TRUNK HIGHWAY TO THE PACIFIC

Would Assist in Development of the County and Add to Welfare of the People.

At a special meeting of the Board of Directors of the Port Angeles Commercial Club held Tuesday night at the Club rooms in joint session with the county commissioners, called by the president for the purpose of discussing ways and means of putting the road to the lakes in passable condition for the coming season, the commissioners agreed to do everything in their power to assist, and expressed their confidence in finding a way out of present difficulties.

The consideration of a plan for the building of a general system of roads through the county was had, and the following resolution was presented by Mr. J. P. Christensen and unanimously adopted:

Resolved at a meeting held the 6th day of February, 1912, and attended by the members of the board of County Commissioners, officers of the county and members of the Board of Directors of the Commercial Club of the city of Port Angeles, that,

Whereas, it would materially assist the development of our county and add to the welfare of its citizens should the county inaugurate the building of good roads, and

Whereas, a proposition submitted to the voters of the county at the next general election for the purpose of bonding thecounty for the construction of a permanent Trunk Highway from the east line of the county to the Pacific coast should be intelligently discussed in advance of such election. Be it therefore

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished to each of the newspapers circulated in the county with the request to publish same, and thus invite its readers to express their views on this public question. Be it further

Resolved, That the Commercial Club, through its secretary, extend a general invitation to county districts to send delegates to a Good Roads Convention to be held in the city of Port Angeles—date to be fixed later by Club—for the purpose of considering the proposed bond issue and other matters of general interest to the taxpayers of the county."

GOOD ROADS CONVENTION AND CELEBRATION

The members of the Commercial Club and citizens are asked to assemble in numbers at the Club rooms next Wednesday night to discuss the proposed Good Roads Convention idea, for the discussion of the proposed bond issue for a trunk highway the entire length of the county, and for a celebration of the advent of Elwah power in the city. These are important matters and should receive the attention of citizens generally.

A. J. Cosser, Secretary.

BROTHERHOOD MEETING

The meeting of the Brotherhood has been posponed from Monday, to Friday, the 23rd of February. A speaker will be sent by the state commission on play grounds and public recreation.

The Middle West was struck with another cold wave first of the week. This must be becoming monotonous. Here, it has been unseasonably mild all week, with fruit buds opening and early flowers blooming.

Several large realty deals are recorded in this week's list of city property transfers.

CHAMBERS FARM SOLD

Biggest Deal in Angeles Property in Years, Pulled Off by Lewis Levy.

Final transfer of the old Chambers farm, the deal for which has been pending for some weeks, has been made, and John H. Dalton of Chicago becomes the owner of 142 acres of suburban property at a figure said to be in the neighborhood of $40,000. The deal between the heirs of Mr. Chambers, owners of the property, and Mr. Dalton was handled by Lewis Levy. Next to some of the big timber transfers, it was the largest sale pulled off in recent years.

A splendid dairy farm, cleared and level, it lies on the first bench above the town, affording a fine view of the water, and being crossed by the city water main, it will be available for home building almost without further expense.

FRANCIS STREET HEARING

Next Tuesday. New Liquor Ordinance Shelved for Present.

Judge McClinton appearing for objectors to Francis street assessment roll, matter was referred to city attorney for one week and hearing adjourned to Tuesday, the 13th.

Selection of location of substation was referred to light committee and mayor for one week.

City attorney was instructed to draft new ordinance with Olympic Power Co. in accordance with modifications agreed upon.

Attorney reported regarding preparation of new liquor license ordinance that if present ordinance be repealed we would have no ordinance until January 1st, the time set by the Council for new ordinance to go into effect; if not repealed we will have conflicting ordinance for next eleven months; and suggested postponment until date when Council wishes new ordinance to go into effect. On vote, all except Councilman Dustman voted for postponment.

ENNIS CREEK BRIDGE

Will Be Built by "State" and County at Expense of About $11,000.

Word having been received from the State that state aid funds to the amount of some $10,500 were available for the Ennis Creek bridge, the commissioners have authorized the call for bids. The bridge will cross the creek some little distance above the present bridge, will be ninety feet high in the highest place and three or four hundred feet long. Bids will be opened March 5th, 1912.

DANCE AT PARISH HALL

Under the auspices of St. Andrews and St. Margarets Guilds, there will be given an entertainment and dance in Parish hall February 16th. The entertainment will consist of a very funny burlesque "How the Story Grew" and a vaudeville show. The good laugh you will have will be worth alone the price of admission, 25cts.

The steamer Whatcom skipped its run from Seattle to Port Angeles Tuesday to serve our English cousins over at Victoria, returning this way, reaching here about 6:00 p. m., a short time after the arrival of the Bellingham. Great is the service the stamboat company is handing out to us.

Jefferson county has purchased an automobile, and ordered a garage built, for use of her county officials.

THE RAILROAD SITUATION

Will Be Put Squarely Before People at Meeting of Commercial Club Wednesday Night.

The railroad situation as it is today, and how we may assist, will be fully given and discussed at a meeting of the Commercial Club to be held at the club rooms next Wednesday night, Feb. 14.

Reports regarding the future of the road have gone out which are to say the least misleading. The air has been cleared somewhat. Letters are now at hand from President Earles and others which put the proposition in a new light.

The meeting Wednesday night will be under the direction of the Commercial Club and the public generally is invited to attend. The purpose is to put the matter squarely before the people, that all may know how necessary is quick, concerted action, to the end that each will give such assistance as is possible to guarantee the realization of our fondest hope—the immediate constuction of the railroad.

The hall will doubtless be packed on this occasion—and it should be—as this is a momentous question at this time.

N. P. LAYING HEAVY STEEL

Line North from Summit Being Put in Shape for Extension.

According to a letter received by a resident of this city yesterday from a friend in Elma, Wash. says the Townsend Leader, the Northern Pacific has a force of men laying heavy steel to Summit. Local people take a great deal of encouragement from the announcement, believing that operations on the line at that point presages early development in the affairs of the Port Townsend Southern railroad. The Northern Pacific, it has always been given out, will tie in the local road with the main system at Elma, on the road between Olympia and Grays Harbor. The line has been completed this way to Stimson, several miles northeast of Elma, and along the proposed route of the Port Townsend Southern, which swings into Shelton and then slightly northwest to Potlatch, on the west shore of Hood Canal, following the shore line to Quilcene. The portion of the letter which touches on the situation is as follows:

"The Northern Pacific has 300 men at work on the Elma-Summit line, and have nearly finished laying 14 miles of heavy steel. They are working four crews, three track crews, and one bridge crew. They are placing two large turntables, one at Elma and one at McCleary. It is probable that the turntables are for the use of a gasoline car which they will run from Aberdeen to McCleary, the latter town being where old Summit was, or near there. But they have laid heavy steel three miles beyond McCleary, and that is what looks good to me."

THE COMMERCIAL CLUB

At a regular meeting of the Commercial Club's Board on the 7th, the secretary was directed to prepare data on the advantages this section has to offer as a location for the Milwaukee's Tourist Hotel, one of which is to be built at some place on the Sound.

Resolution was adopted endorsing the scheme to open channel connecting Townsend and Oak bays.

Secretary reported $777.37 in treasury with certain appropriations against same.

THOSE BUSTED TRUSTS

Told What Had Not Been Accomplished, and Suggested Remedy.

Judging by the crowd that turned out to hear Anna Agnes Maley Monday night, the Socialists have been exceptionally fortunate in the advertising they have received for their lecture course. Starting out a few weeks ago with a half filled house composed mostly of members of their own party, their audiences have grown, till late comers have found standing room only. Most noticeable has been the steady increase in business and professional men, until at the last meeting almost every firm in the city was represented. Thinking people like to get their information concerning any movement at first hand and were there to learn of what fearful heresies these leaders of the party of agitation are guilty.

Miss Maley was a pleasing speaker, her enunciation being perfect and her main poin's being emphasized by lowering rather than raising the voice. She was repeatedly and enthusiastically applauded.

Miss Maley took up the history of the leading cases that had been brought under the Sherman anti-trust law, telling of results obtained and of benefits accruing therefrom. She told us what Roosevelt, Cummings, Taft, Bryan and others thought of the trusts and of the various solutions of the problem proposed by them, as well as of that proposed by the Socialists.

The talk was logical, convincing, entirely free from bombast and demagogism, and could not help but start people thinking. Whether the Socialist solution be more practical than any of those proposed by the leaders of the old parties or not, it is certain that agitation is the most essential thing in this country today, to the end that some radical change in conditions may be had.

PYSHT EXTENSION DROPPED

Investment Greater than Would Be Warranted to Handle Tonnage.

The Pysht extension of the proposed Port Crescent division of the Morrow railroad will not be built at this time, and the surveyors have been called in and paid off. This decision, it is understood, was reached at a conference with Mr. Merrill of the Merrill-Ring Co., after it had been ascertained by the engineers that the extension would prove a very expensive piece of work.

Work on the main line is completed, save office work by the engineers, and in a few days the right-of-way committee will have the last data necessary.

Port Townsend's city council, which has been considering Mr. Morrow's application for franchise the past two weeks, now has the ordinance ready for passage at the next meeting. After that detail is settled, the Townsend branch will be surveyed and the right-of-way taken in hand by the people there.

At Chimacum, where the survey has just been completed, a meeting was held a day or two ago at which Mr. Morrow was given a hearty welcome and promised the entire right-of-way as soon as the engineers' work is completed so the deeds can be made out. Mr. Corlett, an expert right-of-way man, will assist in getting matters in shape.

Mr. Morrow, writing under date of February 6th, again cautions the Angeles people against too much delay, saying he is ready to start within thirty days but that delay means danger and he is not in a position to guarantee that he can secure the money at any great future date. "The right-of-way must be secured," he writes, "for we must have the deeds on deposit as an asset to float bonds on."

