the court's most noteworthy opinions along this line.

Several of Mr. Peckham's corporation decisions dealt with the Sherman anti-trust law in its application to railroads. These included the joint traffic and transmissouri cases, in both of which he held the law to be applicable.

The justices are so closely bound together by common ties that the passing of any one of them is sorely felt. There was genuine mourning yesterday among those with whom the late jurist had served so long, and this extends to the employes of the supreme court.

DISSENSIONS IN BRITISH COLUMBIAN CABINET

Victoria, Oct. 23.—It is announced that two of Premier McBride's ministers have resigned, following an announcement of his policy of aid to the Canadian Northern, controlled by MacKenzie & Mann. Premier McBride makes a brief statement regarding the resignations, announcing that Hon. R. G. Tatlow, minister of finance, and Hon. F. J. Fulton, chief commissioner of lands and works, have handed in their resignations and that these have been accepted. The reasons given, in brief, are that Mr. Tatlow thinks the amount of aid promised the Canadian Northern is more than it should be, while Mr. Fulton, for his part, is opposed to any aid to railways in the province.

Premier McBride reserves a fuller statement of the situation for a later time.

R. S. LOVETT HEADS UNION PACIFIC ROAD

New York, Oct. 23.—Judge Robert S. Lovett has been elected president of the Union Pacific railroad. This vacancy was caused by the death of E. H. Harriman. The other officers were all re-elected.

Immediately following the death of the railroad wizard, when the lines over which he dominated were being reorganized, Lovett was elected as the head of the executive committee of the Union Pacific which took charge of the railroad's affairs temporarily, pending the completion of permanent arrangements.

At that time it was announced unofficially that Lovett would succeed his dead chief to the head of the system and that under him the Harriman policies would be continued. Lovett was the general counsel for the Harriman lines and was Harriman's right hand legal prop.

He was made vice-president and general counsel for the Harriman lines about three years ago.

Coulee Branch Finished.

Wenatchee, Oct. 23.—The last rail was laid and the last spike driven on the Great Northern extension into Douglas county from Wenatchee to Mansfield on last Saturday, says the Wenatchee World. The trail service will commence in a few days, a three-coach train being run from Wenatchee to Mansfield and return daily. The road is now ready to be turned over to the Great Notrhern, the contractors having finished their work.

LAND HURT BY FIRE

GOVERNMENT EXPERT SAYS CUT-OVER AREAS NEED PROTECTION.

Predicts Dire Results Unless Flames are Held in Check—Spent Much Time in Study of Western Washington Soils.

Tacoma, Oct. 23.—The Washington correspondent of the Tacoma Ledger sends his paper the following:

How best to protect and utilize the cut-over lands in the State of Washington is a problem that has been studied during the past summer by Prof. W. J. McGee, of the United States department of agriculture, in co-operation with a number of scientists detailed to the work by the State government. And, in the opinion of Prof. McGee, this is by far the greatest economic problem that today confronts the people of the Evergreen State. The proper solution will mean much to the entire state; neglect of the problem will unquestionably result in untold damage which cannot be measured in dollars and cents.

Prof. McGee, who is in charge of soil erosion investigation conducted by the department of agriculture, and who is one of the foremost advocates of conservation of resources, spent the greater part of the past summer in Western Washington. He made a particular study of the soil formation; the relation of soil to the forests, and the best methods of protecting that soil against destruction. That it can be destroyed, Prof. McGee entertains no doubt, and that much of it will be destroyed unless properly guarded, he is equally confident.

State's Glacial Deposits.

"The most extensive glacial deposits in the United States are in Washington," said Prof. McGee to the Ledger correspondent, shortly after his return from the field. "These deposits form the basis of the soils, and the character of the soil is determined by its relation to the glacial deposits. In Washington the deposits consist principally of till, with beds of gravel, sand, etc., scattered through. These Washington deposits are exceptionally hard; there is little clay, but much silt. The quantity of sand and gravel is such that water circulates very freely throughout the entire deposit. That being the case, the water table—or the level to which the underground waters sink—is ordinarily away below the surface, and wells in most instances have to be sunk quite deep.

"There is an abundance of rain on the west slope of the Cascade mountains, but this water does not remain in the surface soil, but goes down to the water table. The glacial deposit which constitutes the soil of much of this region is a sieve rather than a sponge, and water will not remain near enough to the surface to be available for agricultural purposes except when it is held there by some other sponge than the glacial deposit itself. That is why so many attempts at agriculture on the glacial soils have failed; that particular soil has not been adapted to ordinary methods of agriculture.

Desert Is Underneath.

"During the thousands of years that have elapsed since the glacial ice melted nature has developed an agency for holding the water in the glacial soils of Western Washington—the forests and the associated flora—and it would be difficult to find a more effective agency for holding water. The gigantic trees towering high in the air; the mammoth brake as high as a man; the low-growing salal and Oregon grape, and the heavy moss forming a carpet covering over the surface, prevent evaporation of the water that falls as rain. All this flora finds root in the light, rich accumulation of mulch, and in the humus that permeates the upper layers of the soil. Two feet below the flora, however, is a tropical desert. The great firs have elaborate root systems only a foot and a half or two feet below the surface; those roots do not penetrate into the glacial clay beneath. This is evident when one of the big trees topples over and its root system is exposed.

"Nature has extended this floral cover over the surface with a view to utilizing the rain. When the glacial ice began to melt there was no vegetable life on the soil left exposed. Gradually, however, tree and plant life got a start and the decaying leaves and refuse began forming a mulch. As the ice receded the trees advanced eastward up the slopes, gaining a foothold in the mulch that was gradually forming under and around the standing timber. Not all of the glacial country, however, has been forested. On the lower slopes of Mt. Rainier are today many bare spots known locally as prairies. These are nothing more than galcial deposits over which mulch has never spread and therefore on which tree life is practically impossible. Had settlement of the Northwest been delayed 500 years there would have been no prairies; all would have been covered with luxuriant tree growth.

