government guaranteed annual income

Spending by the federal government, on the scale now contemplated. must inevitably lead to either a crushing tax burden or to continuing inflation and depreciating money at a rate that will of itself stimulate the worst kind of disorder. Attemping to buy peace and tranquility by bigger government spending is a dubious course at best. If it is followed by the logical corollary of more inflation, the fallacy of trying to spend our way out of trouble will become all too clearly apparent.