WOMEN AS VOTERS

Eugene W. Chafin, once prohibition candidate for President of the United States, in an address before the Woman's Christian Temperance Union said:

"Men never tried to discover any reasons for voting intelligently, but women are now trying, and that shows that a new and far-reaching element in national politics has been introduced. Men never took the trouble to learn how to vote—they voted because they were men, not because they knew how to vote. With women I see its different."

That is so close to the truth that it scarcely needs discussion. It must be a fact, admitted by most students of politics, that men seldom exercise their brains in the close investigation of any political subject.

In connection with their determination to learn what they are about, it is illuminating to study the list of questions recently sent out by the National Council of Women Voters "to encourage practical preparation for citizenship." Some of the questions follow:

Explain the difference between real and personal property.

What is the status of the eight hour law in Washington?

What is the child labor law in Washington?

What is the initiative and referendum amendment?

What is the legal procedure of a widow in settling up her husband's estate?

What provisions have been made by the United States government regarding postal savings banks?

Explain the advantages of a parcels post system in this country.

How many and what are the departments of the city government and how many members in each department?

What are the different steps in creating an ordinance of the city council?

From what source is the states income derived?

What are the powers and duties of the mayor?

What are the distinguishing features of the Australian ballot?

Is property inherited from another state than the one in which the legatees reside governed by the law of that state?

What is meant by the short ballot?

Tell of municipal government in Great Britian and Europe.

What is the present law of taxation?

What is the single tax?

What is direct legislation?

What is the relation of federal, state, and municipal laws; do they correlate or operate against each other?

Should public utilities be owned and controlled by the people?

Give record of Budapest's municipal bakery.

In place of property holders being assessed for street improvements, would not a general fund for such improvements bring relief and be more equitable for the home makers?

How does the law interpret the word householder?

What are the departments in our state government?

What is the law regarding naturalization of children born in foreign lands of foreign parentage if the father is naturalized? What is the status of his wife?

Albert Johnson, proprietor of the Hoquiam Washingtonian, one of the leading newspapers of the state, was unanimously endorsed as a candidate for congress at a meeting of the commercial club of his home city. Mr. Johnson will accept and run as a candidate at large. He received the endorsement of the newspaper men of his section at a banquet given in their honor at the recent meeting at Olympia of the S.W. Wash. Dev. Assn.

A SOCIALIST SUPPORTS BOY SCOUT MOVEMENT

William H. Watts, Socialist, has taken direct issue with many Socialists who have been attacking the boy scout movement. In a signed article in the Socialist-Democratic Herald, the leading socialist paper in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, he says emphatically,

"What the boy scouts need at the hands of the Socialist press is a severe letting alone. The good people who are trying to solve the boy problem in their own way are not likely to be diverted from their purpose by the fulminations of space-writer who are thrown into hysterics every time they see a drab uniform going down the street."

The writer says he has made a study of the three Boy Scouts movements in the country, namely,—the American Boy Scouts, the Boy Scouts of California, and the Boy Scouts of America. Concerning the last he writes: "The Boy Scouts of America is a strictly non-military organization. It is the organization that is headed by Ernest Thompson Seton, with President Taft and Theodore Roosevelt as honorary president and vice-president, respectively. I have looked the manual of the Boy Scouts of America through very carefully, and can confidently assert there is no militarism in it. There may be things in it that are trivial and not worth while, but there is nothing in it necessarily objectionable. The alleged quotations from the Boy Scout manual recently published in the Chicago Daily Socialist, printed from the Miners Magazine, are not to be found in the Boy Scouts of America. When Sir Baden Powell started the Boy Scout movement in England he made military training a prominent feature of the work, and when the Boy Scouts of America was first organized the English manual, with its military features was adopted to start with; but the American promoters of the Boy Scouts saw that militarism would not do for this country and a new manual was drawn up with the objectional features left out. The Socialist objectors have probably been quoting from the English manual. In California the Boy Scout leaders insisted that the boys could not be attracted without military features, but I am told they are now beginning to come over to the non-military idea.

"The Boy Scouts of America are not allowed to have guns, either at home or in camp. The shooting of birds and wild animals is discouraged and the boys are taught to photograph them instead. One of the most prominent illustrations in the book is the diagram of a blind for this purpose. In the section on archery the boy is taught that the gun is a weapon for cowards and fools, inasmuch as anybody can use it, it is always accurate, and the force is supplied from an independent source, whereas the bow has no force or accuracy except that put in to it by the the strength and skill of the archer. This was a new way of looking at the gun proposition to me and it cannot but have a beneficial suggestiveness upon the minds of the boys.

"The manual is a book an inch thick, literally packed with useful things that the city boy has no means of learning unless there is some such organization as the Boy Scouts to teach him. Indeed if the boys are taught one-half of what is in the book there will be no time for militarism. As one looks at one thing after another, some of them of the utmost importance, that boys usually know nothing of, he can hardly help getting enthusiastic. Even tho military cranks in certain localities may try to mislead the Boy Scouts, the movement as a whole must be set down as the force making for a better social order, for it is probably doing more than any other one agency to furnish good citizens for the Co-operative Commonwealth."

President Taft sent a message to congress favoring world-wide inquiry into present conditions. He urged an international inquiry into the high cost of living, and asked authority to invite the nations of the world to a conference in Washington or elsewhere to make plans for the investigation of the "high prices that have so distressed the people of the world."

HIS QUAINT SIMPLICITY.

It Won John Burroughs a Place in the Treasury Department.

Early in the sixties of the last century, when Hugh McCulloch had just been appointed comptroller of the currency to organize the new department under the provisions of the national bank act, there walked into his office, unannounced, one day a stranger dressed in "store clothes" and wearing long hair.

"My name is Burroughs—John Burroughs," said the visitor. "I should like to have a position in your department."

"What do you know about banking?" asked the comptroller, thinking that perhaps in the unique stranger might be discovered some genius or an actuary or accountant.

"Unhappily, nothing," replied the applicant.

"Who sent you here?"

"No one."

"Well, who's your congressman? To whom can you refer me?"

"I know no congressman."

"And you expected to get a government position without qualification for the position and without indorsement or backing of any character?"

"I think I could learn office work here, and the salary would be a great help to me in my literary career."

"Oh, you are a writer, are you?" What's your line? Poetry, perhaps?"

"I try to write poetry," confessed the visitor.

"Got any of it with you?" asked the comptroller, now considerably amused. "If so let's see it."

The poet-naturalist produced a song redolent of early spring. It treated of the chewink, the oven bird and the Carolina wren, with a dainty reference to forest violets and hepatica.

"This is great," commented the comptroller. "It's right out of the woods."

"Which is more than can be said of the author," observed Mr. Burroughs, thinking of the world of finance which he was seeking to invade.

The comptroller laughed. "And is this all you have in the way of credentials?"

"I have some more poems at home," was the bland and sincere reply.

In much merriment the comptroller summoned an assistant. "Here's the most astonishing instance of ingenuousness I have ever encountered in public life," said he. "That man over there applies for a government position, and the only backers he can name are the muses. Yet this department is not political, and somehow I'm inclined to put the fellow to work. I am captivated by the man's honest simplicity."

So John Burroughs was set to work as a treasury clerk. No appointment ever before had been secured on such a basis, and no one since has had the temerity in asking for a government job to cite song birds and wild flowers as his only references.

Not So Marvelous.

"I tell ye what it is, Silas," said Uncle Mose Peavey as he and the letter carrier sat in the postoffice discussing things in general. "old Squire Dunkley's a-bustin' good shot with a rifle. Ye can talk all ye please about these glass ball shooters and your various champeen shots down in the city, but there ain't many on 'em can shoot in the same day with the squire. He kin hit a dollar throwed into the air at fifty yards nine times out o' ten."

"Yes, I reckon he kin," said Silas. "But what if he kin? After all, Mose, ye know as well as I do that a dollar looks ten times bigger to old Squire Dunkley than it does to most o' the rest on us."

Too Much Beard.

The great beards grown in California were sometimes a source of embarrassment. When a steamer arrived a father might be seen caressing little ones whom he now saw for the first time, while the children were frightened at finding themselves in the arms of such fierce looking men. Wives almost shared the consternation of the children. "Why don't you kiss me, Bessie?" said a pioneer to his newly arrived wife. She stood gazing at the hirsute imitation of her husband in utter astonishment. At last she timidly ejaculated, "I can't find any place!"—From Newin's "Life of Bret Harte."

A gentleman who had grave doubts as to a servant's sobriety one day accused him of intemperance and as a test chalked a line across the floor and commanded him to walk along it.

The fellow looked at the line for a bit, then at his employer, and said: "No jokes, now, sir. Which line do you want me to walk on?"

LABOR OFFICIALS INDITED

Indianapolis, Feb. 6—Union labor officials and agents, said to number between thirty and forty, whom the government holds criminally responsible with the McNamaras and O. E. McManigal for perpetrating more than 100 explosions in cities from Massachusetts to California in the last six years, including the wrecking of the Los Angeles Times building, were indicted today. Thirty-two indictments were returned.

Capiases for arrests have been issued and all the men indicted are to be taken into custody on a day secretly fixed by the government. March 12 has been set for the arraingement before Federal Judge A. B. Anderson, in Indianapolis.

It will be a very natural mistake for the farmer in the northern part of the corn belt to make this year to select larger ears of corn for seed than will mature in an average season. The past season was one of unusual length between frosts, there being 165 days instead of 120 days, as is often the case. This made possible the ripening of huge, deep kerneled ears, seed from which it would be decidedly unsafe to use next year for any considerable portion of the field crop.

A Valentine That Came on the Wings of the Wind

By HOWARD FIELDING

The eve of St. Valentine's came early by an hour or more. At 4 o'clock the streets were dim with shadows flying along under the scurrying clouds that grazed the tops of the houses, and all the windows were alight. It was a picture of a rainstorm without rain. Not a drop had fallen.

Among the tall buildings the wind rioted in gusts with breathless calms between. Hats were skipping merrily in every direction, but the worst place was the edge of the new triangular skyscraper, the Anderson building.