Protect Land from Fires.

"So much for the history of soil formation in the glacial region of Washington. The co-operative survey made this summer by Prof. Landes, Dr. Benson and Dr. Fry, of the State University, and Mr. Westover and myself, representing the department of agriculture, had to do with the cut-over lands and those soon to be cut over, in order to determine how best they may be utilized; what should be utilized, and what should be reforested. The important lesson growing out of the season's study is this: The cut-over lands should be protected from fire. That is the great desideratum. If possible it is more important to keep the fire out of the cut-over lands than out of the standing timber. The standing timber and undergrowth is green. In the cut-over areas, however, there usually remains on the surface all manner of timber waste which in time becomes dry. The humus, being no longer shaded, also dries. The waste, including the stumps, is of such great quantity that once fire starts, burns freely and produces great heat, and the fire consumes not only the brush and other forest waste, but all the mulch and all of the humus in the soil, and reduces the soil to the condition in which it was when the glaciers retreated thousands of years ago. Thus all of the conservation work of nature during the millenium will be lost. The land once burned over loses its productivity, virtually reverts to the desert and is lost, so far as productivity is concerned.

"Secondly, there are extended areas in the State of Washington where the lands, especially in the second and third benches above Puget Sound, where ordinary agriculture can hardly be made successful except under conditions such as permit of intensive operations—so intensive as to produce mulch or some other cover of humus in abundance corresponding to that provided on the timbered areas by nature. Ordinary agriculture never will fit in land of that type. Agriculture in that region will not be practiced until virtually a new agriculture is developed adapted to conditions which exist there. Such an agriculture no doubt can be developed and of such intensity that a family can be supported on five acres.

New Kind of Agriculture.

"While we did not go extensively into the question of developing a new kind of intensive agriculture suitable to this region, it is my judgment that poultry farming, bee farming, trucking and berry growing are all adapted to the peculiar conditions which prevail. Not all of the localities are suited to berries; in some localities the water is too low; in others too near the surface. But when the reports of our studies are published, regions suitable to this industry can be located. Up to the present time poultry farms are the only ones doing well so far as my observation went.

"As I said before, what we wish most to emphasize is, first, the extreme importance of preventing fires running over the cut-over lands, and, second, the necessity of bringing these lands, or some of them, under agriculture gradually by intensive methods. Some of these cut-over areas will naturally reseed themselves and carry another stand of timber; and that is true of localities best adapted to forestry. Where the forests will not renew themselves it is not advisable, in my opinion, to undertake to plant trees.

"The cut-over areas in general are in private ownership. In case they are in the neighborhood of cities they are subdivided and sold as building lots at prices far in excess of their agricultural value. Where the cut-over areas, however, are remote from large cities, the lands, when the timber has been removed, are usually abandoned and eventually revert back to the county for non-payment of taxes. The counties are thus acquiring considerable quantities of land. Prof. Landes has a plan of handling these lands, a plan which seems to possess merit. It is to have the State co-operate with the counties in such manner as to either acquire these abandoned lands as State property or allow them to remain in possession of the counties, but bring them under a comprehensive system of forest management whereby they would be made useful to the State as a whole. It is not his idea or mine to turn over these lands to the federal forest service, but rather to develop a State forestry system, such as exists in New York, Pennsylvania, and other of the older States. Such an idea is encouraged by the forest service officials."

Result Would Be Appalling.

What will happen if the cut-over areas are devastated by fire, Dr. McGee would not venture to predict. "The result would be appalling," he answered. "Floods would be frequent, following heavy rainfall; much of the remaining top soil would be washed off; the clear streams so characteristic of Western Washington, instead of having an almost constant flow, would become intermittently mountain torrents and dry gulches; the water supply of the western cities would be greatly impaired and the supply greatly diminished."

The results of the studies conducted by Dr. McGee and his associates are to be prepared in pamphlet form for circulation throughout the State. They probably will be issued some time this coming winter.

Canned Tomatoes Short

Sunnyside, Oct. 23.—R. I. McLaughlin, manager of the Sunnyside cannery, reports that owing to the shortage of tomatoes this year he will only be able to supply 600 cases, while he had orders for 2,000 cases. Sixteen tons of pumpkins were canned in two days, filling 54,000 cans. The company is paying from $6 to $9 per ton for cull apples and will use a large quantity.

PROHIBITION SPREADS

"DRYS" WINNING VICTORIES IN ELECTIONS THROUGHOUT THE STATE.

But Three Towns Have Voted "Wet" in Fifteen Elections That Have Been Held Under the New State Law—More Local Option Elections to Follow.

Olympia, Oct. 23.—Taking advantage of the new local option law, prohibitionists are rapidly extending the limits of the arid districts of Washington.

This State has for many years possessed an actual local option law. The law itself was all right, but the difficulty has been in the administration of the law.

That is to say, the laws of the State had placed the issuance of liquor licenses in the power of city councils and boards of county commissioners. The Supreme Court of the State has held that in the absence of fraud the courts cannot interfere with the exercise of these discretionary powers.

Could Be Dry.

So without the new local option law Washington could have been absolutely dry had the county commissioners and city aldermen so desired. And as a matter of fact many communities were dry, the city authorities or county commissioners having adopted a policy of refusing to issue licenses within these specified localities. These localities may be a whole city or just a country village and its surrounding territory.

Because of this old law with its arid patches here and there in the State, it is difficult to determine exactly the results of the workings so far of the new local option law.

As explained, the old law placed absolutely in the hands of officials the determining whether a section should be wet or dry, as well as the degree of dampness. When an application was made for a saloon license or saloon licenses to the county commissioners and protests were made by some of the citizens, the commissioners had the power to refuse any license or to grant them all, or grant one and deny the other, and this action could be taken irrespective of the desires of the majority of the voters if the commissioners desired.

