Doesn't beer get better

Yes and no. All beer goes through a carefully controlled aging process at the brewery. But, once beer is bottled, canned or kegged, the aging stops.

The aging of young beer lasts several weeks at any good brewery. This mellows the beer, allows it to form a proper head when poured, and gives it smoothness. A very few breweries . . . of which Olympia is one...put their product through a second aging called Kraeusening (Kroy-zen-ing). This lasts an extra five weeks and requires extra aging tanks. (You can see why many breweries have abandoned the process.) But at Olympia we know that Kraeusening is essential to the particular taste and character of our beer.

Careful brewing, extra aging, and the famous natural artesian brewing water of Tumwater give Olympia a taste all its own. Once packaged, Olympia Beer is hurried to stores and taverns throughout the West, where that taste makes it one of the fastest selling beers. Have an Oly soon, and see why.