From the leeward side of this structure came forth Mr. Reginald Forrester, very carefully dressed, as usual, but in a quiet style befitting the extreme modesty of his disposition. He carried some legal documents rather loosely in his hand with a rubber band around them, and he might have borne a lighted candle without its being extinguished, for there was no more wind where he walked than in a closed room. He passed the edge of the building, and in an instant his hat was snatched from his head and the papers from his hand. The hat struck an urchin, who reeled at the blow; the documents were pasted upon the broad back of a policeman.

At the same moment a young woman was propelled against Forrester's shoulder with considerable violence and caromed fortunately into the lee of the building, where she stood panting. Forrester turned to beg the young lady's pardon, but she was winking the dust from her eyes and did not see him.

The policeman reached a fat hand around and pulled the papers from his back as if they had been a plaster, and the urchin recovered Forrester's hat and also a large square envelope.

"This isn't mine," said Forrester, with the envelope in his hand.

"'Tain't mine, that's sure," said the boy, accepting a coin and promptly vanishing upon the wings of the gale.

Forrester stepped back into shelter and glanced at the envelope, which was addressed to Mr. William E. Langdon in a script distinctly feminine, the writing of a cultivated woman. The inference was easy that the inclosure was a valentine.

The human mind under proper conditions is a marvelously rapid machine. Within a few seconds there passed through Forrester's field of consciousness a series of memories covering a considerable period, a number of separate inferences, including a judgment of character, and upon the top of this an argument as to a very delicate question of conduct. He knew William E. Langdon. The address upon the envelope fixed the identification beyond doubt. As a lawyer he had had certain dealings with Langdon and had declined to have any more. Upon this issue he had broken off a partnership, his former associate persisting in continuing as Langdon's legal adviser. Forrester knew the man to be not only a promoter of dishonest corporations, a trickster and a swindler, but one whose fate was sure, his exposure only a matter of time, his punishment not to be evaded except by successful flight. Moreover, Langdon was a creature of low moral standard all the way through, a college bred crook, the "gentlemanly" villain of the stage.

It seemed probable that this envelope had been dropped by the young woman who still stood in the lee of the building. If any one else had let it fall that individual would have been visibly engaged in searching for it, but the girl had something in her eye and was giving all her attention to that.

She was very pretty, and the charm of youth and innocence was declared in every line of her. The indefinable beauty of maidenhood, the despair of all the poets, glorified and made her sacred, and the thought of her sending a token of affection or even of remembrance to such a man as Billy Langdon was a proper subject for the tears of angels. There was nothing obtrusively angelic about young Mr. Forrester, but I will ask you to believe that he was an honest man and a respecter of women and one that held himself to very strict account.

But what could he do? The girl was a stranger to him. He had never seen her before, and it was highly probable that the scheme of destiny did not include another meeting between them in this world. There was a recklessness of fate in the way they had been hurled together, a seeming callous indifference. Whatever chance may be, it is certainly not a gentleman and has no chance of disclosing itself in the opposite character. Yet like many rude folk in the world, it is often the instrument of good. How could it be made so in the present instance?

Forrester could not scrape acquaintance with the girl for the purpose of telling her that Langdon was a rascal, but there must be some proper way of accomplishing the same end. He must find it, and time pressed.

The girl's eyes were free of dust by now. She turned toward the window to adjust her hat by the reflection. Forrester drew his card and a pencil from his pocket and wrote hastily, "I beg you to give my card to whomever you trust most fully and ask him to call upon me."

He approached the girl and made a salutation, offering the envelope.

"Oh, yes," said she. "I dropped it. Thank you very much."

"Will you accept this also?" said he, and gave her the card.

The act had much the appearance of an attempt to make her acquaintance, and she was startled for an instant, but his manner reassured her. She read what he had written, at a glance, and looked up at him, surprised.

"I am very much in earnest," said he. "I regard it as important."

She inclined her head, and he felt that she meant him to understand the scarcely perceptible movement as a promise. He raised his hat again and turned away.

During the evening he gave much thought to the problem which had arisen, or at least seemed to have arisen, from this adventure. There could be little doubt that the girl's father or some other male relative would appear at Forrester's office on the following day. The strangeness of the request would be enough to assure compliance. What should he say about Langdon? If the male relative appeared to be intelligent and a person of character, it might be sufficient to suggest an investigation of Mr. Langdon, promising to assist therein, should that prove necessary.

These and many other questions occupied Forrester's mind as he consumed cigars before the sea coal fire in his bachelor sitting room. A sort of ghost, a most amiable apparition, kept him company the wraith of the girl, so real that he drew up a chair for her, his very best chair that was a considerable extravagance in antique, carven furniture, even for a young man of comfortable means. The girl's ghost seemed to like the chair, in which her beauty showed to great advantage in charming poses. She smiled in the firelight, she talked wittily, wisely, bewitchingly; she sang to him. Altogether it was a delightful evening, and at midnight, when the hour had come for sleep, Forrester stood for some minutes by the window, looking out upon the wildly drifting clouds and gently blessing the gale that propelled them. He said to himself that it had not been an ill wind for him.

"WE ARE AT CROSS PURPOSES, MR. FORRESTER," SAID SHE.

The most important event of next day was the call of the young lady's male relative; that is, it would have been if any such person had called, but none appeared. St. Valentine might be responsible for this; it was a sort of holiday. No such excuse, however, would serve upon the morrow, nor the next day, nor the next.

Forrester was slow to accept the verdict of these days, a petit jury of them, twelve, no less. Hope lingered with him full two weeks, and then it died. He had lost her; he would never see her again, except in the chair by the fire, dear ghost that was by this time very much at home there.

It is impossible, of course, to fall in love with a girl in this way. It was all a pretty fancy, born of loneliness and of a yearning of the heart.

The girl was lost, and yet, of course, there was a tangible clew. There was William E. Langdon, but Forrester could not go to him. He had indeed, in a sort of jealousy, inquired of some who ought to be informed upon the matter whether Langdon was contemplating matrimony. The replies were matter whether Langdon was contemplating nothing worse than robbery. He had organized another spider and fly corporation and was in love with that for the moment.

Meanwhile the young lawyer gave himself more leisure than formerly, walking for an hour or more every pleasant afternoon, but especially when the wind was high. Such days he thought to be lucky, and, in fact, it was upon one of them that fortune favored him and he saw the girl again.

She was entering a house in one of the older and quieter residential sections of the city, a large house upon a corner. It had almost the look of an institution of some kind, and yet had a peculiar air of privacy. The girl must live there, for she let herself in with a key and had the air of returning to a place familiar, if not home.

Forrester walked briskly to the door, which opened before him, and there appeared a species of female butler, too masculine to be a maid, too unfriendly to be a man.

"Well, sir?" said she, and from the hall behind her came a half suppressed giggling, very dreadful to the nerves.

This must be a girls' school. The giggling was hardly mature enough to appertain to a young ladies' seminary.

"Will you give my card," said he, "to the young lady who just came in?"

"Miss Berkeley?"

"Yes."

The female butler eyed him with cold suspicion. She led Forrester to a small reception room, where a woman wearing spectacles sat at a desk, seemingly oblivious of his existence. But there were other persons near at hand who were deeply interested in him. Girls passed through the hall and stole rapid glances at him where he sat in a hard chair near the door. Some of them were lurking on the other side of the partition, and he could hear them whisper.

"That ain't him—I mean he," said one. "This one is too tall."

"Mr. Langdon's tall," said another. "I saw him once with her at the gate of her aunt's house. That's where he calls on her."

"I think it's mean she isn't going to be married here." And that was the last word that Forrester heard.

The female butler returned, bearing a card not engraved with a name, but having this message written upon it by the same hand that had addressed the envelope to Langdon:

Miss Berkeley regrets that she can be of no service to Mr. Forrester. Though she was present on the occasion in question, she saw nothing of the accident and could not testify as to any detail of it.

Forrester read those enigmatical words, and his legal mind detected mischief. He wrote upon the card:

Will Miss Berkeley graciously pardon Mr. Forrester for his insistence and permit him to express his regret that no person representing her has called upon him in response to his request?

It required some diplomacy to induce the female butler to return with the card, but Forrester was equal to the emergency, being now wholly desperate and fighting for heart and conscience. As he expected, the young lady responded in person to his message.

"We are at cross purposes, Mr. Forrester," said she. "We seem not to understand each other."

"The confusion results from the form of my request, written upon my card the day that I had the pleasure of seeing you for the first time," said he. "I asked you to send to me 'whoever you trusted most fully,' and you chose Mr. Langdon. I did not foresee that."

"Well?" said she.

"Mr. Langdon has not done me the honor to call," he returned.

"But surely there is some mistake," said she. "Not being acquainted with you, Mr. Langdon may have called upon some other Mr. Forrester. Whoever it was that he went to see is a lawyer having an office in the Anderson building. He told Mr. Langdon that he recognized me as one who had been present at an accident—a man injured by a street car—and that he desired my evidence, but was afraid I might take offense at a request made upon the street in that way, and might be timid about testifying in court, so he had asked me to send a man to him."

"I have no such case," said Forrester.

"Then Mr. Langdon must have called upon some one else of the same name."

"There is no other Forrester in the Anderson building," said he, "nor any other lawyer of that name in the county. Moreover, Mr. Langdon knows me well and has been my client."

"This seems to raise a question of veracity," said she, "which is not permissable under the circumstances."

"No," he replied; "if you will pardon me, it is a question of error, of very grave and momentous error, which may have the most serious consequences. May I ask whether you have an aunt?"

"I have."

"A widow?"

"Yes."

"And you reside partly at her house and partly here, where you teach?"

"Yes, but why do you ask these questions?"

"Because," said he, "your aunt is the only person who can set this error right. I trust that she can see me at once."

"I do not understand you in the least," she said, "but somehow I can't help believing in you. There is some purpose of good behind your mysteries. I will go with you to my aunt's house."