With the Voters

The new local option law takes this option from the officials and places it with the voters. The law has been in operation but a few months. As a result of petitions local option elections have been held at a number of points with the result that 12 towns have voted dry and three have voted wet.

The names of the towns wherein the elections were held, result and dates of election follow:

Cashmere, Chelan county, dry; Aug. 14.

Rockford, Spokane county, dry; Aug. 14.

Puyallup, Pierce county, dry; Aug. 17.

Wenatchee, Chelan county, dry; Aug. 24.

Bothell, King county, wet; Aug. 27.

Spangle, Spokane county, dry; Aug. 31.

Toledo, Lewis county, wet; Sept. 7.

Deerpark, Spokane county, dry; Sept. 7.

Hartline, Douglas county, dry; Sept. 7.

Washtucna, Adams county, dry; Sept. 7.

Chewelah, Stevens county, dry; Sept. 7.

Newport, Stevens county, dry; Sept. 7.

Colville, Stevens county, dry; Sept. 7.

Kettle Falls, Stevens county, dry; Sept. 7.

Prosser, Benton country, dry; Oct. 11.

Petitions are out for local option elections in quite a number of the other counties, including towns in Spokane, Walla Walla, Whitman and Clarke counties. Probably within a year considerably more than half the area of the State will be dry, and it is confidently expected that outside of the larger towns it will only be a short time before most of the State will have determined to prohibit saloons.

New Home for Elks.

North Yakima, Oct. 25.—At a meeting of the Elks last evening it was decided to give a minstrel performance in this city November 9 and 10. The proceeds from the show will be applied to furnish the new home of the fraternity that is now under course of construction. Next week the local brothers will attend the minstrel show up at Ellensburg and the Kittitas organization will return the compliment by attending the performance here.

Most men marry for love—and some of them stay married for the same reason. There are others. Frank Melchoir of Hoboken, N. J., is one of the others. Mr. Melchoir has no fondness for a diet of "love and cheese and kisses." He demands a decidedly more substantial bill of fare. He was haled into court for administering forcible reproof to his better half; and in the cold light of the police court the source of domestic infelicity was disclosed. No, it was not that love had fled. Not at all. Love was permanently roosting there and had taken the place of the cook. That was the trouble. The head of the family would come home from work hungry and tired; and would find his wife arrayed like a bride; but with no supper ready.

To the manufacturing of fads in connection with postal cards there seems to be no end. The picture card originally contained an excellent idea. It had a touch of nature and appealed to the imagination. But what degenerate forms it speedily assumed, and what a nuisance it became! The indecent cards required police intervention. The merely vulgar card has had to seek obscurity and a congenial atmosphere. The varieties that are fit will survive, whether they are made in Germany, France or in the home market. The plain, unadorned post card retains its usefulness and hold, however, and will never be wholly displaced. In France, it appears, some aspirant to fame or pseudo-benefactor of mankind has invented a labor-saving card that resembles in form the Australian ballot. It bears all sorts of messages, sentiments and nutshell formulas, and all that the purchaser has to do is to find the box that fits his case and mark it with a cross. The "busiest" traveler, it is supposed, will spare the time to write the address, for, alas, that labor cannot be saved as long as names are so wastefully varied and places so innumerable. But think of the joy of the receipt of the inspiring card, with the one small printed line intended for his benefit among a wilderness of "sentiments" that are "lost" in space and time!. Think of the thrill in the stereotyped message! Labor saving has its limits. The inventors must really leave us a little spontaneity, a real chance for individual expression, for "home industry."

How much do men know about women's dress, and how much do they care about it? is an interesting question raised by a curious advertisement printed in London. The person who placed the advertisement announces himself as "a man of good position, with very critical, refined and exclusive knowledge," and much experience of the best firms which cater to women's wants. He is "willing to be consulted on matters of dress and millinery." The heads of a number of well-known dressmaking establishments, when asked for an opinion, all agreed that the knowledge of men about women's dress is small, and their advice in regard to it of little account. They admitted that the heads of some of the most noted dressmaking establishments had been men, but they were of the opinion that the men succeeded only by virtue of being good business managers, and that the details were worked out by women in their employ. "It is only the result that men notice," was the general agreement. Very likely there is truth in this view, but there is also truth in the opposite side of the proposition, says the Youth's Companion. Many women are so intent upon the details that they lose sight of the result. They cannot see the forest because of the trees; and it is here that the advice and judgment of a man of taste may be of service—especially the advice of the husband. He is a man of taste, else he would not have selected so charming a woman for a wife. In a general way, the preference of men is for simplicity in women's dress. It makes for good sense in material and for directness in accomplishing a desired end. Men are uncritical and undiscriminating in the matter of fabrics, but as the London dressmakers tacitly admitted, display frequently sound judgment in regard to the general effect. Above all, they are far more inclined than women to consider the individual case rather than the general style; and that is not an unmixed evil.

TIGER WHIPS A LION.

While an audience of 1,500 people was in the hall of a Coney Island animal show a lion and tiger started fighting, and before they could be separated the hind quarters of the lion had been so mangled by his striped antagonist that he had to be shot. The act which was being shown required seven lions and two tigers, and was considered a very daring feat on account of the enmity of the great jungle beasts. At every performance they snapped and snarled at each other, but had always been held in check by the trainer; on this occasion, however, he turned his head for an instant, and in that inconceivable time the lion saw his chance and sprang upon the tiger, after which, in spite of efforts to part them, they fought until both were helpless.

The Smallest Store.

What is believed to be the smallest store in the world was opened for business yesterday at Front street and Bigelow court, Worcester. It consists of two shelves 14 inches long attached to the building owned by J. Lewis Ellsworth, secretary of the State Board of Agriculture, and the space given up to the display of a few handfuls of fruit and peanuts contains 280 square inches.

