Carl Beck, Vice Pissident of National Small Business Association (NSBA), points out that present parcel post regula-tions not only discriminate but also cause confusion. "Take Boy-Ar-Dee Lasagne Dinner - 24 oz. 69¢ a person in Chicago that wants to mail two packages, both weighing 30 pounds, to people served by first class post offices. He may be able to mail one parcel but not the other." weighing 30 pounds, to people served by first class post offices. He may be able to mail one parcel but not the other."

"This may seem ridiculous," Beek says, "but it is the current law. Between first class post offices. This would double the present limits of nuce parcel post for packages the package spot offices more than 150 miles. If the distance is more than 150 miles, then the parcel cannot weigh more than 20 pounds."

According to Beck, National Small Business Association, headquartered in Washington, D.C., has long been on record urging realistic changes in parcel post regulations.

"Here the business man and the citizen are in the same predicament when confronted with the 150 mile limitation," Beck says. "The consumer must choose between using a shipping service which costs much more or splitting his package into smaller parcels. The businessman has the same choice, but if he splits his order, he does it with a prayer that all cartons arrive on the same date so his customer will not think he has been shorted."