It was the child's whisper in the hall that had put Forrester upon the track of Grace Berkeley's aunt as her natural guardian and protector. The lady proved to be an amiable and in most respects an intelligent woman, but she was a great admirer of Billy Langdon and had put the bulk of her money into one of the hollowest of his corporations. When Forrester learned of this he knew that the battle was won. It was merely necessary to expose to the lady the true inwardness of the bubble in which her dollars had floated away.

The Langdon-Berkeley wedding was postponed once, and then it was postponed indefinitely when the truth finally found lodgment in the girl's mind that Langdon had lied to her in regard to calling upon Forrester and to many other things besides. Meanwhile Langdon was breathing a fiery vengeance upon Forrester, but in the midst of it the inevitable crash came in his affairs, and he fled "between two days."

And now the ghost girl in the chair by the fire looks so real that she almost obscures the chair back, and her phantom lips have begun to shape words incredibly precious, sweetly prophetic.

The Scrap Book

Too Talkative.

Ole Oleson was a very cautious young man, painfully deliberate in every act and generally lived up to the rule of "look before you leap." But he was also mildly in love.

"WILL YOU MARRY ME?"

It was a beautiful evening, and Ole, who had screwed up courage to take Mary for a ride, was finally carried away by the magic of the night.

"Mary," he asked, "will you marry me?"

"Yes, Ole," she answered softly.

Ole lapsed into a silence that at last became painful to his fiancee.

"Ole," she said desperately, "why don't you say something?"

"Ay tank," Ole replied, "they bane too much said already."

Lend a Hand.

The things that count in the world, my boy,
That make a success of your life,
Are the things that you do to bring others joy
And to quiet the turmoil and strife.

Then stretch out your hand to the weary soul
Who is toiling along life's way
And help him along to the end of the goal.
Time is flying, so do it today.

Lend a hand that is open, a hand that is strong,
A warm hand, a hand filled with love.
As you pass on life's way cheer the faint with a song;
Help them on to the haven above.

—J. Andrew Boyd in National Magazine.

He Was All Right.

The political game was wholly new to William C. L. Ziehn when Harrison, Sears and Harlan fought it out for the mayoralty. He was a patternmaker and lived in the old Fourteenth ward, now the Fifteenth. Mr. Ziehn was persuaded to run for alderman, and he succeeded in defeating George Mugler. This was after he got going. At the outset campaigning was full of surprises to him, and he was naturally a bit suspicious of that which he did not understand.

GLARED AT STRAUSS.

It was arranged to give him a start-off with a meeting. A vacant store was hired and filled with chairs. At the far end of the store a brewery table was stretched across, draped with an American flag, and behind the table was Joe Strauss.

The candidate's entrance was timed so that he should be greeted by a full house, and as he progressed down the aisle Mr. Strauss shouted in welcome:

"What's the matter with Ziehn?"

Mr. Ziehn paused, got red in the face, glared at Strauss and shouted back:

"What the —— is the matter with you?"—Chicago Post.

Didn't Blame Him.

Pete Daily one time was playing in Chicago at the head of his own company. At another theater there was a German comedian being starred in a musical comedy. One afternoon Daily and the German comedian were walking along State street when the former spoke to a man who passed.

"Who was that?" asked the German comedian.

"He's in my support," replied Daily.

"What?" said the German comedian, showing surprise. "Do you speak to the members of your company on the street?"

"To be sure," replied Daily.

"I don't speak to the members of mine."

"Well," said Pete, "I wouldn't either if I had your company."

In and Out.

Soon after Martin W. Littleton was elected to congress he went to Washington and spent several hours watching the senate and house in action. He happened in the senate while a western senator, one of the parties to a filibuster which closed the last regular session, was in the midst of a speech that had no bearing on the case at issue. His sole object was to kill time.

"Great Scott!" said Littleton. "I was never so bored in my life. Why do they allow a man to take up the time of the senate in this manner?"

"Why," whispered a member of the house, "did you not realize that he was drinking steadily between paragraphs?"

"Yes, I saw him drinking water from time to time," replied the New Yorker, "but what effect could that have upon the case?"

"That wasn't water. It might have looked like it from a distance, but it was Scotch highballs he was taking to stimulate himself," was the reply.

"Well," said Littleton, "all I have to say is that what went in was a good deal stronger and better than what came out."—New York World.

IN THE SEWING ROOM.

How to Make the Work Comfortable and Easy.

It must be admitted that our grandmothers knew more about sewing than their granddaughters do. They sat erect in straight backed chairs and stood erect when their work was done and prided themselves on erect carriage. Not so in these days.

It is not conducive to good health to sit in a rocking chair while sewing if the material has to be kept on one's lap. A rocking chair throws the body out of balance by pitching it backward at an unnatural angle. In it the muscles of the front of the body—the muscles of the chest and diaphragm—are contracted, the chest is made hollow, the ribs are pulled down, and the back is rounded.

A chair with a straight back should be used, and the body should be held in the same erect position that the cutting table requires—chin and abdomen in, back straight, chest out. Of course it is necessary when sewing on the lap to bend forward, but the bending should be done from the hips. The back should not be rounded. Sewing at the machine properly conducted is an admirable exercise. Be sure to sit erect, bending only at the hips, and you will find the rapid pedaling will be beneficial as a healthful exercise.

Correct sewing is really governed by a few simple rules, which if followed out make the plying of the needle and thread an exercise which deepens the chest, improves the carriage, strengthens the back and shoulders, clears the complexion and brightens the eyes.

In the first place, the sewing room should be well ventilated. The air in it should be as fresh and pure as the air out of doors. Three operations go on in the sewing room—viz, cutting, the seamstress standing at the table; stitching, seated at a machine; sewing, with the material in the lap. In cutting the manner in which the seamstress bends over the table is everything.

The following exercise taken two or three times a day is a wonderful help toward correct bending at the work table—that is, bending without constricting the chest or abdomen: Stand perfectly erect, with the heels together, the chin and abdomen in, the chest out, the back straight. Slowly filling the lungs with air, raise the arms, held stiff, from the sides outward until the hands meet over the head, and at the time the hands meet the lungs should be filled to their fullest extent with air. Slowly exhaling the air, lower the arms to the sides again.

GOOD FORM.

How to Write Letter Recommending Servant.

The utmost formality should be observed when writing references for servants, because the employers are judged by the writing quite as much as the woman who is the subject of the communication. As a matter of fact, a reference as much as a social letter is based on the old principle that the breeding of a woman is always indicated by her notes.

As a servant's written reference is likely to go into the hands of persons who are total strangers to the writer, it is best to employ the third person in the note. Thus it is made not unlike a circular and wholly impersonal as far as the recipients are concerned. The communication should always begin with the name of the former employer.

For example, a woman who is dismissing a maid may write:

Mrs. John Smith can recommend highly the bearer, Nellie Joyce, as cook or general housekeeper. She is industrious, cheerful, interested in her work and reliable. She is entirely honest.

Mrs. Smith is discharging Nellie only because she is leaving town for the summer and Nellie does not wish to go to the country.

Care should be taken to put into the reference the reason of a maid's leaving, for it is the first question asked of the woman when she is seeking a new place. Another important point in the communication is that the servant's honesty should be vouched for if the former employer believes in it. If she does not consider the woman above suspicion in this particular it is unfair to future employers to assert that she is to be trusted.

It is also wise to include in the written character the fact that the woman is a good worker if she has so proved herself.

For her own protection a person writing a reference should date it not only with the month, but with the year; otherwise, if the woman's character should change as time passes, the person who vouched for her formerly will find herself indorsing an individual as she would not do later perhaps. A date prevents this, for strangers reading a reference need not be influenced by it if it is several years old.

Such communication should always be written in ink.

How to Keep Cranberries.

Some women keep cranberries fresh for a long time by treating in the same way that they do pieplant which they wish to preserve without cooking. Pick out only perfectly sound cranberries and fill fruit jars with them as full as possible. Then fill with cold water and seal. The berries can then be used at any time for sauce, jelly or pies.

How to Freshen Suede Shoes.

It is a good plan to include a piece of emery paper in the household shoe cleaning outfit. When suede shoes have been wet and the nap has become matted down a gentle rubbing with the emery paper will raise it and restore the velvetlike softness of finish.

THE ADAMS SEPARATION

By WINIFRED COWLES

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Mr. and Mrs. Adams, having concluded that marriage is a failure, agreed to separate. Mr. Adams owned the house, but Mrs. Adams owned the homestead in which she had been born, and she decided to go there to live. Perhaps I am not right in including Mr. Adams with his wife in considering matrimony a failure. He was a steady going business man whom nothing appeared to trouble, and whenever he took any action it was not on impulse, but after deliberation.

Mrs. Adams departed on Monday and on Tuesday afternoon returned to her husband's house to procure some articles that she had forgotten.

"Who are you?" she asked of the person who received her.

"The housekeeper."

"Well, I'm Mrs. Adams. I have left some things upstairs in my room that I want."

She brushed past the housekeeper, went upstairs, tried her bedroom door and found it locked. She called to the housekeeper for the key. The housekeeper informed her that Mr. Adams had locked the doors of the rooms he wished kept closed and committed the keys to her charge. She did not feel at liberty to permit any one to enter any of those closed rooms.

"But I am—I mean I have been—the mistress of this house. I wish you to give me the key to my room."

"Not without Mr. Adams' order."

Mrs. Adams was nonplused. She had not considered what it would be to find herself locked out of her own bedroom. Flouncing into the library, she threw off her wraps, unpinned her hat and laid it on a table with an air of one who proposed to settle herself and remain till the crack of doom.

"Will you wait for Mr. Adams to return?" asked the housekeeper deferentially.

"What is that to you?"

"Nothing, but I thought it might be something to you since Mr. Adams told me he wouldn't dine at home today, but at his club, and he will spend the evening there."

"I will dine at home," said Mrs. Adams decisively.

"I have no orders as to a guest at dinner; therefore I have not prepared anything."