For more than a quarter of a century the corner was the site of a news and peanut stand, but when the city extended Bigelow court from Front street to Mechanic street it was seen that the stand encroached on city land. It was demolished to allow the street to be extended, and the new line goes to within 14 inches of the Ellsworth Building.

Louis Oriente has rented these few inches from Mr. Ellsworth and started to do business yesterday, keeping his stock in trade in a little structure about the size of a dog house in the rear of the Ellsworth Building. When Mr. Oriente makes a sale he has to stand on the sidewalk.—Boston Globe.

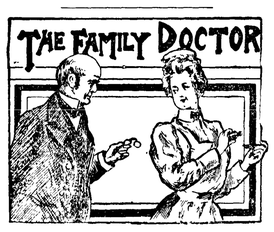
FANS ARE NO LONGER IN IT.

People Are Interested Now Only in The Antique Specimens.

It is said the fan trade is steadily declining, and this, too, in spite of the fact that at no time has that graceful weapon of coquetry and comfort been so universal. Some of the leading fan houses in Paris have closed their doors, and one of the best fanmakers, whose patronage includes the elite of Europe, declares the day is past when long prices will be paid for fans. One instantly seeks the reason for the change of sentiment which thus affects trade. The aforesaid fanmaker explains it by saying the German copies of the expensive styles have done a good deal to injure first-class trade. The richest customers buy only antiques. Instead of seeking the work of modern artists who make exquisite pictures they will fly into raptures over a dirty old fan that is by no means beautiful, merely because it is an "antique," and a possible Louis XVI. Not long since a lady went into ecstasies before a beautiful fan painted only the other day. She declared she had seen nothing lovelier in any art exposition in Europe, that nothing was done nowadays like it, it was genuine. She was not at all pleased when told the truth that it had been made in those very workrooms. The Japanese fan has proved a formidable rival to the artistic French fan. It is pretty and dainty, but its price damns it with faint praise. What lady arrayed in a $1,000 costume could fan herself with a bit of colored paper? But the majority of women eschew fans. They are only carried on state occasions for no one wants to be bothered with their care. A museum is the best place for this rare antique, particularly if it has any historic association guaranteed.



Flies.

In former times it was the big things that froze men's hearts with fear—the mythical giants, the dragons, the specters. Now science has taught us that the little things are the dangerous ones—the insects, mosquitoes and flies, and the microbes, those immeasurably minute plants and animals, too small for the unaided human eye to see.

We first learned of the part the mosquito plays in the transmission of malaria and yellow fever, but the menace that there is to mankind in the house-fly was for long unsuspected. It is only about fifteen years ago that the first heeded warnings were uttered against this insect, and its actual guilt as a murderer of men was clearly demonstrated only at the time of the Spanish War, when so many of the flower of American youth died of the typhoid fever that decimated the volunteer army in the detention camps in all parts of the country.

So active is the fly in the spread of this disease that it has been proposed in a recent publication of the United States Department of Agriculture to rename it the "typhoid fly."

It may carry the germs of this disease in one of two ways, either directly by soiling its feet with the discharges from fever patients, and then flying off and alighting upon food or falling into milk; or else by eating matter contaminated with typhoid and carrying the germs in its intestinal canal and depositing them upon food.

But it is not alone typhoid that flies spread. The germs of tuberculosis may readily be carried by them unless the patient has heeded the warnings sounded on all sides, and taken care to destroy all expectorated matter. The virus of a sore may be taken up by a fly's feet and deposited on a cut or abraded surface of the skin of another person. Any disease, indeed, which is capable of inoculation or of being spread by the taking in of its germs with food or drink may be spread by these noxious insects.

More Sun-Spots.

The pun is not regarded as a high order of humor; nevertheless a good pun is irresistible. A writer in the Baltimore American relates this conversation:

"Who is that neglected-looking little boy with that awfully dirty face?"

"He is the child of Professor Sonnenshine, the noted astronomer who lives over the way."

"Oh, is he? Come here, little boy. Run home and tell your father he doesn't need his telescope to see spots on the son."

Millions, But——.

Markley—Skinner has been trying to get me interested in a land boom in New Jersey.

Wiseman—Pshaw! that tract of his is practically worthless. I don't believe anything could ever live there but mosquitoes.

Markley—Ah! I guess that's what he meant; he told me there were "millions in it."—Philadelphia Press.

FRIDAY, OCT. 29, 1909

When the question of an appropriation for the installation and maintenance of an exhibit at the Exposition was being discussed, there were, it will be remembered, many who maintained that an exhibit of fruit, and vegetables, and farm produce, such as could be obtained in Clallam and Jefferson counties, wouldn't amount to a hill of beans when considered in comparison with similar exhibits from other counties. Even after the money was finally appropriated and the joint commission appointed, the members thereof expressed the opinion that nothing much could be done with fruits because this wasn't a fruit section. Not that fruit couldn't be grown here, but that there had thus far been no particular development of the fruit-raising industry in this section. It was considered that Clallam and Jefferson counties were timber counties—containing together the greatest body of standing timber in the world, why shouldn't they be classed, and always spoken of, as timber counties? We could show the world something in the way of big timber, but as to agricultural products, why, they were hardly worth mentioning! And tho the people were urged again and again by every paper in both counties to wake up, get busy, and send something, even if only a few flowers, the feeling continued almost to the close of the Exposition. Unfortunately, so far at least as we could discover, there wasn't a stick of timber, nor even a board or a shingle, the product of Clallam county, shown at the big fair. The joint exhibit failed utterly in this respect—but when it came to the despised and lowly vegetable, the apple that "can't be grown in this section, you know," and a few minor items such as butter and cheese, and grains and grasses, the very backbone of a prosperous community, the exhibits from Clallam and Jefferson came near to cleaning up everything in sight; in fact, the only reason they didn't do so was because there weren't as many exhibits in the Clallam-Jefferson booth as there were medals to be awarded! We have timber. It belongs to the timber barons. Save for purposes of taxation twould be better that we forgot its existance. But the fact that this is the coming great dairy and fruit section of the state should not be lost sight of for a moment.