"I'll not trouble you to prepare anything. Send Susan to me."

"Mr. Adams has discharged Susan."

"Discharged Susan! I told him to keep Susan."

"I thought you and Mr. Adams had separated."

"Never mind about that. I don't propose to give up my house to your management."

She whisked off to the telephone room and shut the door.

"Give me the Athenaeum club—I mean 4568."

When the club answered Mrs. Adams asked if her husband was there, and on being told that he was she desired that he be called to the phone; his wife desired to speak to him.

This was reported to Mr. Adams in the reading room. He noticed that the words wife and husband had been used instead of Mr. and Mrs. Adams. When he took up the receiver and was asked "Who is this?" he replied:

"Mr Adams."

"I'm your wife," was the reply.

"Oh!"

"I'm at home."

"Your home or mine?"

"Both our homes. I see that I have scarcely left it when you have got in a housekeeper."

"Just so."

"And she has refused me admission to my own room."

"Whose room?"

"My room—mine, mine! Do you hear?"

"Oh!"

"I'm going to stay here till you come home to dinner and let me into my room."

"There isn't any dinner there."

"I shall order one sent in from Blakesley's."

"For one?"

"No; for two."

"Who's the other one?"

"You."

"Oh!"

"Frank, I've come to the conclusion that this separation is all nonsense."

"Nonsense?"

"I'm going to stay just where I am. I wish you to come home at once and discharge this housekeeper. I don't want her in the house."

"Oh!"

"Well, will you come?"

"Of course, if I'm sure of a dinner."

"I'll attend to that."

"Well, I'll be there by 6."

"All right. Goodby."

"Goodby."

When Mr. Adams appeared his wife was somewhat mollified. Indeed, she was quite ready to be very good to him. Her bitterness against the housekeeper, however, remained the same. Mr. Adams greeted his wife as though nothing unusual had happened. He called the housekeeper in and introduced her.

"Miss Ellen Burbank."

"What!"

"My half sister. By the bye, you two have never met, I believe."

"Frank, you have been putting up a job on me."

Adams and Miss Burbank laughed. That ended the Adams separation.

WAS IT THE TRUTH?

"Student" Advised to Take Primer Course in the First Principles of Socialism.

In reply to the Gink who deluded himself into the belief that he is a student, I would like to ask what he has been studying? Certainly not of economics, or of the class of people who compose the Socialist movement. If he had directed his studies in the proper direction, he would have learned that the ignorant and perverted are not attracted to the cause of Socialism. That the grafters, bribers and political shyster are confined to the ranks of the old parties. That the rich suffragette is of no use to the Socialists. That the illiterate are the hardest to convert to Socialism. That society women and men, both real and the codfish variety, are worse than useless to the cause of Socialism. That millionaires andtramps are never active Socialists. That pawn brokers and mortgage sharks are never found in the Socialist ranks.

And had not our self-styled student confined his researches to such sources as the Tribune-Times, the P.I. and the Los Angeles Times, he might have learned that the most honest and intelligent farmers, carpenters, printers, inventors, mine, mill and factory workers, together with the most clear-headed editors and college men are those which compose the back-bone of the Socialist movement. I would advise our student to change his brand of brain food. Try a few doses of the Appeal to Reason; it can't be any worse than what he has been going up against, and there is a bare possibility that it might be just the right thing for what ails him.

He accuses the Socialist party of being an organization of dynamiting, and points to the McNamaras as his proof. Better guess again kiddo, some old-party politician has been stringing you. The McNamara boys are good old Jeffersonian democrats! But you never saw a Socialist foolish enough to blame their acts onto the democratic party, did you?

Heretofore the editor of the Tribune-Times has studiously avoided the word Socialism, he has been so subservient to his capitalistic masters, that he refused to print anything in the interest of the working class, who are the great majority of his readers, even at advertising rates, but the working people of Port Angeles in general, and the Socialists in particular, are jubilant over the fact that we have been able to smoke him out of his hole, and cause him to set up on his little honkers and give public exhibition of his ignorance. And still better to open his columns to others, with no more understanding of Socialism than himself, to tell what they don't know about the Socialists. Come again, Mr. Tribune-Times and Mr. Student; every knock from your source is a boost for Socialism.

TIMELY TOPICS FOR THE RANCHER

By J. L. Stahl, Horticnlturist, Western Washington Experiment Station, Puyallup.

REPAIRING OLD ORCHARD TREES.

Western Washington has many old orchard trees which with a very little care and not much expense can still be preserved a good many years, but given no attention will be entirely worthless in a few years. Trees, like people, have physical deformities and weaknesses, and often need the aid of a surgeon. There are a few men who make a practice of tree surgery; they fill cavities in the trunk and larger limbs, support weak branches, and treat open wounds. Every orchardist or every farmer who grows a few trees can be his own tree surgeon. He can fill large cavities, bridge over girdled trunks or hold a splitting crotch.

FILLING CAVITIES.

The work of treating cavities is still in the experimental stage. The operation depends upon two factors: First, that decayed parts of the cavity be removed and the exposed surface washed with an antiseptic. Second, the cavity when filled must be as nearly air-tight as possible. Any antiseptic such as creosote, corosive sublimate, paint, tar or copper sulphate may be used in washing the cavity. Large cavities are sometimes filled by bricking up the opening on the outside and filling the inside with concrete, the brick serving the purpose of holding the concrete in place. The concrete used is made in the proportion

1 part Portland cement,
2 parts sand,
4 parts crushed stone.

Two parts cinders is sometimes substituted for crushed stone.

If this is properly mixed it can be poured into the cavity from above and no tamping will be necessary. The outside of the filling is coated with a thin layer of concrete, one part cement and two parts sand. Another method of filling is by driving nails on both edges of the bark surrounding the cavity and lacing a wire across the opening to hold the concrete. The fillings of the concrete should come flush with the inner bark of the tree. The swaying of the tree sometimes cracks the cement, leaving a space between the filling and the wood. This can be partially remedied by coating the inside of the cavity with thick tar before filling with concrete.

BRIDGING GIRDLED TREES.

Sometimes the bark is peeled off around the trunk or branch of the tree in the form of a ring. This ring or girdle cuts off the downward flow of food material from leaves to roots and consequently the tree starves to death. It can be often saved, however, by bridge-grafting the wounded part. This is done by trimming smooth the edges of the girdled part and inserting the cions of the same species under the bark in such a way that the wound is bridged. These cions, laced close togeher around the stem, unite the ends with the old trunk, and serve to conduct the elaborate food material from the part above to the part below the wound. Thus the tree can function properly until the wound is healed.

TO HOLD A SPLITTING CROTCH.

A hole is bored through each limb, just above the crotch and a rod with threads on both ends is placed in the holes, the threads extending through the outer side of each limb. A nut and washer is placed on each thread and the connecting rod holds the limbs firmly in place.

Of itself cornmeal served in various forms is not a balanced ration for man, but it is a great heat producer, and if served with beef, beans or eggs it is both cheap and economical.

Many an alarm clock is kept in the house and wound up regularly as a sort of conscience satisfier. That is, the winding of it at night seems to make a justification for oversleeping in the morning.

Buckwheat cakes light and nicely baked and served with crisp bacon or breakfast sausage surely do tickle the palate, but a too steady diet of them is rather tough on the stomach and consequently on one's health. They are best sandwiched in with other rations

Scalding water, fresh air and sunshine are three of the most valuable aids in the maintaining of a clean and healthful environment for and a healthy condition in the farm animals, and they are three aids that many a farmer appreciates to a pitifully meager degree.

Fresh meat is quite too high to be feasible as a ration for the hens, but if one lives in a rabbit country the poultry will greatly relish the rabbit meat. Skin and draw the rabbit and hang up just high enough so the hens will have to jump to reach. The exercise and fresh meat combined should set them to laying if they have been loafing.

The increasing scarcity of fur bearing animals is in no case better shown than in the prices paid for mink pelts now and a few years ago. The same large, dark, prime pelt that was selling fifteen years ago for $1 40 now fetches $7 In the same period prime skunk skins have advanced from 65 cents to $1.75 and muskrat from 11 to 40 cents.

The potato crop for the season past totaled 282,000,000 bushels, and, while this yield was about 12 per cent below the five year average, owing to the higher prices prevailing it netted the growers $213,000,000, which was about 14 per cent above the return for the crop on a five year basis. At present a good many potatoes are being imported and are paying a duty of 25 cents per bushel.

In some sections of the west where homesteaders are settling on the big cattle ranges they seem to have adopted the motto of "free range, free beef," and have been enjoying a toothsome supply of fresh beef by killing steers now and then that happened to stray on their ranches. Naturally the cattlemen object to this procedure and in some instances have appealed to state authorities for protection It was not so very long ago when it was the homesteaders who were the suppliants

There is no condition to be found on the farm that will play greater hob with farm animals in a shorter time than housing them under such conditions that they will not have an abundance of fresh air by night or day. The stable in which cattle or sheep are quartered may be steamy and warm, but the air in such a place may be so bad and so lacking in oxygen as to nearly extinguish a lantern. Fresh air doesn't cost anything, but it's mighty expensive business not giving the farm animals all they want of it.

Modern business inflicts much injustice at times upon those less favorably situated in the economic scale and is also responsible for the practice of much dishonesty of one kind and another, but it has also had some most wholesome influences. Among these is a great curtailment of the drinking of intoxicating liquors among practically all railway employes and the workers in many other industries where employers insist on efficiency and sobriety Many of these same companies have entirely forbidden the use of cigarettes by employes while on duty simply because they take from a man's mental alertness and power of concentration

The chief causes of loss in the operation of many a farm dairy are two—failure to apply the Babcock test for quantity and quality of milk to ascertain which cows are really paying for the keep or making a profit and, secondly, failure to adjust the grain ration of the cows to the amount of milk that they are giving. With cows giving milk containing about 3 per cent of butter fat a good rule is to feed three pounds of grain daily for each five pounds of milk produced. From this it will be seen that in many a dairy herd cows may be fed either more or less grain than they ought to get in both instances to a loss and disadvantage.

A BIG HORSE FEEDING TEST.

Probably the largest experiment in horse feeding ever conducted was the one recently concluded at Fort Riley, Kan., under the supervision of Dr. Campbell, who is connected with the State Agricultural college. Nine hundred and thirty-seven horses were used in the test, and these were divided into fifteen different lots and fed as many different rations. Every meal for every one of these horses was weighed and mixed in the right proportions during a period of 140 days. The purpose of the experiment was to find, if possible, a grain ration that would take the place of oats and give as good results, also to test the feeding value of different hays and to determine the effect of different grain rations upon the health of the horses. When the feeding tests were concluded several things were made clear: First, other feeds can be substituted for oats as a ration for work horses, with as good results and much cheaper. It was proven conclusivelyy that oats alone were a better grain for work horses than corn alone, but more expensive. Horses that were fed oats alone gained on an average sixteen pounds a head, while a like number that were fed corn alone lost twenty-nine pounds apiece in the same time. When corn was fed with the proper amount of alfalfa of the right quality it was found to give just as good results as oats and, besides, was fully 50 per cent cheaper. Alfalfa hay, properly fed, proved to be a more valuable roughage than either timothy or prairie hay and cheapened the cost of the daily ration from 25 to 40 per cent. A ration consisting of six parts of corn, four parts of oats and four parts of bran, together with timothy hay, was rated as the best ration that could be given a horse, though not the cheapest. An old idea was exploded in the experiment—namely, that horses fed oats have more life than those given a ration of corn.

A SCHOOL OF HORTICULTURE.

As a result of co-operation on the part of the business men of Lewiston, Ida., and Clarkston, Wash., a school of horticulture has been established at Livingston that will be quite unique in its scope and purpose. Instead of furnishing instruction pramirily to young people, as is so largely true of the average agricultural college, the school in question will be attended most largely by owners of fruit ranches in the vicinity and their wives and daughters. Among the subjects studied will be fruit growing, nursery practice, the growing of small fruits and vegetables, insects and their treatment, plant diseases and other subjects arising from the agricultural conditions to be found in the valley, also soil physics and soil chemistry. The business men of the two cities came to the conclusion that the fruit industry of the valley was retarded because of a lack of trained men, and the school just established has definitely in view correcting this difficulty. That a high grade of instruction will be given is indicated in the choice of Professor Thornber, previously in charge of the horticultural departments of the South Dakota and Washington state agricultural colleges. Lectures will be given in the forenoons of five days in the week, while the laboratory work will be largely done in the nearby orchards. Professor Thornber believes there is a real need for the school and is enthusiastic about its future.

SENSIBLE MONTANA.

Beginning with Jan 1 the good people of Montana will be able to know a bit about the pedigree of the eggs they have for breakfast. At that date regulations became effective relative to the sale of eggs, which state authorities say will be strictly enforced. Under the regulations eggs will be classified as fresh eggs, ranch eggs and case eggs. Eggs offered for sale as fresh that are more than seven days old will be considered misbranded. Ranch eggs are those that have not been preserved or the age of which is unknown. All eggs that have been kept in cold storage or that have been preserved in any way are known as case eggs, and the containers of such eggs must have plainly marked thereon in letters not less than two inches high the month and the year in which the eggs were placed in storage. Any eggs of the above class not plainly labeled are considered misbranded. The law imposes heavy penalties for violation and makes it incumbent upon both the merchant and eating house proprietor to specify plainly the class to which eggs he sells belong.

CORN IN LOUISIANA.

A very interesting change that is going on in those portions of the south where cotton has been the staple crop for generations past is clearly shown in the rapid increase in the production of corn in the state of Louisiana during the past few years. A few years ago the cotton boll weevil made its appearance in the state, and cotton growers seemed to be threatened with bankruptcy. But being compelled to devote cotton land to the growing of corn and other crops has really been a blessing in disguise. Figures that have been compiled show that the production of corn has increased from 19,516,499 bushels in 1905 to nearly 100,000,000 bushels in 1911. In the year 1910 Louisiana corn was sold to Europe and Texas for the first time, and the surplus for the past year has been close to 50,000,000 bushels.

Notes from the High School

The list of words for the Jefferson-Clallam Counties spelling contests is going to contribute not a ilttle toward making the pupils of the two counties better spellers. The words are well selected for drill purposes and are so used by many of the teachers of the city schools.

Prof. C. L. Clark of the Universcity of Washington will speak before the Brotherhood of the Congregational Church Friday evening, Feb. 23rd, on a subject of interest to the schools, "Playgrounds and Public Recreations." At this time, when the school board is planning to enlarge the grounds and put up a new building, Prof. Clark's speech may be of special interest.

The following pupils were neither tardy nor absent during the first semester of this year: Charles Lonsdale, William Stovel, Bernard Schweitzer, Irwin Sins, Dorothy Brown, Augusta McBurney, Janette McBurney, Willie White, Esther Wilson, Alice McKee, Claud Perkins, Della Perkins, Emma Stahl, Russel McKechnie, Anna Albertson, Ethel Getchel, Willie Gould, Stewart Brown, Charles Hansen, Albert Layman, Robert Smith, Edward Thompson, Lena Flack, Ethel Geist, Eugene Buckner, Stella Cloukee, Bessie Cloukee, Jack Hansen, Willmer Andresen, Ruth Madison, Mayme Phillips, Joseph Roberson, Marion Woodcock, Harvard Stovel, Edgar Stahl.

The Basket Ball game, Auburn vs. Angeles High School, last Saturday evening, proved an easy victory for the Angeles boys. This is Auburn's first year of basket ball and the boys were lacking in the experience that time alone can give. They will no doubt show up in championship form next time we meet them. The heavy shower just before the game reduced the receipts to such an extent that the boys are out $25 on the game. In consequence of this shortage we have called off the game scheduled with Kent. The next game will be played Feb. 24th, Port Townsend vs. Angeles High Schools.

Mrs. Waite and Mrs. Clark, representatives of the W. C. T. U. movement in this state, visited the schools Monday and Tuesday and addressed the pupils on various subjects connected with the work of the W. C T. U. Their talks to students were very interesting and instructive.

Mr. Douglas of the American Book Company and Mr. Phebus representing D. C. Heath & Co. were callers Tuesday of this week.

Miss Addie Thomas, who has been unable to meet her classes during the past four weeks on account of sickness, is rapidly improving and is expected to take charge of the work in the primary room in a short time.

The work on the Tum-Tum, the High School Annual, is progressing rapidly. James Lotzgasell, the business manager, reports favorable outlook for collecting the necessary funds.

The Philomathea Literary will give a public program on March 15th, providing the opera house can be secured for that date.

The entertainment given last Monday night by Prof. Herbsman of the University proved a treat to students of literature who appreciate the work of so skilled an interpreter. While Prof. Herbsman's work throughout was high class in character, his interpretation of Kipling was especially strong. Prof. Herbsman is a man popular with his audiences. His pleasant appearance and optimistic tone and general effect of "a good fellow" contributes not a little toward his success.

During the past few months the students of Central school have had a little experience in self government with marked success. One of the boys is on duty every day from 8:30 to 4 p. m. and has one deputy whom he may call in to asssist him if necessary. This student acts as policeman for the day and has the power to arrest any offender and bring him before the proper officer for a hearing. If the one accused pleads "not guilty" he is given a trial by jury and from the verdict to this trial there is no appeal. Up to date only one trial has been necessary. The verdict in that case was "guilty." Supt. Geisness acts as judge and Fred Westcott as clerk of court. At the last trial the following appeared as attorneys: Prosecution: James Lotzgesell, Herman Swanson. Defense: Duane Allen, Ross McKechnie.

The principal of Fourth ward school, Miss Jean Wilson, is now instituting the same system there. From the verdict of the courts of the ward schools an appeal lies to the supreme court at Central

NEWS GOSSIP OF THE STATE

Is the Attorney General Evading His Responsibilities? Must Trusts Be Spared While We Pay?

The $270 in the powder fund of the state industrial insurance commission has been exhausted some time, having been paid out in $10 driblets, on the claims for damages arising out of the powder mill disaster at Chehalis None of the assessments levied against the powder concerns doing business in this state to make up the deficiency has been paid The Chehalis claimants are waiting for the money supposed to be guaranteed under the law. Meanwhile the Du Pont de Nemours Powder Company, the big national trust, refuses absolutely to contribute to the fund. There is considerable mystery about Attorney General Tanners' reluctance to bring suit against the Powder Trust. He has made no move in that direction. The big Du Pont concern is amply able to take its share of the burden and could be forced to do so, if the law is any good. Yet the Attorney General has done nothing toward haling the trust into court. Not only the Chehalis claimants, but the people generally, are begining to wonder why.

To protect the unwary investor from fraudulent land companies, Chair Lee of the Public Service Commission suggests that the board be given supervision over companies that make a business peddling stocks and bonds. The need of such supervision grows out of the recent failure of a company capitalized at $5,000,000 which purported to be planting orchards on an extensive scale. Such glowing promises were made that many persons in this and the states invested their savings. All seemed to have been swept away, as the failure developed practically no assets. This collapse will tend to discredit legitimate orchard enterprises and make it hard to interest capital.

At the recent meeting of the North Pacific Coast Passenger Association in Seattle, it was announced on behalf of the Milwaukee Railroad that two large tourist hotels are to be built on the West Side this year. One will be in the Mt. Rainier National Park and the other somewhere on Puget Sound. The Milwaukee is planning to exploit the tourist attractions of the Pacific Northwest on a large scale. The Hotels will be erected to afford accommodations, such as tourists demand. The publicity to be given them will help to attract attention to many other features, which this part of the country boasts.