The situation in Clallam county on the question of saloons or no saloons is much the same as in Spokane. With the new local option law, a few enthusiasts of Spokane insisted upon an immediate campaign and election. Better council, however, prevailed and Spokane county will vote on the local option question January 25th, 1910. This is according to L. R. Horton, superintendent of the Anti-saloon League of Eastern Washington, who said in Seattle the other day:

"The election will be for the entire county, outside the incorporated cities. It is predicted by those familiar with the county that the vote will go dry three to one."

This is undoubtedly the wise course to pursue. A campaign of education was necessary and a large amount of detail work must be done. Perfect organization must be secured. All this means the consuming of some time and energy and the temperance people need time to prepare for their fight.

ONE FOURTH TOWNS OF STATE ALREADY DRY

Only Two Towns Have Voted for Saloons and They Will Go Dry Next Fall.

There are in Washington 157 incorporated cities and towns. During the last year 23 of these have elected city councils who refused to grant liquor licenses. Under the new local option law, special elections have been held at a number of points with the result that 13 towns have voted dry and two have voted wet. The citizens of Walla Walla are going to have a chance to settle the local option question, for the present at least, at a special election to be held December 20. Walla Walla is the largest city in the state to try local option, and while both sides claim they will win, it is unsafe to make a prediction.

The names of the towns wherein elections have been held, with the result and dates of election follow:

Cashmere, Chelan county, dry, August 14.
Rockford, Spokane county, dry, August 14.
Puyallup, Pierce county, dry, August 17.
Wenatchee, Chelan county, dry, August 24.
Bothell, King county, wet, August 27.
Spangle, Whitman county, dry, August 31.
Toledo, Lewis county, wet, September 7.
Deerpark, Spokane county, dry, September 7.
Hartline, Douglas county, dry, September 7.
Washtucna, Adams county, dry, September 7.
Chewelah, Stevens county, dry, September 7.
Newport, Stevens county, dry, September 7.
Colville, Stevens county, dry, September 7.
Kettle Falls, Stevens county, dry, September 7.
Prosser, Benton county, dry, October 11.

Petitions are out for local option elections in quite a number of the other counties, including towns in Spokane, Walla Walla, Whitman and Clarke counties. Probably within a year considerably more than half the area of the state will be dry, and it is confidently expected that outside the larger towns, it will be only a short time before most of the state will have determined to prohibit saloons.

In future numbers of the Olympic-Leader, we shall endeavor to give a record of the towns that have voted dry under the local option law.

According to the report of the state superintendent, Washington expended during the past fiscal year the sum of $12,304,644 for the support of common schools, an expenditure of about $60 annually for each one of the children who attend school. It is extremely doubtful whether any other state in the Union can show a record equal to this. The heavy expenditures made show the willingness of the people of Washington to tax themselves heavily that their children may secure educational advantages, says the Seattle P.-I. To which the Sedro Wooley Courier adds:

But expenditures for public schools are not all the money spent by the people of this state for educational purposes The university, the college at Pullman and the various normal schools are all supported entirely by the state. In none of these institutions are there charges made for tuition. A boy can progress from his first entrance to the primary grades of the public school to a degree at the state university without expending a dollar for tuition fees. Indeed, in the public schools of Seattle and some other places he will not have to spend a cent for text books, either, for text books and apparatus are all furnished at public expense.

In addition to the cost of public schools, for the support of the institutions of the higher learning in this state an average of fully one-half of the money collected from direct taxation for the general fund of the state is expended. In some years the percentage of the general fund which has been thus expended has been as high as 60 per cent.

Taking it all in all, the record which Washington makes in liberality of expenditnres for the cause of education would be pretty hard to duplicate. For the matter of that, in few states is there a larger percentage of attendance upon the schools, in proportion to the whole population, than here.

It seems the law and order people of Stevens county are not adverse to mixing politics and temperance. Their county local option election will be held on the same date as the city primaries, November 9th. But then, it may be that their city government is not in the control of the saloon element.

The Georgetown city council has just granted a water franchise to run 18 years, making a rate of 75c for the first tap and 25c for each additional, with a meter rate of $1 for 500 feet, meters to be installed at expense of the company. A standpipe must be provided in the hill district for every thirty families who petition therefor.

MR. LISTER'S ADDRESS WAS WELL RECEIVED

An audience in the neighborhood of two hundred or over greeted the speakers at the Congressional rally at the opera house Tuesday night, seven-eighths of whom were voters, thus evincing an interest most remarkable considering the fact that the election next Tuesday is a special one and that only one man, to succeed the late Francis W. Cushman in congress, is to be elected.

T. F. Trumbull, chairman of the local democratic committee, presided and introduced first, Mayor Wright of Tacoma, one of the progressive young men of the City of Destiny, who was elected mayor in 1904, serving two terms and under whom the present extensive work in street improvements was inangurated, and which has so stimulated the progressive idea. Mr. Wright called attention to specific provisions of the republican platform in regard to tariff revision, and declared that the party had shown bad faith in that as a whole the tariff had been raised rather than lowered. He spoke of the fact that two-thirds of the states have voted in their legislatures for the amendment to the constitution for the election of senators by direct vote, but watch the senate, he said, and see if it will permit the demands of two-thirds of the states of the Union. The Aldrich-Cannon combine with the aid of a few democrats are in control, and it behooves the people to see to it that only progressive democrats and republicans of the La-Follette standard are henceforth elected, declared the speaker. Speaking of the harbors of the Pacific, Mr. Wright called attention to the fact that there are practically only three harbors on the whole coast, Golden Gate, the Columbia and Puget Sound. These three are in competition, and Mr. Lister's opponent being a resident of the Columbia river district, it is only natural to believe that his mind will be where his interests lie.

Mayor Wright paid Mr. Lister a high tribute as to his character and success as a young business man, who had grown up in the city of Tacoma from boyhood and where he counted his friends by his acquaintances. He had served on the city council of Tacoma, and in 1896 was appointed by Gov. Rogers as a commissioner of public institutions, being chairman of the Board of Control up to 1903. He was the author of the law under which the institutions are now governed with such success. This year the city of Tacoma has adopted the commission plan of government and Mr. Lister was elected on the commission for the revision of the new city charter.

In introducing Mr. Lister, the Chairman made an apology to the effect that he had advised the visitors that there was little interest in the campaign, but that the presence of such a magnificent audience on such an occasion was proof positive of the interest manifest.

Mr. Lister was greeted with generous applause, and his talk was short, rapid, and to the point. "Never in the history of parties," he said, "were party ties so loosely drawn. The result of the different votes taken on the tariff bill during the late session of Congress, when we found the progressive republicans and democrats aligned on one side, and on the other the so called regular or 'Cannon-Aldrich' republicans and some alleged democrats; the enormous increase of taxes in the state, occasioned by appropriations of $9,000,000, or a state tax of over $9 on every man, woman and child in the state, and the increase in city, town and county, have resulted in the voters becoming more independent, so that now they are looking more closely into the records of the individual and scrutinizing their position on important matters in deciding upon whom they will support. * * * I cannot, possibly, make my position more clear in a few words, than by stating that should I be elected my alignment in Congress would not be with Cannon-Aldrich crowd, or with democrats who support them, but with the progressive democrats and republicans, and I cordially invite the most rigid investigation of my life and record."

Hon. Dave Troy of Jefferson accompanied the speakers on their trip. Wednesday the party, accompanied by Assessor Govan and Chairman Trumbull, made a tour of the east end of the county.

In Iowa when the Mulct law proposition was first being agitated, it was claimed by those in favor of the saloon that to banish the saloon meant a dead town commercially. Exactly the opposite of this has proven the case at Waitsbury, a town of 2,000 inhabitants, in Columbia county, this state. A special from Dayton, the county seat of Columbia, which city has also voted dry, says that the merchants of Waitsbury claim a fifty per cent increase in collections and much larger sales of necessaries since the town was put on the "dry" list last June; and the farmers say there has been less difficulty than ever before in keeping men at work. Since the money does not all go to the saloon the good housewife can pay the grocer and the butcher and have a little left with which to buy other necessaries of life.

It was the same in Iowa. The business of the retail merchants in the smaller cities and towns increased as the saloons went out. There was less drunkeness and fewer arrests. The city jails were not crowded with offenders during harvest time as formerly. The towns in Iowa are prosperous and there are few saloons in Iowa outside the large cities.

Is Your Family Reading "Worth While"?

So much of current reading is merely entertaining at best that the question naturally arises, Is it worth while? Your sons and daughters are bound to read something. They hunger for stories which take them into the other half of the world—the world of adventure, of valor, of fortune-making. The problem is to give them such reading without putting into their hands the literature that is either silly or demoralizing. The editors of The Youth's Companion believe that a periodical can be made entertaining and yet "worth while," and The Companion is conducted on that theory. And that is one reason why more than half a million American families read it. The paper is safe, but not dull. Its tales of adventure illustrate the advantages of fortitude and self-reliance. Its stories of character lay stress on the truth that right conduct is never a mistake.

Every new subscriber will find it of special advantage to send at once the $1.75 for the new 1910 Volume. Not only does he get the beautiful "Venetian" Calendar for 1910, lithographed in thirteen color and gold, but all the issues of The Companion for the remaining weeks of 1909 from the time the subscription is received.

The Modesty of Women

Naturally makes them shrink from the indelicate questions, the obnoxious examinations, and unpleasant local treatments, which some physicians consider essential in the treatment of diseases of women. Yet, if help can be had, it is better to submit to this ordeal than let the disease grow and spread. The trouble is that so often the woman undergoes all the annoyance and shame for nothing. Thousands of women who have been cured by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription write in appreciation of the cure which dispenses with the examinations and local treatments. There is no other medicine so sure and safe for delicate women as "Favorite Prescription." It cures debilitating drains, irregularity and female weakness. It always helps. It almost always cures. It is strictly non-alcoholic, non-secret, all its ingredients being printed on its bottle-wrapper; contains no deleterious or habit-forming drugs, and every native medicinal root entering into its composition has the full endorsement of those most eminent in the several schools of medical practice. Some of these numerous and strongest of professional endorsements of its ingredients, will be found in a pamphlet wrapped around the bottle, also in a booklet mailed free on request, by Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y. These professional endorsements should have far more weight than any amount of the ordinary lay, or non-professional testimonials.

The most intelligent women now-a-days insist on knowing what they take as medicine instead of opening their mouths like a lot of young birds and gulping down whatever is offered them. "Favorite Prescription" is of KNOWN COMPOSITION. It makes weak women strong and sick women well.

Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Send to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., 21 one-cent stamps for paper-covered or 31 stamps for cloth-bound.

The Port Townsend Call tells of a farmer at Dungeness who tried the experiment of shipping 50 boxes of apples to a commission house in Seattle with unfortunate results. The Call says:

"The apples were in perfect condition and were larger and better in quality than those now on the market in that city, which are selling at $2 and $2.50 per box. After paying the freight and hauling the farmer would have little profit left. The shipment was made from Dungeness and at that place he could have sold them at $1.10 a box and saved the freight, but when the farmer was in Seattle a few days ago, he priced apples which were inferior to his and found that the price was $2 and $2.50 per box. Thinking he could get more in the metropolis, he refused the home offer and shipped to Seattle. The experience of Clallam county farmers is the same as all others who ship to that city and take a long chance on the Seattle spirit. The spirit works but one way and that is to do others."