Bearing fruit trees are said to exhaust the fertility of the soil with marked rapidity. The New York experiment station has been making observations along this line and comes to the conclusion that the use of fertilizers in orchards is essential. Heretofore, the soil of the Pacific Northwest has been regarded so rich that no treatments have been considered necessary. But of late the State College has been investigating conditions in various parts of Washington. Experiments are now being conducted with the use of nitrates and it is believed that most satisfactory results will be obtained. The growers of Southwest Washington are particularly interested in these investigations.

O'BRIEN MAKES REPLY

I would like to make a reply to the Tribune-Times editorial, Who among you would be willing to take the chances. He takes a column and a half to criticise the Socialists. I wish to say, he is ignorant of the Socialist philosophy; or else he is a demagogue or tool of a class that wishes to dominate society, and with such it is useless to try and argue. Lying statements and stereotyped articles do not chang causes or effects.

Of all the names he mentioned in his editorial, that of Lincoln is the greatest, a man who was of and for the people, and were he alive today, I think he would be ashamed of his party. Many of Lincoln's predictions are coming through today. He said not in these words but to the effect, that capitalism would kill this republic; he said you could fool all the people part of the time, but you could not fool all the people all the time.

Now this system, as Lincoln predicted, has the seed of its own destruction in it and it is only a question of a few years when an enlightened people, seeing the falacies and rottenness of an unjust system, will abolish it as they have other abuses of the past. You may hang the leaders of the Socialist movement. It will only hasten the downfall of the corrupt and unjust system. John Brown, the fanatic, was hung for his Harper's Ferry act, and in three years the republic was in the throes of revolution.

Men who would scorn to read Socialist literature in the past, who would trample it under foot today are begging for it. Every failure under this system is a boost for Socialism. The question of who among us are willing for a chance is absurd. Nine tenths of the people want it. But who among you is willing to take chances under this system. Where, oh where, is confidence gone? Bring her back, says the republican, or we are doomed. Watch the Socialist band wagon in this year 1912; don't let it run over you.

D. O'Brien.

SOCIALISM IN SONG

Workers of the World unite
And help us in this awful fight,
And if we do not win the battle
There will be some despondent cattle.

And if we cannot do them good
Then we should do the best we could;
We'd do our best to do them right
As soon as we can all unite.

We used to be so very small
That we were hardly seen at all,
But now we've grown to quite a man
And see us now, I guess you can.

The corporations great and strong,
They will not join us in our song;
But we will show them, never fear,
How we will grow this very year.

Mr. Taft and Teddie now,
Their against us in this row,
But when we've fought this battle o'er
They'll be with us for ever more.

And if you're on the other side
Keep your eyes open good and wide.
And if we cannot bring them around
We'll think their judgment is not sound.

Now I will wish you all good night
Because this is not my fight,
But should you need another hand
Why then I think I'd join your band.

Alden Goodwin.

PLAYERS MUST KEEP SOBER

The following statement by Connie Mack, manager of the American League baseball club of Philadelphia, the "Athletics," which last season won the largest percentage of games in the American League, is of special interest. It is taken from a personal letter to the secretary of the Scientific Temperance Federation replying to an inquiry as to the customs or requirements concerning drink among baseball players.

"There has been a great change in baseball during the past fifteen years. This has been due in a great measure to the class of men who are now making up baseball teams. In former years players did not receive very high salaries, and naturally we did not get the class of players whom we are getting today, as the salaries are now very high, and we have in our profession. I might say fully 50 per cent of college players. The balance of our players, with a very few exceptions, are well educated men. Alcoholism is practically eliminated from baseball. For instance, I have twenty-five players. Of that number, fifteen don't know the taste of liquors. The few remaining may possibly, after a game of ball take a glass of beer They do not make a practice of this. Neither do we restrict them from doing so if they desire. They know that we do not approve of their drinking, and the positions that they hold, and the salary that they receive keep them from any such thought as becoming accustomed to drink. I often get into an argument caused by remarks that such and such a player had been seen taking a glass of beer. There is no class of professional men that is watched so closely as the baseball players. If seen taking a drink a rumor is immediately started that the player was seen drunk last night This travels very swiftly and is a great injustice to the player, who would notunder any circumstances take the second drink. I have had so many arguments that I usually put the matter in this way: Take twenty-five from the baseball profession and the same number from any bank or brokerage house, and you will find that the percentage using intoxicating liquors is far greater with the latter. I actually believe that in five years from this date at least 90 per cent of the players will be strictly temperate." – Sunday School Times.

GYPSY SMITH'S RETORT

Two saloon-keepers came into a train where Gypsy Smith, the evangelist, was sitting waiting for the train to start. The two saloon-men monopolized all the conversation. Gypsy Smith was hidden behind his newspaper, but he heard them. By and by one of the men said: "Mr. Smith, we know you, and we want to say to you that unless you evangelists an ministers stop your knocking at the liquor business, we liquor men will have to go to the poor house."

"All right," said Gypsy Smith, "when you go in all the rest of the inmates can come out." – Exchange.

DRINKING UP A FARM

My homeless friend, while you are swallowing your glass of gin let me give you a fact to wash down with it. You say you have longed for years for the independant life of a farmer but have never been able to get enough money together to buy a farm. But this is just where you are mistaken. For several years you have been drinking a good farm at the rate of one hundred square feet a gulp. If you doubt this statement figure it out for yourself. An acre of land contains 43,560 square feet. Estimating for convenience, the land at $43.56 per acre you will see that this brings the land just one mill per square foot, one cent for ten square feet. Now pour down that fiery dose and just imagine you are swallowing a strawberry patch. Call in five of your friends to have them help you gulp down that five hundred foot garden. Get on a prolonged spree some day, and see how long it will take you to swallow a pasture large enough to feed a cow. Put down that glass of gin! there's dirt in it—one hundred square feet of good, rich dirt worth $43.56 per acre.—Northern Messenger.

THE WADE-CLARK MEETINGS.

Mrs. Mary M. Wade, State officer of the Western Washington W. C. T. U., and the National and State Superintendent of Franchise and Civic House-keeping, Mrs. Clark, both of Seattle, arrived here last Friday, each in interest of their line of work. Saturday afternoon Mrs. Clark addressed the ladies of Port Angeles at the Commercial Club room on laws concerning women. Mrs. Clark is a very intelligent speaker.

Sunday morning, at the Congregational church, Mrs. Clark preached a fine sermon. Mrs. Wade assisted at the Methodist Sunday school and gave a talk. In the evening Mrs. Clark preached in the M. E. church and at the close of the sermon Mrs. Wade gave a splendid recitation. There was special music at both of these services.

Monday and Tuesday was spent visiting the schools Wednesday was institute day all day. In the evening Mrs. Clark gave a splendid lecture, assisted by Mrs. Wade, Miss Gilmore sang a solo, which was enjoyed by all. On Thursday the members of the local Union tendered a reception at the home of Mrs. D. B. Merrill in honor of the two visiting ladies. There was a large attendance and all enjoyed a very pleasant social time. After a very interesting program was given, delicious refreshments were served.

This evening there will be a prize contest given in the Cong'l church. There will be special music for the occasion, to which all are invited.

The order of the Knights of Pythias of Ostrander, Ohio, composed of the most influential men of the community, unanimously declared in regular session that not one of its members would sign a wet petition nor vote the wet ticket at the county election.

"If sobriety is good for the individual it is also good for the whole community. We can never have a sober country with open saloons doing business along the main streets of our lands."

It is inconceivable to me that any man who loves his country, and especially any Christain man, can do other at this time than support, with all the force of his being, any measure which will help to deliver us from the almost immeasurable evil of the drink traffic —Rev. G. Campbell Morgan.

Social Dance at Myrtle

A very nice social and dance was given in the old school house at Dry Creek, Saturday the 10th, in honor of the purchase of a new piano by Mr. Will Eacrett. Prof. Lange and Parks rendered the best music that the Dry Creek folks ever had for dancing. Mr. Eacrett left the piano in the school house for the dance and danceing was indulged in till midnight, when the ladies brought forth a very fine lunch. After lunch the folks had the pleasure of listening to two very nice violin solos by Mr. Parks. There were about fifty present, and at the hour of three o'clock all went home saying that they had the best time and it couldn't be beaten. "Oh, That River Shannon" can't be beat.

One there from town.

On Thursday evening, February 8th, Port Angeles Lodge No. 869 of the Fraternal Brotherhood held an open meeting. A social evening was spent, consisting of games and dancing, after which refreshments were served. All seemed to have a pleasant time.

New Life Injected into Railroad Deal

A. R. Coleman of Townsend was called and stated that he had personally investigated this matter and had the absolute statements of parties who know and who would not misrepresent that the Milwaukee railroad is behind the movement, and he was satisfied the parties in charge were acting in absolute good faith.

T. T. Aldwell reviewed the electric proposition and the stepping aside for this deal, and stated in positive language that he is now thoroughly convinced that this road is going to be built. Mr. Witherspoon is ready and anxious that matters should progress rapidly. Have letters from Mr. Earles which show that difficulty with Merrill-Ring people is satisfactorily settled. Mr. Aldwell named the amounts he and Mr. Glines and his firm will give, $7,000 in all, and added if we get together in that spirit, get enthused and get the right-of-way, he was satisfied on schedule time we would see big construction crews at work.

Mr. Jenecke of the A. B. Co., stated that "when the time comes we will do our share."

Mr. T. Trumbull was introduced as an enthusiast, and he declared he was enthusiastic, as we have passed the speculative point. Every man who has taken the trouble to investigate the present status of this railroad company is certain of the good faith shown and became enthusiastic. When a man like Mr. Aldwell, with interests that prevent him taking any chances, investigates and reports as he has, we should ask nothing further. Mr. Earles is another man to whom this means much. He says this proposition is so good "that I am going to let them use my name at the head of the movement." It is now up to us to accept the judgment of these men and do our part. The building of this road does not concern alone the man living along the right of way, it concerns every inhabitant of this county, and each should do his part.