It is a fact that many good items are lost to newspapers every week by the modesty of the people, who fail to tell the editor of the things concerning themselves. The right way to do is to stop the editor or some employee of the paper on the street or any place you may happen to meet them, and tell them you have been on a visit, have relatives or friends visiting you, that your wife entertained company—or any thing that in any way is a matter of news.

It is well known that county commissioners can put the territory outside of the cities and towns dry by refusing to grant the license. The county commissioners of Clarke county, knowing that if the county were to vote under the local option law, it would vote dry, have concluded to grant no more liquor licenses in order to avoid the expense of the county election. This is a wise course and the commissioners should be commended for it, and their example followed by commissioners of other counties. Undoubtedly three-fourths of the counties of Washington will vote dry under the local option law within the next year. The only objection to depending on the county commissioners is that where a county votes dry under the local option law, the better law enforcement provisions of the local option law can be used to make the will of the people effective, and it may be necessary to call a county local option election even though the commissioners have refused to grant licenses in order to equip the officials with better legal weapons to battle with the illegal liquor seller.

Peach Marmalade.

Peel and stone the peaches and weigh them. Allow three-quarters of a pound of sugar to each pound of the fruit. Put the fruit into the preserving kettle and set at the side of the range, where it will come gradually to the boil. Stew until tender and broken, drain off the superfluous liquid, add the sugar and cook steadily for ten minutes more. Just before taking from the fire stir in a tablespoonful of lemon juice for every pound of peaches. Take at once from the fire and seal.

WHEN FATHER KNOWS IT ALL.

When comp'ny comes to our place
That's when dad's mouth sets the pace—
You ought to hear him talk!
He reels off stuff on freight car loads,
On weather signs and brick-paved roads,
An' billiard chalk.

He'll speak of baseball, congress, soil,
The price o' meat an' lawnmower oil;
An' add some more
About the life on Mars, an' auto tires,
An' how to put out coal mine fires,
When once he has the floor.

Things we thought he didn't know
Off his tongue just seem to flow
As slick as candle grease;

He gives the cure for roup in hens,
The principles o' fountain pens,
Why Russhyer wanted peace,

When Roosevelt's due to come back home,
The best points in an art glass dome
Or real estate affairs,
Why women spend too much on dress,
The proper moves in games o' chess,
An' breedin' Belgian hares.

Then, well warmed up, he'll turn to beans,
An' life on board the submarines,
Or 'splain the income tax,
An' how to judge good fishin' lines
An' diff'rent kinds o' foreign wines—
An' state a million facts.

Everything he says has points to it,
Even his jokes and streaks o' wit
When comp'ny's at our house;
Though when there ain't, he don't say much,
An' keeps his face closed round our hutch
As quiet as a mouse.

That he cuts loose with that gab o'his'n,
An' never gets a call.

MEN WHO KNEW WHEN TO QUIT.

Financial Giants Who Did Not Play the Game Till It Killed Them.

A comment not infrequently heard in Wall street runs thus: "John D. Rockefeller was the wisest of them all. He knew when to quit." So did Andrew Carnegie. So, more recently, did James Stillman. H. H. Rogers was trying to throw off his harness when struck down.

The New York Journal of Commerce says the two grand old men in the financial world whose health never seems to trouble them are J. P. Morgan and James J. Hill. Neither is ever reported as suffering from nervous breakdown or as being compelled to visit the spas of Europe. These two old friends and associates jog along quietly but very effectively year after year, doing big things without permitting these big things to undo them.

Mr. Morgan does not believe in retiring altogether from business, as in many cases that have come under his observation retirement has been followed by the tortures of ennui and a speedy end. Mr. Hill a few years ago turned over many of his duties to his son, Louis, but he still retains enough offices to keep his mind from becoming rusty, yet not enough to prevent him from taking an enlightened part in the discussion and solution of large public problems, agricultural, economic, political and financial.

America's proud boast that she has no leisure class may hereafter be slightly modified, as our greatest men of affairs are beginning to realize that the making of money and the incessant fight for power are not the be all and end-all of life.

Hunting Grounds for Naturalists.

Those who are curious about birds may spend time to great profit in looking at the poulterers' shops when game is in season. There they will find many rare and even valuable specimens that apparently have been thrown into the hamper by the man who shot them on the chance of his receiving something from the London dealer. A very good museum of stuffed birds might be got by simply purchasing those that through ill luck have found their way into Leadenhall market.—Country Life.

He Didn't Propose.

The girl thought she would try a little strategy.

"Mr. Slowfellow," asked she, "don't you think two can live as cheaply as one?"

"Nothing to it," was the prompt reply. "My chum and I tried it once. Kept bachelor's hall in a flat."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

So Helpful.

"Can't we instruct the poor about how to live properly and improve their general condition?"

"Why, certainly we can. Let us get up a series of lectures at one of the fashionable hotels."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Here is an expression that should be called in: "He has made mistakes, but who has not?"

Within the past six years accidents to railroad passengers on steam roads have been reduced by half. The great Pennsylvania system recently reported that all of its passenger service was operated for a full year without a single fatal accident. Although travel by steam roods has become safer, there has been little or no improvement so far as trolley roads are concerned. They have not yet attained an effective block system or other safety devices common to the older type of railway

Hosiery covers a multitude of shins. No institution that forms part of our daily lives comes closer to us. Therefore, it is only right that the one thing we do not know about it should cause us much mental distress. The question is: Do stockings (and socks) wear out from the inside or from the outside? We believe the matter worthy of the attention of a master mind, so we have taken it up. We see on the fashion page that women are going to start wearing two pairs of stockings instead of one, and both at the same time. We are told the effect will be lovely. For instance, a pair of bright green ones underneath, with a pair of gauzy black ones on top, will give a beautiful shimmering ensemble that is all the fireworks. Other combinations may be added to suit the taste. All we have to do is to notice which stocking gets the hole first. If it is the inner one, we can deduce that our stockings, and eke our socks, wear out from the inside. If it is the outer one it is just as easy to conclude that they wear in from the outside.

Willie—"Pa says perpetual motion is a failure." Harry—"Huh! Hasn't your pa ever seen a gas meter?"

"In making the letter 'I,' Mabel," said the kindergarten teacher, "you have omitted something. Can you see what it is?" "Oh, yes," answered Mabel, looking at her copy, "I forgot to put the eyebrow over it."

Mother—"Who has been at my pies I wonder?" Bright Boy—"I guess it must have been the rats." Mother—"Rats, fiddlesticks! What kind of rats would eat nearly a whole pie?" Bright Boy—"Why, pi-rats."

One day small Edgar and his mother got separated in a department store downtown and stepping up to the floor walker Edgar said: "Please, mister have you seen anything of a woman without a little boy? If you have, I'm that little boy!"

Even in house cleaning, when a woman passes a mirror she "fixes" herself a little.

PUBLIC OFFICES SOLD.

The Places Auctioned to Men Who Agreed to Accept Least Salary.

It has remained for East Stroudsburg, Pa., to set the pace in municipal reform, the St. Louis Republic says. This community of less than 3,000 population is known within only a limited area. It goes the even tenor of its way and lives at peace with all the world. Very little of exciting episode comes from that quarter, but occasionally it has a new conviction and the courage to make it known. This town does not spend much time debating a new idea, but tries it to see how it works. Like many other places, East Stroudsburg has not been quite pleased with the way its public business has been transacted. Certain offices had been filled by appointment of council, but a novel scheme has been devised and trial made this year. The offices were put up at auction with the best bidders getting the jobs.

Bids were invited by the council for the offices of water superintendent, secretary of borough affairs and borough solicitor. The places were given to the men who agreed to accept the least salary, the council reserving the right to pass upon the qualifications of the bidders. To E. M. Walters, who agreed to perform the duties for $45 a month, the office of water superintendent was allotted. Ira La Bar obtained the office of borough secretary and solicitor, to receive $125 a month for the first and $25 for the other office. After several weeks' trial the citizens are seriously regarding their device as a political reform measure. It is certainly original, to say the least, but it would seem that the salary, if monthly, is out of proportion to the character of the office in a borough of about 3,000, or else the officer transacts about all the business done. Perhaps the office of borough secretary had only one bidder.

Vegetable Marrow.

Peel the vegetable and cut it into squares of uniform size, about an inch square if the vegetable is young and tender. Cover with salted boiling water and cook for fifteen minutes, or until tender. Drain, handling carefully not to break the squares, and keep hot while a white sauce is prepared. Put the marrow into a heated vegetable dish, pour the well-seasoned white sauce over it and serve.

Attorney McHugh of Seattle succeeded in getting an order from the superior court Friday, setting aside a tax deed in the case where a subsequent tax certificate issued on the day of delinquency, an original certificate holder allowing subsequent taxes to become delinquent. The court holds that a subsequent purchaser of a certificate must wait a year before he can purchase as well as the original purchaser, and that he does not become a legal redemptioner of the previous certificate unless the subsequent tax is delinquent one year at the time of his purchase of a certificate. There are several cases where deeds have issued in like cases in this county and the case will therefore probably be appealed.

ANGELES SCHOOL NOTES

Port Angeles High School Foot Ball Team vs. Vashon College of Burton.

The local high school team met the foot ball team of Vashon College on the home grounds last Saturday and a very close and interesting game was played, resulting in a score of 3 to 0 in favor of the visiting team. Considering that this is the first game of the season with an outside team, and the condition of the field on account of the rain, the boys did very well, showing a thorough knowledge of the game and a lot of foot ball pluck and spirit. The rooters were not as plentiful as had been expected, due to the very wet rain which continued to come down during the entire day, even until the close of the game. Fast playing was impossible under the conditions and nearly all the gains were made by line smashes on both sides. The forward pass was attempted a couple of times on each side but was a failure on account of the slippery field and the condition of the ball. While the visiting team came as a representative of Vashon college, it was composed of players from both Vashon college and Burton high school, a fact which of course added to the strength of the aggregation. "Jupiter Pluvius" decreed that the gate receipts should be very small and they were, but with the help of foot ball enthusiasts in the town, the boys were able to raise nearly the entire amount guaranteed the visiting team. The manager supplied the needed balance and the boys from Vashon went home rejoicing. The following was the Angeles line up: Warren Woodcock, r. e., Louis Mona, r. t., Clyde Sewell, r. g., Ben Wilcox, center, Walter Tuttle, Shepard, l. g., Paul Farmer, l. t., Howard Farmer l. e., James Lotzgesell, q., cap., Duane Allen, f., Bayton, r. h., Robert Gould, l. h. A return game will be played with Vashon in the near future, probably Nov. 6. This game will be played in Seattle. Games may also be arranged with Port Townsend.

The total enrollment for the first month this year is 472, a gain of 8 over last year.

Examinations in high school and the grades will be given next week in the work of the first quarter. The superintendent has made the regulation that pupils who rank 90 in attendance (having been in attendance 90 per cent of the time, deducting 2 per cent for every tardy mark) may be excused from taking examination in subjects in which they have a daily grade of 90 or above.

Miss Malvine Linwell is the new principal on Pine Hill.

Up to date the manual training department has turned out four drawing desks, two teacher's desks, one type writing table and has put in the shelves in the superintendent's office. All of this work represents not only a considerable saving of expense to the district, but also training for the boys in the department. It looks as if the department is going to make good.