At the evening session like talks were made by President Seevers, Treasurer Christensen, Mr. Trumbull, Mr. Dellabarre and others.

Some $5825.00, in notes, were signed up in a few minutes, and since the meeting some $3,000 additional has been signed, making a total to date of nearly $27,000. The finance committee met again last night to arrange for a definite and systematic plan of action.

The commercial clubs in the principal cities all along the line, have already signified their intention to entertain the excursionists.

Mrs. Mary McKee was hostess to the W. L. C. Feb. 9th. The program was filled by Mrs. Lucetta Harding reading, "Letting the Sunshine In," Mrs. Nina Hall, "Mutual House Cleaning," and Mrs. Ora Hickok, "A Legend of the Holy Grail."

Mrs. Geo. Burdick, a new member, was welcomed. Fifteen members present.

THE SOCIALIST LECTURES

Mrs. O'Hara, Most Eloquent Socialist Lecturer in Country, to Be Here the 26th.

The last lecture of the course given by the Socialist Lyceum Bureau, was delivered Monday evening to a crowded house at Haning Hall, a previous engagement for the opera house making it impossible for them to have it that evening. Geo. H. Goble, a platform speaker of many years experience, spoke on the subject "Socialists at Work." He was the most humorous of all the speakers and had his audience convulsed with laughter from start to finish; at the same time convincing them of the seriousness of the problem now confronting all the working people of this country, yes, and of the world. He stated that as other political parties had had an opportunity to hold the reins of the government, it was only justice to give the Socialist a chance. He felt confident conditions could be no worse, but sincerely believed they could be greatly improved He is a man who has traveled all over the world making a study of the conditions of the working class and knew whereof he spoke. His original, humorous manner of presenting the question in hand made a great impression upon the audience, who were not only instructed but highly entertained.

For Monday evening, February 26th, the Socialists have secured the services of Mrs. O'Hara, the most eloquent Socialist lecturer in this country, who will speak in the opera house.

Mr. Geo. Hazzard of Tacoma, an old line Democrat, for many years connected with the Democratic State Committee, is in the city.

JULIUS HERBSMAN

Julius Herbsman, a dramatic entertainer, appeared at the opera house Monday evening as the last number of the Entertainment Course. Those who attended were most happily entertained and spent an evening they will not soon forget. Most of his readings were from Whitcom Riley and Rudyard Kipling and his impersonations of the peculiar characters which are so widely different in the writings of these two poets was excellent.

It is hard for an intelligent person to understand why an entertainment of such a character will draw a small house while a common traveling stock company composed of actors of most ordinary ability will have a crowded house every time. It certainly does not speak well for either the intellectual or literary appreciation of our people.

THE READING CLUB

The Port Angeles Reading Club was delightfully entertained with a musical program last Friday afternoon given by Mrs. Stoval and Miss Gilmore at the home of the former. Fifteen members were in attendance, with Mrs. Herman Wolf, Mrs Frederick Hyde, and Mrs. L. Luppen as guests of the club. A musical contest and several original conundrums were very much enjoyed, especially the one that closed the program "I Scream" with accompaniment.

A motion was made and carried unanimously that this club would donate their library as a nucleus for a public library provided the starting of such was undertaken by the Woman's Auxiliary.

DAVID W. CRAIG

Part of Discourse Delivered by William B. Ritchie at the Funeral of David W. Craig, Saturday, February 3rd, 1912.

Friends, as I stand before you a feeling of sadness mingled with gladness comes over me. Sadness because I am here with you to pay my last tribute of respect to all that remains of one whom we knew so well, and whose noble friendship many of us enjoyed. Gladness because it is given to me to speak concerning the exalted qualities of the departed.

On the first day of February, 1912, at the hour of 12 a. m., Brother David W. Craig, tired of the unequal struggle against disease and affliction, breathed his last, and quietly took his departure to a better world For him, friends, life's voyage is over, with all its tossings and its storms, its pleasures and its disappointments; he has crossed the bar and entered that haven of rest that lies beyond the valley of the shadow of death, to be seen of men no more. And in his passing this city has lost a valued and respected citizen, and many of us a loyal and steadfast friend. To those who knew him my words are not needed, but because there are some here who knew him not, I briefly weave this eulogy

David W. Craig was a man of broad gauge principles; a man of high ideals; a man who believed in God, and in the ultimate salvation of the human race. The talents he had, he used to the very best advantage, and he has left behind him a life that we can all appreciate, and those of us who knew him best can dwell upon with comfort and profit.

For over sixty-two years and nine months, Brother David W. Craig played a part on the stage of human existence, but he has appeared on that stage for the last time, and in taking his departure he has left his family a living legacy of love, for they know it is well with him, that he has found peace, and that his rest is blessed.

To Brother Craig the change called death had no terrors; to him it was the door which opens in to a new and more perfect existence, a triumphal arch through which man's immortal spirit passes the moment it takes its farewell of the body in which it had formerly dwelt. As a firm believer in the immortality of the soul he looked upon death as the local or final development of a succession of specific changes in the corporeal organism of man. He believed that as the death of the germ is necessary to the birth of the flower, so is man's physical death an indispensable precedent to his spiritual birth or resurrection. As night and sleep correspond to phisical death, so the brilliant day and human wakefulness correspond to the spiritual birth and individual elevation.

Like the butterfly when it escapes from its gross and rudimental body and wings its way to sunny bowers and is sensible of its new existence, so may it be with the spirit of our departed Brother; may he to be conscious of a new and more harmonious life, free from those bodily ills with which he was so long afflicted, and from which he suffered so intensely.

In conclusion friends, I desire to impress upon you, that which our departed Brother would tell you if he were here in person, that there is nothing to fear, but much to love, in a purely natural death, for that which we call death is the fair stranger which conducts the immortal soul to more glorious scenes, and more harmonious societies. We should never lament because of the mere departure of one of our number from earth, for the change, though cold and cheerless to the material senses, is, to the interior vision, and to the ascending spirit, a thing of beauty, bathed in auroral splendor. The voices that come from the spirit world today, sound to the inhabitants of the earth like the revelations of fancy, but the time is not far distant, nay it is now dawning on the world, when man shall hear these voices and shall comprehend the mighty truths their tones impart. And then when the hour of so-called death arrives, the chamber of the departed will not resound with sighs and lamentations, but will echo to the soothing strains of sweet music, and there will be no more mournful and wordy prayers, and tearful discourse, but a quiet and holy passover.

WOODMEN RAISE RATES

Modern Woodmen Increase Insurance 50 to 100 per cent.

Dispatches received a few days ago from the adjourned meeting of the M. W. A. which convened for the purpose of trying to adjust rates, state that the advocates of the revision upwards were victorious in the balloting on the proposition. The vote was 460 for higher rates against 307 opposing the proposition.

The plan increases the insurance rate in the society from 50 to 100 per cent and provides for twelve assessments each year; members have been heretofore contributing for nine to eleven assessments each year.

The rates of members under the age of 54 will be increased from 50 to 100 per cent. The new bill provides that the insurance rates of those over 54 years shall be limited to $3 a month for each thousand dollars.

This seems like a very decided and radical change, and may have the effect of losing some members; but we have little doubt that more would have been lost when double header assessments began coming in as they inevitably would under the present rates.

Some very good comments are made on the rate question by the Chicago Inter-Ocean, which we think worth repeating.

"Now, it is particularly unpleasant to all of us to have the price advanced on something we have been buying regularly. It is particularly unpleasant when we have been under the impression that the price we have been paying is ample. It is human nature to resent such news, and when any large number of men are thus vexed and angered there are always among them those who will seek place, profit or power for themselves by playing upon the anger of their fellows and by goading them to acts of resentment and revenge and destruction

"Such feelings and acts rarely do any good any where, and in the case of the readjustment of the Modern Woodmen rates and raising to a point that will enable the society to perform its promises they can accomplish nothing but harm.

"It is unpleasant for the members of the Modern Woodmen society to have to pay more for their insurance. But let them think how much more unpleasant it would be for those 5,000,000 women and children, or any of them, to be deprived of that protection because their fathers and husbands got angry?"—Sedro-Wooley Courier.

O'BRIEN'S RECORD IN COUNCIL

Editor Olympic-Leader:— Permit me through the columns of your paper to make a short reply to editorials in the Tribune-Times. He takes a rap at me as councilman. Nothing would give me more pleasure than to express my views on municipal matters, and having varied experience in a multitude of divers positions in life, as laborer and student, feel that I am somewhat qualified to act in that capacity. My record as a citizen and councilman is an open book and I have no apologies to offer. I am willing to stand or fall by them. Empty honors have no charms for me. Results are my forte. Whenever a majority of my constituents, whom I have the distinguished honor to represent, think that some other man can advance their interests honestly, not by farce, better than I, my resignation will be at their service immediately.

The editor of the Tribune-Times may think he has more brains than a majority of citizens. I do not.

I have voted against measures that later were reversed, time and again, and if six members of the council voted for a measure that I thought wrong, I have the manhood and moral courage to vote against it. If I do not understand a measure brought up, or have any doubt about it, I usually refrain from voting. I will not allow the people to be skinned if I can help it.

D. O'BRIEN,
Socialist Councilman 6th Ward.

The cutters of the great glove houses in Brussels and in France earn even higher wages than the cutters of the most fashionable tailors in London and New York. So difficult is this art of cutting that most of the principal cutters are known to the trade by name and by fame, and the peculiar knives which they use in the business are so highly prized that they are handed down from generation to generation as heirlooms.

Too Smart.

"It does not always pay to be too smart," said a lawyer. "At our boarding house a new waitress was employed, and a young chap asked her what he should call her.

"'Call me Pearl,' she said.

"'Are you the pearl of great price?' he asked.

"'No,' answered the girl. 'I guess I am the pearl that was cast before swine.'"—New York Times.

Meant What He Said.

Singleton—You are a little previous, dear boy; I'm not to be married until tomorrow.

Wedderly—I know it, and you heard what I said.
